Most of us never even realized there are boy cabbages and girl cabbages, and — as Betty Curran (our indefatigable Washington correspondent) was first to point out — it poses so many intriguing questions. She wonders, does a passionate cabbage taste better than an indifferent one? And only think, the next time you eat cabbage, you may be eating a mother.

THINK TOO: this presumably holds for all the rest of the vegetable kingdom. He-beans and She-beans, Herbs and Hebs. And it is wise to keep Hot Peppers and Sweet Peppers in the same vegetable compartment. And what do you suppose the jolly green giant's been up to lately?

Well, I think we can safely leave the whole area for the novellists to explore. They need a fresh field, and here it is. Well-planted.

I can hardly wait, myself, to find out what goes on in those asparagus beds. I'll bet the boys find some juicy stuff in the tomato patch, too.

Schlegel Submits Autobiography

Dr. Dorothy B. Schlegel, professor of English and comparative literature at Longwood College, has been invited to submit her biography for inclusion in the third edition of the Dictionary of International Biography, to be published in London in September. Dr. Schlegel has read papers at two international conferences, the First International Conference on the Enlightenment at Geneva, July 1963 and the Fourth Conference of the International Comparative Literature Association at Fribourg, Switzerland, August 1964. The first paper, "Diderot as the Transmitter of Shaftesbury's Romanticism," was published in Geneva in 1963, and the second, "Shaftesbury's Hermeneutic Symbolism," will be issued at The Hague in May. Her book on Shaftesbury and the French Deists was published by the University of North Carolina Press in 1959.

Dr. Schlegel's biography is also included in the current edition of Who's Who among American Women and the Directory of American Scholars. In addition to her international scholarship, Dr. Schlegel has written two articles on James Branch Cabell and a textbook, Writing from Research, used in the freshman English course at Longwood. She has also served as a consultant at the 1964 and the 1965 meetings of the College Conference on Communication and Composition.

Two LC Students Present Recitals

On February 27, 1966, at 4:00 in the Small Auditorium, the Longwood College Music Department will present Miss Gail Milstead, soprano, in a senior recital. Gail, a voice major from Crew, Virginia, is very active in the Longwood Music Department, being treasurer of Sigma Alpha Iota, President and accompanist for the Concert Choir and a member of the Madrigal Singers.

Christine Mannina will accompany Gail. Her program will include Frasellebe und Leber by Robert Schumann. This cycle of German songs tells the story of a woman's life — her love, her family and the agony that she suffers when her husband dies. Next, Gail will sing "O mio babbino caro" from their opera Gianni Schicchi by Puccini. Also on the program are three French songs by Ravel — "Nocturne," "Trois brèves alexandres du paradis," and "Ronde." Gail's final number will be a contemporary piece, "I Hate Music" by Leonard Bernstein.

Juniors Await Big Week-End; Second Annual Ring Dance

By Phyllis Hummer

After much planning, countless meetings, and much expectation, the Junior Class awaits its big weekend as the Class of 1967, on Saturday, February 26. Highlighting the weekend, Otis Redding and Show will be featured at a concert from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday afternoon in Jarman Hall. The Second Annual Ring Dance will be held Saturday evening from 8 p.m. to 12 midnight in the Senior Dining Hall. This dance will feature "The Rhondels," one of the most well-known and diversified dance bands in this area. The long-awaited weekend will end with a breakfast for the Juniors and their dates.

Otis Redding and Show will present a two-hour concert Saturday afternoon. Twenty-five-year-old Otis is currently riding the top tune charts with a two-sided hit, "I Can't Turn You Loose" and "Just One More Day."

The performer, who has been well-known in rhythm-and-blues circles since 1961 when he had his first hit with "These Arms of Mine," has gained more widespread fame in the past year because of his popularity among the British artists. Otis has just as much admiration for the British groups and recently included the Rolling Stone's smash "Satisfaction," in his album, "Otis Blue — Otis Redding Sings Soul."

When recording, Otis prefers doing ballads, but explains that to keep his audience and fans, he must mix his songs up.

Two-hundred and fifteen-pound Otis was born in Mazon, Ga. When not performing, he returns to his birthplace where he has a 280-acre ranch.

His biggest hit was his first — "These Arms of Mine." Since then he has had hits with "Pain in My Heart," "Come to Me," "Security," "Chained and Bound," "Mr. Pitiful," "I've Been Loving You Too Long," and "Respect," all on the Volt label. His favorite is his latest, "I Can't Turn You Loose."

The Junior Ring Dance will highlight the weekend's activities at 8 p.m. Saturday evening in the Senior Dining Hall. This is the Second Annual Junior Ring Dance to be held at Longwood. The Ring Dance is a renovation of the old Cotton dances formerly held at Longwood. Although the Juniors received their class rings on February 17, they will not officially receive them until Saturday night when they perform the ring figure, receiving their rings from their escorts. "The Rhondels" will provide the music for the evening. They are one of the swiftest rock 'n' roll bands on the east coast, and also one of the best small orchestral dance bands in the state of Virginia. This group is officially known as "Bill Deal and The Rhondels," and is probably best known as the regular band at the "Top Hat" at Virginia Beach. However, their talents vary widely. They have appeared as a backup band for many of the top names in show business, they have had two records which were both moderate hits, and they have played at every occasion from teenage club dances to adult parties on New Year's Eve. They are truly one of the most diversified and popular groups in this area.

Mention should be made of the various and numerous committees who have worked so long and hard to make the weekend a success. Co-chairman for the Ring Dance are Tootsie Kay and Gary Rice. Decorations — Sandra Hyrum; Favors — Sandra McIvor and Bebe Woodruff; Publicity — Mary Kay Lucas; Ring figure — Esther Royaster and Dr. Rosemary Sprague; Flowers — Phyllis DA. Breakfast — Pat Gorky and Vicki L. Does; Dance invitations — Nancy Fey; Dance programs — Bobbie Lou Davis and Julie Glass; Tickets — Edith Loving and Faye Gravat; Ushers — Cheryl Roberts; Refreshments — Judy Childress, Gerri Daniels, and Joan Faulkner; Gifts — Janie Wall; Chaperones — Doris Koeberly; Photographer — Susan Beasley.

Magazine Selects Pearce, Tweedy To Represent LC

Faye Pearce, a Junior Spanish major, and senior Ann Tweedy, an English major, have been selected by Mademoiselle magazine to represent Longwood on the 1966 College Board.

Each College Board member will have an opportunity to contribute to Mademoiselle and help magazine keep abreast of campus trends. College Board members report regularly to Mademoiselle on events at their colleges, research articles, and help Mademoiselle fashion editors select models for college fashion features.

The Board is composed of some 1500 winners of the magazine's annual nationwide College Board Competition, a contest designed to recognize young women with talent in art, writing, editing, photography, layout, fashion design, merchandising, retail promotion or advertising. Board members are selected on the basis of entries they submit showing ability in one of these fields.

Each girl will remain on the College Board until she graduates. During this time she will accumulate a professional portfolio of work submitted to Mademoiselle which may well be valuable to her in finding a challenging job after graduation. Once a student has been selected for the College Board, she is eligible to compete for Mademoiselle's 20 grand prizes. Each year, 20 of the Board members are chosen to become Guest Editors. To win one of these positions, a Board member must submit a second entry that shows superior aptitude for magazine work.

The 20 Guest Editors spend the month of June in New York as salaried employees of Mademoiselle. They help write, illustrate and edit Mademoiselle's August college issue, sharing offices with Mademoiselle's regular editors. They interview well-known personalities and represent the magazine on visits to publishing houses, stores and advertising agencies. They are Mademoiselle's guests at parties, discoteques and screenings. In ad-

Summer Session Offers Courses For Six Weeks

Longwood College will hold two six-week sessions during the summer of 1966, beginning on June 13 and extending to September 2, according to Dr. Richard B. Brooks, Dean of Longwood.

Designed for both undergraduate and graduate study, the first session is scheduled from June 13-July 22. The second session is scheduled from July 25-September 2. There is also a three-week session for graduates only from July 25-August 2.

In addition to regular courses to raise collegiate certificates and collegiate professional certificates, there will be a six-week reading institute on the campus for elementary teachers of Southside Virginia. Sponsored by the National Defense Education Act, the reading institute is scheduled for June 20-July 23.

For the second consecutive summer, high school graduates who have been accepted for admission to the college, may attend the six-week sessions. Students may enroll for two courses in each of the two six-week sessions.

Information describing further details of the summer program is being mailed this week to elementary and secondary schools of the Commonwealth.

Players and Juniors tryout for this semester's plays. Reading: Mary Pollock and Helena Mast; Background: Joanne Black, and Cheryl Rose.

Reed & Barton Sponsor Annual Opinion Contest

During the months of February and March, Reed & Barton, America's oldest major silver-smiths, are conducting a "Silver Opinion Competition" in which valuable scholarships totalling $2050 are being offered to duly enrolled women students at a few selected colleges and universities.

In the 1965 Competition, Connie Spradlin, class of 1967, won a $300 scholarship for her entry form matching Reed & Barton sterling patterns with leading china and crystal patterns. In the same competition, Sally Ann Whitting, class of 1968, was one of the major prize winners of a starter set in sterling silver, china and crystal for her entry. Longwood College has been selected to enter this Competition in which the First Grand Award is a $500 cash scholarship; Second Grand Award is a $300 scholarship; Third Grand Award is a $250 scholarship; Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Awards are $200 scholarships; and Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth are $100 scholarships. In addition, there will be 100 other awards consisting of sterling silver, fine china and crystal with a retail value of approximately $50.00.

In the 1966 "Silver Opinion

Competition," an entry form illustrates twelve designs of sterling with eight designs of china and crystal. The entrant simply lists the three best combinations of sterling, china, and crystal from the patterns illustrated. Scholarships and awards will be made to those entries matching or coming closest to the unanimous selections of table-setting editors from three of the nation's leading magazines.

Sandra McIvor is the Student Representative who is conducting the "Silver Opinion Competition" for Reed & Barton at Longwood College. Those interested in entering the "Silver Opinion Competition" should contact her at 201 South Cunningham for any additional entry blanks and for complete details concerning the Competition rules. She also has samples of 12 of the most popular Reed & Barton designs so that entrants can see how these sterling patterns actually look.

Through the opinions on silver design expressed by college women competing for these scholarships, Reed & Barton hopes to compile a valuable library of expressions of young American taste.

House Council Again Reviews Case Procedure

SCOPE OF RESPONSIBILITY: House Council functions to uphold the standards of Longwood College. The Executive Council of House Council handles all cases under dormitory, dining hall, and fire regulations.

PURPOSE: The purpose of the Executive Council's trials is to offer an opportunity to clarify any uncertainties in the case and to provide an atmosphere of understanding and appreciation of House Council rules and regulations as stated in the student handbook.

PROCEDURES FOR INVESTIGATION: Any known or possible violations should be reported immediately to a member of the Executive Council. The vice-president and a member of the Executive Council, on the basis of the report, check confidentially these details needing verification before talking with the possible offender (e.g. signout cards, pink slips, late slips).

During an investigation, the possible offender and any witnesses must be reminded that it is an Honor Code offense to lie before the Executive Council of (Continued on page 3)

The Comic Tragedy

No matter how hard Longwood College tries to introduce its students to the higher forms of culture and the fine arts, it appears from observations made at the last Artist Series presentation that we are doomed to be a student body of pseudosophisticated college hobbi-soxers. The conduct of the audience last week for the performance of The Subject Was Roses was absolutely deplorable and unforgivable for the type of group we are supposed to represent — a selected group of above average intelligent young ladies. We acted like a bunch of grammar school girls watching the afternoon soap operas on television.

For the three and a half years that I have been a student at this college I have constantly heard the phrases "proper respect for May Day," "proper respect for Color Cup," "proper spirit for class sports," "proper respect for Circus," and proper respect for a hundred other things. But when it came time to exhibit proper respect for something that is of a much higher caliber than Circus and May Day, something that called for a little intelligence and seriousness, we showed just how juvenile we are and just how shallow our "cultural intelligence" really is. The Subject Was Roses was approached by Longwood Students with about the same degree of seriousness that we would show for Circus, as if the two could actually be equated.

It is certain true that Act I scene I was supposed to be humorous and laughter from the audience was expected. And throughout the play there were many laughable lines, especially during the drunken scenes. However, the undercurrent of the play was definitely tragic, and the surface humor of some of the lines did not warrant any form of laughter.

A visitor to the campus would suppose that Longwood students had never seen a can of beer before. And what was so funny about the tinkling of a spoon stirring a cup of coffee? The tremendous sigh given off by the audience when Nettie Cleary threw down the vase of roses was a typical reaction expected of a group of third graders watching Susie's First Date or something equally juvenile.

During the last scene the tragedy became extremely intense, and every line of dialogue was essential to the understanding and resolution of the conflict. However, it sounded like every student in the audience decided to cross or un-cross her legs or shift her sitting position at the same time with the result that the dialogue could not be heard over all the rattling and squeaking of the auditorium seats. Consequently, most of the dialogue in the most intense moments of the play was unheard, the aesthetic distance broken, and the meaning of the play lost.

Perhaps the endeavors of the College to culturally educate us should be discontinued and the money channeled into such programs as Circus and May Day, things that qualify for our shallow level of comprehension and appreciation. And perhaps we should drop the expression "Longwood Lady" and substitute "Longwood Girl" since the word "lady" implies a certain degree of maturity which obviously does not exist except in a few cases on this campus.

Dr. Simkins

Last week Longwood College and the South suffered the death of one its most brilliant and distinguished scholars, Dr. Francis Butler Simkins, who died after serving in the History and Social Sciences Department at Longwood for thirty-six years. Dr. Simkins devoted all of his intellectual endeavors to celebrating the history of the South through his numerous books and articles. He was a leading spirit in the founding of the Institute of Southern Culture at Longwood in 1956 in an effort to promote the study of the traditional aspects of Southern civilization with respect to its history, politics, and art.

Longwood will feel the loss of its friend for many years, not only in terms of missing Dr. Simkins familiar face around the campus but it will miss the intellectual challenge he posed to students and faculty alike.

Letters To Editor

Alumna Recalls Simkins

Dear Editor:

Like every institution of higher learning, Longwood College has its traditions and landmarks which become the fond memories of alumnae. Longwood has the clock on Lancaster Library, convocations, Joan of Arc, Circus, and until a few days ago it had Dr. Francis Butler Simkins. Almost every Longwood Alumna from the 30's to the 60's has some memory of Dr. Simkins. Some remember his profanity, others his legendary shuffle or his anecdotes from his South Carolina boyhood, and although Dr. Simkins would dispute it some remember his essays and his unorthodox lectures. When ever Longwood alumnae of the Simkins' years gather, they share their memories of the memorable Dr. Simkins.

Among the most privileged of Longwood alumnae are those whom Dr. Simkins invited to lunch either at the Weyanoke Hotel or in the college Tea Room. At those luncheons, Dr. Simkins was in his glory as he calcoled students into thinking or wheeled campus gossip from them. And it was at those luncheons that Dr. Simkins was at his best as a college professor as he poked holes in immature thinking, recommended certain books and authors, and told stories.

He did not attempt to influence the thinking of his guests; in fact, he invited disagreement. He did, however, demand that his luncheon guests think, for Dr. Simkins was not one to politely endure being bored by an empty mind.

Lunch with Dr. Simkins included discussions on literature, government, history — American, Southern and Longwood — and innumerable other subjects — all without the pressures of classes taken for college credit. But like classroom courses, sessions with Dr. Simkins had results. His luncheon companions read the books he recommended, weighed his ideas and learned to accept and love an eccentric man in a time when eccentricity is not popular.

Sincerely,
Donna M. Humphlett

Town Resident Praises

Letters To Viet Nam

Dear Editor:

I am writing to you and to the student body of Longwood College to commend the girls who wrote letters to our servicemen in Viet Nam during the Christmas season. I understand that some of their letters have been answered. You must be rather proud of your students, and you should be.

I write to you not only as president of the Farmville Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, but as a volunteer Red Cross worker and a mother whose son is about to go to Viet Nam, as well. Perhaps you can understand my appreciation for whatever the college does in support of our servicemen. I know other people in the community and in Red Cross work are anticipating an especially the visit by the Red Cross Bloodmobile when it comes to Longwood February 17. Official requests have come to the Red Cross for blood donations for use overseas. I can't help thinking that what we all do now may save the lives of husbands, sweethearts, and sons. Please let the girls know that what they do does not go unappreciated. And please encourage them to keep their fine spirit!

Sincerely,
Susan W. Clark
(Mrs. J. T. Clark)

PAUL GOODMAN

With regard to the present propaganda in the Vietnam War, the Division of Humanities in the universities is again demonstrating its worthlessness and unconcern for reality. I have not heard a single critique and protest from any academic faculty in literature, history, or philosophy, of the style and morality of the Vietnam coverage in the TV and other media. But if these faculties are not society's watchdog in these matters, to maintain the fundamentals of civilization, who else?

The jingo propaganda has rapidly descended into pornography, calling on ultimate passions and suffering, showing enduring, bleeding, and crippled men, to win trivial political consent from a comfortable audience. It does not help, either, that the scenes of suffering are interrupted by commercials for sexy soap, filtered cigarettes, and sleek automobiles. In my opinion, almost no human purposes are profound enough to justify showing the suffering, and sublimity of war; only the compassion of Homer or Tolstoy can carry it. The appeal to patriotism is always suspect. But certainly the motives of the Vietnamese, whether right or wrong, for freedom, self-defense, or revenge, are more appropriate to such violent rhetoric than McNamara's calculated policy, whether correct or not. It is shameful for our propaganda to use such scenes and glibly say, "150 V.C. were exterminated," as if they were not human beings too. We shall not be forgiven it.

The war between the National Liberation Front and Saigon has been marked by horror, terror, and torture on both sides. Twenty years of war have brutalized the Vietnamese people. Nevertheless, from a moral point of view, this brutalization of the Vietnamese is a far lower grade of evil than the dehumanization of our high-flying airmen, detached, secluded, raining down death and fire, and destroying the crops. These airmen are not much different from public hangers. On the TV their job is presented as cheerily technical, a beautiful American disposition, but which, under the circumstances, does little credit to them as grown-up men. There is no way of making our technological onslaught look good; our media should have the decency to refrain from trying, and to restrict their coverage to stoical communiques and abstract statements of policy.

Historians recount with ridicule and disgust the similar propaganda of previous wars of other countries and of our own country. We ought to get wise to ourselves and say, This won't do. Think after this: Over — if it is ever over and if the nuclear war doesn't break out — here we will look at the pictures of our good-natured soldiers giving out candy to children. Meantime we burn the rice fields. And it has happened that the candy itself has been used as a bribe to show the way to father's hiding place.

Because of its peculiar nature, the Vietnam war has cast a bright light on the moral degradation of our country: our sentimentalism and callousness; our self-righteous cant and irresponsibility to other people's needs and dignity; our abdication of democracy to authorities who are not even believed; our abdication of morals and politics to technological means; the complacency of our middle-class drafting the poor and shaming viciously in their ordeal; the domineering willfulness of great power that says "Bubbit or else." Unlike Professor Genovese, I would not "welcome" the victory of the NLF and Hanoi: every "victory" at present is a further set-back for world peace. But if we won this war, it would be an unmitigated moral disaster for ourselves and mankind.

Let me tell a melancholy anecdote. I was recently at a conference at Cornell, attended by a galaxy of distinguished theologians from all over the world. During a sharp exchange, suddenly Visser 't Hooft, the executive secretary of the World Council of Churches, turned on me and said, "Don't talk morals to me, you're an American." There was nothing for me to do but hang my head. That's nice, isn't it?

Are You 'In' or 'Out'?

It Depends On Camp

Those of you who are "In" probably already know what "camp" is — but for those of you who don't . . . Camp is an adjective applied by the intellectualists of things of the past that are so stupidly cute, quaint and unique as to be in our day and age: Camp is popping up everywhere nowadays: in pop art; in movies, such as "What's New Pussycat?"; and on television, such as "Batman." The utmost in camp is old movies.

- Why not check your campmanship with this quiz:
1. Give the real names of Robert Taylor, Boris Karloff, Roy Rogers, Paulette Goddard, Elizabeth Scott.
  2. What was Mae West's answer when a dowager commented, "Goodness, what beautiful diamonds?" And in what movie?
  3. Who played Tarzan's son?
  4. Name three actors who played Charlie Chan.
  5. What were Garbo's first words in a talkie? And the name of the film.
  6. "Remember My Forgotten Man" was sung by whom in what musical?
  7. Who starred in the Torchy Blane series and Nelson Eddy?
  8. Name the actors who played Scarlett O'Hara's husband in "Gone With the Wind."
  9. Who sang "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody" in "The Great Ziegfeld"?
  10. Who played Scattergood Baines?
  11. Name the five members of the Hardy family.
  12. Who was the jungle girl in "Trader Horn"?
  13. What were the first and last co-starring films of Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy?
  14. Who was Fred Astaire's first screen dance partner?
  15. Who starred in the Flash Gordon serials?
  16. Who played the title role in "Rebecca"?
  17. What was Baby Leroy's real name?
  18. Who were the "Four Daughters"?

LC Honors Council Begins New Projects

In the fall semester, the Honors Council restated its purpose in a letter to members of the Longwood faculty. Since that time, the Council has begun work on a number of projects to uphold its stated purpose.

The Honors Council, which is made up of the president and one representative from each honor society on campus, published its purpose in the statement, "The council attempts to stimulate and to encourage each student to take full advantage of every learning opportunity offered by the academic setting of college life . . . lycums, teachers, library, etc."

The council further stated, "The council endeavors to make the student ever more aware of her primary purpose for being in college . . . to learn . . . not learning in the sense of rote memorization . . . but learning with the full knowledge that after the acquisition of facts must come understanding."

The council is now engaged in projects to carry out its purpose. It will begin next week to sponsor an article in The Roundup to honor a person who has excelled in academics . . . either generally or in a particular field. The council has already begun to publish a quote in The Roundup each week pertaining to education and the value of academics. The Honors Council is also striving to have those who graduate from Longwood "with honor" recognized by a special notation on their degrees. At the present time, these students receive only an oral recognition at the graduation exercises.

Other plans of the Honors Council for the year include an assembly program and the establishment of a tutoring service. The chairman of the Honors Council is Carolyn Keys. Mrs. Bobbitt is the faculty advisor.

KOPhi Pledges Seven Students Into Fraternity

Kappa Omicron Phi, honorary Home Economics fraternity, issued bids to seven students last week. The pledges are: Patsy Paul, Betty Mallory, Martha Lee, Susanne Crisp, Sandra Hamrick, May Gilliam and Carole Tingley.

In order to qualify for membership into Kappa Omicron Phi students must have a B average in Home Economics and a better than average overall grade.

The purpose of Kappa Omicron Phi is to recognize outstanding students in the field of Home Economics and to further interest in Home Economics.

Longwood House Council Reviews Case Procedure

House Council or members thereof in an investigation or trial.

When a possible House Council problem is brought to the vice-president, she and the president exercise judgment as to the urgency of the investigation or trial. If the problem does not warrant immediate action then such a case may wait until the regular meeting time of the Executive Council of House Council.

The vice-president, and/or a member of the Executive Council to whom the case was reported, will present to the possible offender a written statement informing her of the investigation and charge. She is allowed 24 hours, if she desires, to obtain counsel within the student association.

If the violation should be one which, on examination, does not call for a formal Executive Council trial, the issue is reported at the regular meeting of the Executive Council.

If a specific case does not warrant an appearance before the Council, the facts are given to the vice-president, who relates them to the entire Executive Council. The case is discussed, a decision is made, and the vice-president then informs the Executive Council who the accused person is.

If the violation should be one which, on examination, does call for a formal Executive Council trial, the person or persons involved are asked to appear before the Executive Council at a designated time and place.

The proceedings of the trial are held in confidence by all members of the Executive Council. The secretary will keep an accurate record of the trial. The vice-president first presents to the Executive Council all facts. The accused, upon entering the Council room, is verbally charged and is subject to all provisions of the Honor Code.

The accused has the privilege of requesting witnesses to testify in her behalf. Witnesses may also be called in by the Executive Council and questioned. Any witness is subject to all of the provisions of the Honor Code. Therefore, any witness who gives false testimony may be subject to trial by the Judicial Board at a later time. The witness is always informed, in writing, of the reason for her appearance at the trial.

The Executive Council members may direct such questions as are relevant to the case to those appearing before them.

After questioning, the person is asked to return to a designated room if the Executive Council members feel it may be necessary to talk with her again.

After questioning, and testimonies are given, the Executive Council weighs carefully and thoughtfully all evidence before reaching a decision. If it is determined that the case also involves Honor Code or Social Offenses, the Executive Council, after reaching its decision, will refer the case to Judicial Board. THE ACCUSED IS ALWAYS INNOCENT UNLESS PROVEN GUILTY.

FROM THE BOARD

Acting on a recommendation from the Judicial Board, the Legislative Board has changed the portion of the Honor Code concerning "Lying under oath before the Judicial Board . . ." (p. 30, Student Handbook) to read "Lying before the Judicial Board or the executive council of House Council or members thereof in any matter during the investigation or trial of a case is an Honor Code offense." The sentence "The accused is given every opportunity to prove her innocence." (p. 31, Student Handbook) has been reworded to read "The accused is considered innocent unless proven guilty."

The Board has appointed Sandy Byrum to the post of N. S. A. Co-ordinator and Kay Collins as assistant N. S. A. Co-ordinator. The following students have been elected by the Board to compile the 1966-67 Student Handbook: Editor—Susan Goodes, Assistant Editor—Nancy Young, Typist—Pam McGehee.

The Legislative Board has submitted recommendations to Dr. Brooks to be considered by him in the planning of future exam schedules. These suggestions were concerned with tests and term papers during the ten-day period, the possibility of a reading day (study day) preceding or during exams, and the extension of semester break to include at least two days in addition to a weekend. Your suggestions on the subject of exams should be submitted to class representatives or other members of the Board.

A new committee of Board members has begun work on this semester's Speaker Program, which was initiated under the previous Board. The committee is considering speakers for the non-compulsory programs to be given in the Student Lounge on the topics "Academic vs. Social Life on Campus" and "Riots, Picketing, Demonstrations — Is This the Twentieth Century Student?" Further information will be disclosed later concerning this speaker program.

House Council has initiated on a trial basis unlimited lights for freshmen. Although there is no lights out time, no visiting after 11:00 is allowed in the dorms.

The Legislative Board needs your help, ideas, criticisms. Please make use of the Student Government Suggestion Box in the smoker and talk with your class representatives. To keep abreast of the activities of the Board, read the weekly minutes of the Board meeting. These minutes will be posted on the Dean of Women's bulletin board. These are your opportunities to participate actively in the Student Government Association. Do you take advantage of them?

LC Suffers Defeat In Saturday's Game

The Longwood basketball team suffered a double defeat at the hands of the Madison team Saturday afternoon, Feb. 19. Madison won the first game 46 to 35. The score of the second game was 54-37, again in favor of the Madison team.

Free Bowling Is Discontinued; Lack Of Funds

Recreational bowling at the Sports Center has been terminated. Longwood students can no longer bowl free of charge at the downtown bowling alley because all the appropriated funds were used first semester. When more funds are made available, this activity will be resumed.

Spotlight Cheers Virginia Morton

Coming to Longwood in her sophomore year, Jenny Morton quickly gained the "Longwood Spirit." She was recommended by CH that year for her school spirit and contributions to Longwood activities. Jenny, a Health and Physical Education major, hails from Newport News. She has played varsity football. She has been on the A. A. Council, and has participated in all the class sports. For this active participation in A. A. activities, Jenny received the blue blazer at the Athletic Association Banquet last fall.

Being a member of Longwood Players is among Jenny's favorite extra-curricular activities at Longwood. She also enjoys playing the ukulele and listening to the Supremes. Jenny is now student teaching in Richmond.

Madison took an early lead in the first game. After Longwood, switched from a zone defense to a man to man defense, the contest was somewhat more even. In the third quarter the LC ladies came within six points of the Madison team, but Madison held its lead.

The second game was a repeat of the first, with the Longwood offense again having an off day. Madison won the game by a seventeen point margin. The first team now has a season record of one win and two losses. The second team has a 2-1 record.

Orchestrates Selects New Members For Initiation

After observing first semester modern dance classes, Orchestras has sent out invitations to new members. They will appear in two presentations, their spring concert and the Richmond Master Modern Dance Festival on March 18.

Girls selected by Orchestras are: Susan Gaillet; Pam Kerber; Katherine Hamilton; Barbara Kell; Sara Puckett; Freda Richards; Mayling Simpson; Connie Spradlin; Melinda Tibbs; and Peggy Weiss. These girls will be initiated in a ceremony this spring.

YWCA Sponsors Two LC Students At "Y" Assembly

Sue Gatewood and Carol Reich were sponsored by the YWCA for weekend of February 11-13 on a trip to Montreal, New Carolina to attend the Southern Regional Assembly of the YWCA. These representatives from nine states met together to plan the work of the "Y" for the coming year. Through much discussion and thought on a variety of subjects, this Assembly decided what emphasizes the "Y" will make on foreign policy making in light of the nature and function of a student Christian association, the effects of mass communication on our everyday lives and the role of the "Y" in promoting the new campus business. Other topics of discussion were the young woman's predicament in today's world as the "woman-machine," the effects of cybernation, automation, and technology on man's role today, and the importance of regarding all men as individuals.

Besides these talks there was an informative debate on the "New Theology"—is God dead in our traditional churches, what effect does the idea of a secular church have on us as individuals and as a nation, and how great will be the impact of this minority group of "new theologians" on revisiting the viewpoints of the Christian church? These are just a few of the questions raised by this discussion. The "Y" is hoping to look into this question during the next few months.

It was a highly informative and productive weekend. Through the guidelines set up by the Assembly, it is hoped that the student body will be come more interested and aware of the many exciting changes developing in the world.

American Airlines Provides Reduced Fares For Students

High school and college students throughout the nation are signing up for travel at half fare on American Airlines.

The far-reaching new American Youth Plan, approved recently by the Civil Aeronautics Board, was to become effective Jan. 27.

Key to nationwide, half-fare travel for anyone from age 12 to 22 is the Youth Fare Identification Card. The cards are available at $3 each from American Airlines ticket offices from coast to coast, representatives on 75 college campuses, some travel agencies and from a special mail-order center at the airline's New York headquarters.

Officials of the airline said that more than 33,000,000 young Americans are in the eligible age bracket.

The nation's two largest hotel chains—the Sheraton and the Hilton—have announced they are backing the plan and will give card holders special rates and privileges under a wide variety of conditions.

Any holder of an identification card can purchase, on a stand-by basis, a ticket for travel anywhere on American Airlines' domestic system. Qualification for the card is simple; any document which offers legal proof of age, and three dollars, are all that's needed. The card may be purchased by mail, and validation will be made at the American Airlines installation the card holder uses to make his first trip. Validation, of course, calls for proof of age.

As part of the plan, American Airlines is producing a 64-page booklet, to be distributed free, entitled "Go Go American," which explains the plan and perhaps equally important, gives the card holder a look at the country from the teenage point of view—or, where the action is. In addition, the book has up to $200 worth of discount coupons for amusement parks, restaurants, etc., around the nation.

Marion Sadler, president of American, in announcing American's drive for card sales, said: "The CAB's action, as we see it, is confirmation of our own belief that the young people of this country are ready to travel by air. If the price is right for them. And that's what our Youth Plan is all about: we want to get the young people flying and we want to make it easy for them. And from our point of view, young people covered by air travel are our future customers."

This is the way the plan works:

1. American's Youth Plan was to become effective on January 27. From that time on, any holder of a Youth Plan Identification Card may purchase a ticket, at half the jet coach fare, for travel anywhere on American Airlines' domestic system on a stand-by basis. He or she will be boarded after regular revenue passengers and military standbys.
2. Youth Plan Cards are now available at any American Airlines ticket office. In addition, they may be purchased by mail, from American Airlines, Youth Plan Headquarters, 633 Third Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10017. These cards must be validated, using legal proof of age, at any American Airlines ticket office before first use.
3. "Go Go American," the 64-page booklet, detailing the "action areas" for teenagers around the country, is available at American Airlines ticket offices, or by mail, from Youth Plan Headquarters. The booklet is free.
4. A special campus program is being staged by the National Employment Services Institute which maintains representatives at hundreds of colleges and universities throughout the country.
5. The Youth Plan card will not be in effect on a few days of the year when heavy passenger loads will cut the availability of seats for standbys. These would include, in 1966, April 7 (Thursday before Easter Sunday); Nov. 23 and 27 (Wednesday before the Sunday after Thanksgiving Day); and Dec. 15 through 21.

Southern Institute Features Fitzpatrick

Major cities in the South have a great advantage over their northern counterparts, the dean of the University of Virginia's School of Architecture said Friday, Feb. 11, at Longwood College.

His talk, "The Changing Profile of the Southern City," was one in a year-long series of five lectures on the general theme of reconstruction in the South, sponsored by Longwood's Institute of Southern Culture.

"Our large cities are a much more recent development and we should learn from their mistakes," Thomas K. Fitzpatrick said.

"Older cities throughout the country are fighting day by day to recapture lost space through urban renewal programs. These are piecemeal programs which provide remedial treatment but do not solve the basic problem which plagues these centers."

He cited annexation of surrounding county land as another stop-gap measure which is "simply another device to provide greater revenue for city operation at the expense of the involved county."

Dean Fitzpatrick sees another advantage in the delay of industrialization in the South. He feels there will be less concentration in a few big metropolitan centers, and more new cities developed as auxiliary or satellite centers.

"Housing in particular will not tend to concentrate in the heart of large cities, but will continue to develop in smaller centers ringing the city proper," he said.

Tracing the rapid urbanization of the South since World War II, Dean Fitzpatrick noted that by 1950 the population of the South was one-half urban and one-half rural. Of these classified as rural, half were living in suburbs or other non-farm areas.

"The South can no longer be considered as the principal agrarian section of an industrial nation. As its economy grows and develops, the cities necessary for this expansion will be built."

As an architect, he sees a change in the scale of southern cities.

"That lovely quality of human scale, the importance of gardens, the soft color of brick, the symbolic church spires are in danger of being destroyed daily. But so also the characteristics of the people who inhabit these cities are changing.

"It is useless to murmur nostalgically of the past when the present marches methodically toward a new realm. Our task is to become immediately aware of what is happening, and use every resource at hand to protect the important values and forms of the past, while we define and control the new order of the future."

Among the keys to building handsome cities on the new scale are methods to define the limits of their growth, public understanding and commitment, and imaginative leadership, he said. "It will only be by personal commitment and a sort of evangelistic excitement throughout the entire area that the ultimate goal of a new city form will be reached. By past evidence, this is more possible in the South than anywhere else in the nation."

Drama Group To Rehearse For Production

by Susan Wolitz

Something new is going to be tried with the set of the forthcoming play, Androcles and the Lion, a spoof on Christianity by George Bernard Shaw. The most unusual special technical effect will be the attempted projection of the Coliseum on the scenery.

For this production, a special projector will have to be made, under the direction of Mr. Alexander, set designer. The projector, called a linebooth-type projector, will be a model of one designed by a German in the 1920's. It is a lensless projector that uses a painted slide and has a single light source.

The actual set was not described in detail by Shaw. He simply said that the entire action takes place in the catacombs and the Coliseum. "The challenge," said Mr. Alexander, "is how to create the subterranean passageways of the Coliseum and the arena itself."

"The majority of the action takes place in the catacombs, but at one point Androcles walks through the passageway and into the arena. To do this, a set has to be designed that will split into two halves, and each half will turn around and reveal the interior of the arena. Mr. Alexander added, "This is an attempt to produce on stage a movie technique. In other words, the audience will see Androcles enter the passage, and then walk through it and enter the Coliseum."

Great Expansion Set For College; Plans For '72, '80

Longwood is embarking on a growth scheme that will place the student enrollment at 4,000 by 1980. By 1972, there are several new buildings on the agenda for the campus. Included are four new dormitories, a proposed Fine Arts Building, a proposed Laboratory School, a proposed Home Economics building, and a proposed Service Building.

Past 1972, projected scope plans for eight more future dormitories, three more academic buildings, and another dining hall.

Expansion for the campus will go out past Madison Street, behind the present day boundaries. A diagram of the proposed sites and buildings may be seen on the bulletin board across from the Dean of Women's office.

English Society Sponsors Panel On Shaw

Beorc Eh Thorn, English honorary society of Longwood College, will sponsor a symposium concerning Bernard Shaw on Tuesday, March 15, at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Lounge.

The panel will consist of Dr. Patton Lockwood, associate professor of Drama, Mr. Herbert Blackwell, associate professor of English, and Mr. Robert Alexander, assistant professor of Drama, who will discuss the various aspects of the works of Bernard Shaw.

Honors Council Provides Student Tutoring Plan

Beginning this semester, the Honors Council is endeavoring to initiate a functional, on-campus tutoring system. Such a system will be made available to all Longwood students desiring additional help in college work. The program will be operated on a student tutoring basis. The Council feels that by instituting such a system early in the semester, students will avoid "cramming" just before examinations in order to pass a course. It is hoped that the program will encourage conscientious study throughout the term.

Tate Graduates With Honors In Academics

by Barbara Garrison

The Honors Council wishes to give recognition this week to Judy Tate, the January graduate with the highest academic average. Judy, an English and Biology major, graduated from Longwood with a 3.64 cumulative average.

Judy attended John Marshall High School in Richmond before coming to Longwood. She did her student-teaching there and has now returned to John Marshall as a science and physics teacher.

While she was at Longwood, Judy's academic achievement was evidenced by her membership in Lynches and in Kappa Delta Pi. Judy was also an Honors graduate.

Academics was not the only field in which Judy was active. She was class president for the January graduates. Judy was also summer school student government president for the 1965 session.

Judy's other activities included membership in Alpha Sigma Tau, where she was rush chairman this year, and a place on the Academic Affairs committee. Judy was also a member of the Longwood concert choir.

have been quite helpful in submitting lists of students qualified to tutor another in a particular subject area. Once a request for a tutor is received, these suggested students will be approached concerning their availability to act in the capacity of a tutor.

Students desiring tutors may pick up the application forms in the office of the Director of Admissions. These forms must be completed and returned to Rose Mary Street, Wheeler 225, as soon as possible. The committee will then arrange for the applicant to meet with a tutor.

The Honors Council cannot over-emphasize the fact that college students should recognize their need for extra help before it is too late, and they should be willing to take advantage of a program offered to help them. Possible, a few hours of tutoring early in the semester will prevent unnecessary pressure at final examination time.

Dr. Lippincott Delivers Lecture On Chemistry

From March 7 through March 9, Dr. Ellis R. Lippincott, Professor of Chemistry at the University of Maryland, will visit Longwood College and Hampden-Sydney College under the auspices of the Division of Chemical Education of the American Chemical Society. The Visiting Scientist Program is made possible through financial support by the National Science Foundation. The American Chemical Society, through this program, has made it possible for the faculty and students of some 1,200 colleges and universities throughout the nation to benefit from the visits of outstanding scientists.

Baritone Gerard Souzay To Sing In Jarman For Artist Series

"The finest male singer of our day. I know of no one who couldn't learn from this man's flawless artistry." This is the evaluation of Gerard Souzay by no less an authority than critic and author Louis Biancolli in the New York World Telegram & Sun, pronounced upon the occasion of the extraordinary French baritone's American operatic debut.

For that event he had been personally chosen by the great Leopold Stokowski to portray the title role of Monteverdi's "Orfeo" with which the maestro opened the season of the New York City Opera Company in 1960. While the other New York critics were equally lavish in their praise, the tribute which the artist values most came in a letter from the conductor himself: "Thank you for the outstandingly beautiful performance, both vocally and dramatically. I hope to have the artistic pleasure of making music with you again, either in America or in Europe. You fulfilled completely my conception of Orfeo, and established for all of us an ideal level of performance."

Last season the baritone returned to New York to sing a recital at Hunter College on the city's most distinguished recital series. "The many tributes to Claude Debussy during this century of his birth, there will probably be none superior to that given by Gerard Souzay," wrote The New York Times of the event. "Each song became a world in itself in Mr. Souzay's performance... Mr. Souzay has few peers today in translating them into sound." And the New York Herald Tribune reported: "Souzay not only sings beautifully but he unfolds a song like a prism that is slowly turned, shedding a galaxy of color, both bold and subtle, onto the beholder."

Such reviews have become commonplace in the globe-girdling career of Gerard Souzay. As recitalist, opera star, orchestral soloist, or on recordings, radio or television, the baritone is in every sense of the word the true musical artist. He brings to his art a beautiful natural voice, informed by an inquisitive intellect and profound sensitivity, and controlled by an understanding appreciation of science, philosophy and all the other arts. It is little wonder that Gerard Souzay is one of the most sought-after musicians in the world today.

Ever since his enormously successful debut here in 1950, Gerard Souzay has returned to our shores for a part of each season to fill a heavily booked schedule of recitals and orchestral engagements. He has appeared with practically every major orchestra here, under our most distinguished conductors, and has sung at many of our leading festivals, including Tanglewood and the Casals Festival in Puerto Rico. His recital engagements always include the most discriminating auspices such as New York's Hunter College and The Metropolitan Museum of Art, and his own recitals at Town Hall are eagerly awaited by connoisseurs of the vocal art.

But America can claim only a small part of the time of this busy international artist. His concert tours of Europe are usually sold out several seasons in advance. Other tours have carried him to South America (three times), Australia and

New Zealand, and both North and South Africa. During one recent season he circled the globe, singing on five of the earth's six continents.

Another indication of the baritone's exalted reputation is the repeated demand for his services at the great international music festivals. He is frequently featured in recital and with orchestras at Edinburgh and Salzburg, and in opera and concert at Aix-en-Provence. During one single summer he appeared at no fewer than seven major European festivals: The Poirence Festival, the Casals Festival at Prades, the Halla Festival, the Sibelius Festival in Helsinki, the Grieg Festival in Bergen, and the International Festivals of Paris and Venice. This is not counting a flying visit to Tanglewood to perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival.

As a recording artist, Gerard Souzay also enjoys a unique position — unique in the selectivity of the works performed, in the outstanding quality of the performances, and in the high praise that greet their release. Capitol's album entitled "The World of Songs" best demonstrates the artist's incredible versatility. It comprises a selection of folk songs in 17 different languages or dialects, including an impeccable Irish brogue! The New York Herald Tribune named it "best vocal record of has since repeated it with equal impact at the Paris Opera. Recent releases that have gathered critical kudos among the reviewers were songs by Schubert (Philips), songs by Debussy (Deutsche Grammophon) and Berlioz' "Danse of Faust" (Angel). During the past few months Philips has released three exciting new discs: Schubert's great song cycle "Winterreise," songs by Duparc, and songs by Beethoven and Brahms. Such the number of different companies that have sought Souzay to record for them is impressive.

Gerard Souzay was born into a musical family in Angers, France. His father, an army officer, played the cello and his mother, as well as two brothers and a sister, sang and accompanied one another at the piano. It was not always his plan to be a singer, however. At the College of Chinon, he majored in philosophy and at the age of eighteen he went to Paris to work toward an advanced degree in this field. At the same time he began vocal coaching with the noted French musician Pierre Bernac, and two years later entered the Paris Conservatory. Philosophy was thus abandoned as a career, but it remains today a favorite subject for leisure reading. His future as a major musical artist was forecast in his student days when he won both the Premier Prix du Chant and the Premier the year," and Cue Magazine called it "one of the best vocal recitals of the season," praised by such other publications as The New York Times, Hi-Fidelity Magazine and The Saturday Review.

Two Epic releases, songs by Faure and Schumann's cycle "Dichterliebe," demonstrate his mastery of both the French and German styles. Angel's complete "Follies of Melisande" displays Souzay at his operatic best, as Souzay, a role which he usually becomes identified with him. He sang this part for the first time during the 1961-62 season with the Bonn Opera under the baton of Ansermet and he

Upon his graduation the young singer embarked on a professional career and almost immediately began to win recognition as a singer of unique quality and great promise. From France his sphere of activity gradually extended to include all of the countries of western Europe, and his tours away from the Continent began with his initial appearances in North Africa.

The list of symphonic organizations with which he has sung now includes all of the great ones: the Padelou, Cologne and Conservatory Orchestras of Paris; the Philharmonic Orchestras (Continued on page 3)

Maturity Of Seniors

In a thorough evaluation conducted by the Southern Association of Colleges and Universities last year, the Association commented that perhaps the atmosphere at Longwood is too protective to enable its students to develop an adequate sense of maturity.

In no other aspect of the college does this seem more evident than in the rules and regulations it maintains for Seniors. The problem is that there is no meaningful recognition made of the differences between the Seniors and the other classes. That is, in terms of the rules that Seniors must obey. That is, in terms of the rules that take into consideration the fact that most college seniors have been in college for three years and that most of them are 21 or over. With the exception of 11:00 p.m. and 12:30 a.m. permission, the Seniors live under the same rules as the Freshmen. No allowance is made for the fact that the Seniors have been at Longwood for three years and that they left home three years before.

Instead of imposing the same set of rules and regulations on everyone, there should exist a graduated scale of rules such that the Seniors have the least restrictions than the other students. After all, in another three months most Seniors will be self-supporting and will live in their own apartments, etc.

The regulation structure as it exists now does not allow for the Longwood student to gradually develop a sense of security adequate enough for her to cope with the world that waits beyond the protective walls of the Longwood campus. Instead she leaves a cotton-candy cradle to face the world . . . with a store of permission cards, sign-out cards, call downs, and pink slips.

A Shortchanged Education

ITHACA, N.Y. (I.P.)—The recently released report by the Faculty Committee on the Quality of Undergraduate Instruction at Cornell University states that students across the nation are being shortchanged in their education. "There can be no doubt that student dissatisfaction with undergraduate instruction, at Cornell as elsewhere, has basis in fact," the report stated bluntly.

The 13,000-word report called for a "marked change" in the attitude of teachers toward students and for increased emphasis on the importance of teaching. Teaching, it said, must be placed on the same level as research, publishing and public service.

However, the report stressed, "we are convinced that the increasing contact with external affairs on the part of professors does benefit undergraduate education. There is too little understanding of this point by students and people outside the University."

The committee noted that the past year "was marked by mounting criticisms of the education that the nation's universities were giving their undergraduates" and termed its report "an extensive self-examination." The committee held more than 25 meetings, talked with students, faculty members and administrative officers and studied numerous written reports.

Undergraduate education at Cornell, the report said, "though generally conscientious, often very good and occasionally brilliant — commands neither the attention nor the status it deserves. If the quality of our teaching is not as high as it can and should be — and that is our finding — then the fundamental solution is that each one of us devote a considerably greater effort to making it better."

This requires "an academic atmosphere in which students feel that the university is truly interested in their educational and cultural development — in their ideas, problems, and aspirations, and in their desire and ability to help improve the educational process. This atmosphere has not yet been achieved," the report said, "at least for the great majority of our students."

"At Cornell today there are few mechanisms whereby students can get the faculty and administration to take real consideration to their reactions and proposals without running the risk of being viewed by many as violators of good taste, or worse. But the fact that student discontent or indifference may derive in part from circumstances beyond the university's control does not mean that institutions of higher learning have no obligation to respond to the student's problems. On the contrary, in its teaching role the university is more than a dispenser of knowledge; as an educational institution it is charged with evolving and guiding the development of the young person's potential in judgment as well as in intellect."

This doesn't mean, the report said, that the university has "either the capacity or the obligation to play the role of psychotherapist, let alone of substitute parent. It does, however, have the duty and the ability to provide him with teachers (which is not the same thing as exposing him to scholars) and to create a physical and social environment conducive to academic and cultural pursuits."

These needs cannot be met "if a substantial portion of the faculty define their responsibilities to undergraduates primarily in terms of formal instruction, leaving to others the task of hearing out the student, (or the task of) responding to his intellectual groupings and supporting or challenging his ideas," said the report.

Letters To Editor

American Red Cross Lauds Donations

Dear Editor:

On behalf of the Farmville Area Chapter, American Red Cross, I wish to take this opportunity to express our deep appreciation to you, members of the faculty, and students of Longwood College, for the most excellent service they rendered in making the American Red Cross Bloodmobile visit such a success at the college February 17.

It is only through the generosity and humanitarian service like our fine colleagues are willing to give that this life-saving Blood Program is made available to our colleges, hospitals, and all citizens of our town and community.

Due to the special appeal from National Red Cross for extra blood to help save the lives of our many hospitalized servicemen in Viet Nam, the wonderful response from Longwood College to this urgent call was most gratifying to your local Red Cross Chapter, our medical staff, and the entire community.

Thanking you sincerely, Mrs. Adelaide Perry Edwards Executive Secretary Mrs. Anne Graziani Chairman, Blood Program

SRO Begins New Series

The newest thing to hit the campus this semester is the new radio program "SRO" sponsored by Longwood. The meaning of its call letters is being kept secret for publicity purposes. "SRO" grew out of Mr. Robert Woodburn's desire to become thoroughly familiar with the campus radio studio and the mechanics of the console. Woodburn will be teaching Speech 311 next semester — Radio, T. V., and Film.

Nine students are working to produce the program. Judy Hedrick, Lucilla Koppany, Lou

PAUL GOODMAN

It is not clear what young people mean when they say they are "alienated." Let me briefly review the concept historically. In the sense of estrangement from God, alienation is a powerful theme in early Protestant theology. "God is hiding His face." The Lutheran answer was, of course, Have faith. Do not rely on works, for they are alienated as you.

Turning the theology into epistemology, the Hegelians referred to the divorce between our subjective needs and intuitions and the objective world given in science and social institutions. Hegel relied on the working out of history to bring these parts together. But reviving the Protestant insight, Kierkegaard insisted that we must be authentically committed in our moment by moment choices and not treat ourselves as scientific or historical objects. This "existential" answer has of course had great influence in criticism of our present over-organized routines.

Marx pinned down the alienation to people's loss of control over their productive life, and therefore loss of their primary human nature. Productive machinery and rules of work had passed into the hands of an owning class. Products of labor became commodities moving in a market, rather than uses in a community. His answer was, organize politically and expropriate the expropriators.

Nineteenth Century Definition

In the late 19th century there was also a psychiatric meaning of alienation as insanity (psychiatrists were "alienists"). The hallucinations of the insane mind were incompatible with, or divorced from, sensory reality. Freud tended to extend this concept by showing that everybody was somewhat psychopathological, and his bias was to relax the anti-instinctual barriers that led to such a deep chasm between wish and reality.

All these extensions of Alienation are deeply important and true at present. And in the conditions of today, we have found another important aspect of alienation which (I think) is meant by the young. Modern societies increasingly exclude vast groups of people: e.g. the aged, the farmers, the Negroes, the young. (With automation, the exclusion threatens to become wider.) To be "alienated" is to feel productively useless, without future, excluded. Further, the needs and feelings of the excluded are not paid attention to in the goals and decisions of administrative society. To be "alienated" is to feel processed, exploited, administered.

What follows? First, the young cannot identify with the social goals and they say, "That's not my scene, I am nowhere." But then, as an immediate next step, they say, "They are nowhere. We young are the only people. We have to go it alone; if necessary, we must resist their interference in our lives."

This has been the persistent tendency of the present "youth" phenomena: the adolescent sub-culture, the Beat movement, the para-colleges, the draft protest.

Different, Hopeful Aspect

But let me now suggest a different and more hopeful aspect of "alienation" which is also directly relevant to today passing into the future.

In important respects, advanced societies are too comfortable and we call them "affluent"; they are too achieved and we say they are "establishments." Such a condition is stifling; it cuts one off from meaning, which is given only in the risky notion of growth. For example, some psychotherapists jocosely speak of the "California syndrome," referring to people who have grown up with every advantage and satisfaction and then break down at 40, complaining, "Life has passed me by." Certainly the young of the middle-class feel a frustration that leads them either to senseless delinquency or to efforts to make a better world on new premises.

Among dissenting college students, it seems that just because they have been economically secure, they transcend economic motives. Sure of $5,000 a year, they do not need to compete for $20,000. Similarly, since they come from respectable homes, they can go to jail without disgrace. But this is not necessarily a sign of lack of commitment. On the contrary it may mean a forward step in rich societies: toward productive enterprise, social service, lively community, as goods in themselves, no matter what the economic and personal costs.

Frustration Is Many Things At College

By Phyllis Hummer

Frustration is . . .

Peanut butter and marmalade. A Saturday night date and no hot water. Spring vacation and no where to go — or no one to share it with.

Mashed potatoes six times a week — rice the seventh. A windy day and no hair spray. A telephone that is out-of-order. Someone else's letter in your mailbox.

A fuzzy sweater and a date with a dark suit. Studying for a test and then not having it. Studying for a test and then flunking it.

Getting up for an 8:00 class, only to find your prof didn't come.

Trying to sleep while the girls upstairs are exercising. Bucket seats.

Good news and no one to tell it to. A quarter and a "Correct change only" sign on the Coke machine.

A lost contact lens. Oxford cloth and a dry iron. When your bank account is overdrawn.

An alarm clock. A run in your last pair of hose.

Episcopals Sponsor Lenten Observances

A series of Wednesday evening "Meditations of Hope" will feature the observance of the six-week Lenten season at Johns Memorial Episcopal Church in Farmville.

All members of the Farmville and Hampden-Sydney communities are invited to attend brief liturgical services to be held on six consecutive Wednesday evenings at 7:30 o'clock, beginning March 2.

Sponsored by the church's Canterbury Club, the special services will bring to Farmville well-known Episcopal clergymen of Virginia who will speak on the following topics: March 2 — "For the Anxious"; March 9 — "For the Lonely in Heart"; March 16 — "For Those Who Seek, but Have not Found"; March 23 — "For Those Who Bear Heavy Burdens"; and March 30 — "For the Lost." A Holy Week service is scheduled for Wednesday, April 6, at 7:30 p.m.

Another special feature of the local Lenten observance will be the visit of Dr. Christopher Fitzsimmons Allison, associate professor of ecclesiastical history of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee.

A noted radio speaker, Dr. Allison has appeared frequently on the Protestant Hour and is an articulate spokesman for contemporary Christianity.

He will speak in the Parish House at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, March 3, and Friday, March 4. On Sunday morning, March 5, he will preach at the regular 11 o'clock service in the church.

Blood Mobile Gets Donations From Students

On February 17 the Bloodmobile, in a joint visit to Longwood and Hampden-Sydney, exceeded its 150 pint quota by 39 pints.

The program of the bloodmobile was four fold. There was an appeal for plasma for use in Viet Nam, an emergency need for 18 pints of O positive blood for open heart surgery at Duke, a chance to give the people in Cumberland the opportunity to make up their blood bank deficit, and to give credit to Longwood and Hampden-Sydney in their blood banks.

Held in the Tabb Rec, the Blood Bank had to stay open later than planned in order to accommodate all the volunteers. The Red Cross set up eight units in the rec. There were also two stereos at both ends of the room, a blackboard in order to tally the number of pints given by competing H-S fraternities and LC classes, and a box was provided for letters to servicemen in Viet Nam. WFLO broadcasted remotely from outside the Tabb Hall and interviewed students.

Merchants, individuals from Farmville, and the Slater Food Service contributed to the needs of the campaign. The volunteers consumed three cases of sixteen ounce Cokes, two and a half hams in sandwiches, three hundred cookies and the ten cans of juice.

Plans are already being made for next year's visit. Two of the proposed ideas are to expand the visit to two days and to have live entertainment for those who are waiting.

will be "Some Chemical Applications of Lasers" and the public is invited to attend. Dr. Lippincott will also present lectures on "Hydrogen Bonding" and "The Chemical Applications of Infrared Spectroscopy" to chemistry classes at both colleges. The three-day visit, divided between the two schools, will include informal discussions with members of the science staffs about curriculum and research problems. In addition, chemistry students will have an opportunity to discuss work in graduate school's, careers in chemistry and related fields, and the impact of curriculum developments in secondary school sciences on undergraduate college education.

Dr. Lippincott is a physical chemist who has conducted research in infrared, far infrared, and Raman spectroscopy, chemical applications of lasers, theoretical calculations on molecular structure, hydrogen bonding, and high pressure spectroscopy. This is the first time that a visiting scientist has come to Longwood College under the American Chemical Society Program. Hampden-Sydney College has participated in the program for several years.

will be to provide a background for the full cultural appreciation of the coming attraction, "Androcles and the Lion" to be presented by the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongs. The program will be held on March 17, 18 and 19.

Beorc Eh Thorn has been active on campus in developing student awareness of all forms of English including literature, linguistics, and drama. Plans for the future include sponsorship of several speakers and panel discussions.

The members of Beorc Eh Thorn are hopeful that all students will take advantage of the intellectual opportunities available to them through the activities of this honorary society. All students and professors are cordially invited to attend this semester's first function of Beorc Eh Thorn.

tras of London, Vienna, Berlin, Brussels, Madrid; the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, the Danish Royal Orchestra, the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, and many others. In this country they include such great orchestras as the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

While he is best known — and best loved — as a recitalist, Souzay has enacted many of the roles of the standard operatic repertoire as well as of such lesser known works as "Venu and Adonai," "Did and "Aeneas" and "Le Mariage Secret." To these European performances can be added his much lauded performance in "Orfeo" in New York. In September, 1963 he opened the season of the Paris Opera in the title role of "Don Giovanni."

Equally at home in oratorio, he has sung most of the masterpieces of this genre with leading orchestras and choral groups around the world.

A modern troubador, but a troubador with a difference, is Gerard Souzay. Like his medieval counterpart, he travels throughout the world, acquiring the spirit and the art of each place he visits and, in return, giving to each the benefits of his international art. But unlike many of the ancient troubadors, he is an artist of the highest caliber, a studiously developing and maturing his art with each performance, with each new addition to his ever-growing repertoire. To the art he brings an understanding and appreciation of all the other arts and the enthusiasm of a profound and searching intellect. That is why an evening of music with Gerard Souzay has always been recognized as something special.

Former LC Student

Publishes Poetry Volume

Eleanor Randolph Kevan, a former student of Longwood College, has written a book of poems entitled My Best to You: Poems 1959-1966, which is being published by the Plummer Printing Company of Petersburg. The book will be released within the next week, and will be promoted in Farmville by the Waynesboro Book Shop.

The 48-page paperback edition is dedicated to Dr. Richard K. Meeker, a former professor of English at Longwood, and to Dr. Kurt M. Mortizer, Miss Kevan's personal doctor.

While a student at Longwood, Miss Kevan submitted several poems to Colonnade. During her freshman year, her blank verse poem entitled "Song of Darkness" won first prize in the annual Colonnade literary contest. Her sophomore year her poems "Broken Pattern" and "Foghorn" won first prize and honorable mention respectively. All of these poems are included in Miss Kevan's new book.

English and sociology were Miss Kevan's favorite subjects when she attended Longwood. She later attended Richard Bland College in Petersburg for one semester. Her college career was interrupted several times due to illness. Although unable to attend college steadily, Miss Kevan nevertheless was able to maintain a constant flow of poetry.

Currently Miss Kevan is employed by the Petersburg General Hospital as a trainee for dietary work. Besides enjoying her job, Miss Kevan's hobbies include reading, writing, needlepoint, and listening to all forms of music.

Infirmary Staff Improves Looks Of Infirmary

By Mary Edgerton

The infirmary is now an attractive place to stay. Our nurses have done much to enhance the appearance of the infirmary over the years. Each has adopted a project to better the infirmary and hope to make it a more pleasant place to stay.

In the last several years iron-post beds have been replaced by standard hospital beds and bedside tables have been obtained that were not previously available. The overhead bed lights and the button-closing system have been installed recently, and the porch has been redecorated and furnished nicely.

Another interesting fact is that four years ago a girl could not smoke at all while in the infirmary. However, now we can smoke on the porch. This resulted from the efforts of our nurses.

Just recently the nurses succeeded in getting the infirmary painted. Instead of the old, dull walls they are now freshly painted with the largest room painted in pink and the other rooms in blue and white which brighten the infirmary considerably. Mrs. Fouk made curtains trimmed to match the freshly painted walls. The nurses are now hoping to get the rest of the infirmary floor tiled to increase appearance and for hygienic reasons. The latest addition for the infirmary that the nurses are hoping for is a television. A TV set would greatly add to the pleasure and comfort of girls that are well enough to be up for a short time but not well enough to attend classes.

If each member of the student body would contribute a small amount of money, the cost of a television could be easily raised. Our nurses have tried and are still trying to help us, so let's see what the student body can do to help our nurses and ourselves.

Further information about a money raising campaign will be announced at a later time.

Class Of 1967 Enjoys Concert And Dance

The Junior class is now settling down to serious studies again after a successful week-end of dining, dancing, and ringing. It appears from comments overheard from members of the Junior class as well as from other Longwood students, that the 1966 Ring Dance was a smashing success.

The week-end opened with a concert which lasted approximately two hours and starred Otis Redding, popular singer of rock 'n' roll, and his touring band.

The week-end opened with a concert which lasted approximately two hours and starred Otis Redding, popular singer of rock 'n' roll, and his touring band. The highlight of the Ring Dance was the ring figure, at which time the girls received their class rings from their escorts. After all the couples passed through the figure and were presented, the members of the Junior class and their escorts led the first dance.

After the dance, which ended at 1:00 a.m., there was a breakfast for the Juniors and their escorts only.

2:00 a.m. found many Juniors coming wearily but happily back into their respective dormitories. So closes another chapter in the history of Longwood's big week-ends. Now everyone is looking forward to Spring Vacation!

Radio Series Opens Season At Longwood

Whitehead, Shirley Timberlake, Frances Payne, and Courtney Fox are working to learn about the equipment so they will have some knowledge of the console when they take the course next semester. Working with these girls are Ann Tweedy and Vickie Jester who helped produce last semester's program entitled "Ricking Around."

The girls produce a variety of programs that cover the span of comedy to tragedy. However, the program has some serious drawbacks since it is taken for non-credit. The show has to be produced and recorded during one hour on Mondays, and something has to be done so that each participant can work out his own part. As it stands now, "SRO" has the status of an extra-curricular activity.

Institute To Feature Well Known Lecturers

by Janet Faires

The next program of this year's Institute of Southern Culture will be held on March 11 in two parts — one at 4:00 p.m. and the other at 8:00 p.m. both in the Student Lounge.

At 4:00 p.m. Dr. Rupert V. Vance, Professor of Sociology at the University of North Carolina, will speak on "Urbanization of the South" and that night "Speech Patterns of the South" will be the topic of Dr. Raven McDavid, Professor of Linguistics at the University of Chicago. Dr. Vance is one of America's leading sociologists. He has been President of the Southern Sociological Society in 1958, the American Sociological Society in 1958, and the Population Association of America in 1952. He began teaching at U. N. C. in 1945. Before this he served as a visiting professor at the University of Texas, Louisiana State University, Columbia University, the University of Chicago, and Harvard University.

Dr. Vance wrote Human Factors in Culture, six monographs on various problems of the South's population and land, and Human Geography of the South, which received the Mayflower Cup award in 1952.

Dr. Vance, who was graduated from Henderson - Brown College in 1920, received his M. A. from Vanderbilt and his Ph. D. from U. N. C. In 1951, Lord and Taylor cited his work for one of four annual awards on American Design for Living. Hendrix College awarded him the honorary title of LL. D. In 1963, Dr. Vance received the Thomas Jefferson Award, which is given to the person "whose life and work is the best tradition and spirit of Thomas Jefferson."

Dr. McDavid, who has taught at Chicago since 1953, received his B. S. from Furman University in 1931, and his M. A. and Ph. D. from Duke.

He has served on the faculties of the Citadel, Michigan State, Southwestern Louisiana Institute, and the Western Reserve University. He has also had several visiting appointments at a number of colleges and universities.

Dr. McDavid is Editor of the Linguistic Atlas for the Middle and South Atlantic States, which is being compiled for publication. He is Vice-President of the American Dialect Society and was a Senior Fulbright Lecturer at the University of Mainz in West Germany this past summer. He is noted for his 777 page abridgement of H. L. Mencken's The American Language. Virginia Bedford, Chairman of the Institute, remarked, "We are very fortunate in having two such prominent men to visit our campus."

Souzay Will Perform In Jarman Tonight

Baritone Gerard Souzay will perform tonight in Jarman Auditorium for the third Artist Series at Longwood this year.

The French singer made his American operatic debut in 1960 with the New York City Opera Company, portraying the role of Monteverdi's "Orfeo." He returned to New York last year to sing a recital at Hunter College.

Gerard Souzay is a true musical artist in every sense of the word — as a recitalist, opera star, orchestral soloist, or on recordings, radio or television. It is little wonder that Mr. Souzay is one of the most sought after musicians in the world today.

GERARD SOUZAY

Ever since his successful debut here in 1960, Gerard Souzay has returned to our country for a part of each season to meet a heavy schedule of recitals and orchestral engagements. He has appeared with practically every major orchestra here, performing under our most distinguished conductors. He has sung at many of our country's leading festivals, including Tanglewood and the Casals festival in Puerto Rico. Mr. Souzay is in great demand at the great international music festivals. He is frequently featured in recital and with orchestra at Edinburgh and Salzburg and in opera and concert at Aix-les-Provence.

But only a small part of his time as a busy international artist is spent in America. His concert tours of Europe are usually sold out several seasons in advance. He has traveled to South America three times, Australia and New Zealand, and both North and South Africa. In one recent season he circled the globe, singing on five of the earth's six continents.

As a recording artist, Gerard Souzay also enjoys a unique position — unique in the selection of his works, in the outstanding quality of the performances, and in their high praise. His incredible versatility is best demonstrated in Capitol's album entitled "The World of Song." It contains a collection of folk songs in 17 different languages or dialects. The New York Herald Tribune named it "best vocal record of the year." Two Epic releases, songs by Faure and Schumann's cycle "Dichterliebe," demonstrate his mastery of both the French and German styles. Just the number of companies that have sought Souzay to record for them is impressive.

While he is best known as a recitalist, Gerard Souzay has enacted many of the roles of the standard operatic repertory. Equally at home in oratorio, he has sung most of the masterpieces of this genre with leading orchestras and choral groups around the world. He is also a modern troubadour, but with a difference. To music he brings an understanding and appreciation of all the other arts and the enthusiasm of a profound and searching intellect.

W. Leeper Heads Group; Evaluates School In Del.

Mr. W. G. Leeper, Professor of Business at Longwood, was in Wilmington, Delaware, from January 19-21 as chairman of a committee evaluating Gold Key Beacon Junior College of Delaware, which was seeking national accreditation. The committee evaluated the school's program of study, administration, buildings, faculty, and the utilization of the school to the community.

Serving on the committee with Mr. Leeper were Mr. Plevah, the State Superintendent of Business Education in Maryland, and Dr. Hamilton, the Vice-President of Pennsylvania State University. This evaluation was the first out-of-state one for Mr. Leeper, although he has evaluated business schools in Roskilde as well as Norfolk.

Lane Attends Meeting On Higher Education

Dr. Charles F. Lane, chairman of Longwood's History and Social Science Department, will go to Chicago to attend the 21st National Conference on Higher Education, which will take place from March 13-16.

The theme of the conference, which is sponsored by the Association for Higher Education of the National Education Association, will be "Higher Education Reflects on Itself and on the Larger Society."

Since there are forty discussion groups, each person attending will have to choose those which he wants to attend. Dr. Lane has chosen to attend "how much he feels will help him in his teaching at Longwood. They are 'What Does and Should Society Expect Higher Education

To Do for Women?" and "Problems of Evaluating Teaching."

There are many different general sessions which everyone will attend. These topics will be "Spotted Reality — Fragmentation, Isolation, and Conflict in Today's World," "Expectation of Students for Higher Education," "Changing Academic Society — New Images and Institutions for Students, Faculty, and Administrators," and "Future Status of Higher Education."

New Or Old "Traditions"

Tradition is a word often heard around the Longwood campus. One always hears "Oh, that's a tradition" or "It's traditional that we always..." Well, perhaps it is time that Longwood woke up and realized it can no longer afford to abide by all of its traditions.

Granted, this college will always need, and keep, some traditions, but at the rate of growth it is planning for, it must stop and put an end to many things. We should, by right and reason, keep some tradition, because that is what links us with the past, and gives us a history, but it is no longer 1884 — it is 1966, and enormous scope for the future will make Longwood a very different place by 1980. We must accept this change, and amend our "traditions" to go along with it.

Longwood has too long been living in the past. Right now there are rules and regulations that appear archaic to the current trends, and put our campus in a by-gone era. The world is passing Longwood by, and will continue to do so, unless we stop and take some action. We must comply with the standards of our day, or else we will be run over and forgotten.

This is not meant as an argument against tradition, it is merely the statement that Longwood must change its traditions. Sooner or later, we must all lose our hold on the past, and, while it might hurt at first, soon, too, we are all engrossed in our present, and then, rightfully, our future. This may take courage on the part of the student body and administration, but it is a war that will come, and will be won. We can make the proper adjustments, and learn to keep going. Just as widows shed their mourning clothes, and return to life, so Longwood must forget her past and concentrate on her future.

Traditions were made to be broken. The traditions that we make today should, and will, be broken tomorrow. New ideas will take their place, and these, in turn, will be replaced. Everything done should be done with the idea of semi-permanence. When we can accept this fact, we will be on the road to the future.

Alexander Pope, of the 18th century, wrote in his An Essay On Criticism the following lines:

"Be not the first by whom the new are tried, Nor yet the last to lay the old aside."

Our direction comes from the last line. We must not be last in the accepting of new ideas — we must continuously challenge our present traditions, and thereby pave the way for our future. This is not a new idea, and it will not be hard to do. But we must start now. When we accomplish this, we will be doing what man has been doing since the first dawn: we will be progressing. This is what Longwood College needs to do — to accept, and always constantly challenge, Progress. It is that simple: Progress.

Praise For 'Daily Dope'

A way to determine current events, at no expense or effort on the time of the learner, has long been needed. It is surprising how many girls know nothing of today's important happenings. Finally the system of Daily Dope has been revived, and the student body should rejoice at the prospect of people being informed. This may lead to their taking more of an interest in world affairs. Daily Dope may arouse interest enough so that even the "oblivious" ones will want to learn more, and maybe even read the paper themselves once in a while.

A very nice feature of the program, we feel, is the weather report. What girl really doesn't appreciate knowing whether it will snow tomorrow, or if she can finally assume her position on the roof? And it is very nice to receive some national level news, instead of just state and local happenings.

Perhaps the one complaint is the title — Daily Dope. It sounds rather juvenile for a college, where the students are expected to understand words like 'News Briefs', 'Today in the News', and 'News Clips'. However, Daily Dope is much appreciated, and we hope it can keep up the job it has started.

Costume Committee Sews On For Play

by Patsy Stryker

"Can I come in?" "Where are the scissors?" "Is this really her costume?" "Where's that white stuff?" "The scissors are under that chest?" "Ow! I just stabbed myself!" "Whose is this?" "Look in the top drawer!" "Oh, where's the tape measure?" "Did you get the trim for this?" "We really do need another pair of scissors." "Haven't you finished that yet?" "I can't find it." "Did you get that bill from Leggett's?" "Is there any more rust material?" "Why don't we get some more white thread?" "Gee, I need a coke." "Where are the scissors?" "Gang, let's hurry, we only have two more weeks!" "Slave Driver!"

Sound like a madhouse? It's not really, it's only the costume room on any night of the week hurrying to get costumes ready for the play. The Lion, for Andreolas and the Lion, the seamstresses sometimes get a little frantic. There are many problems to be contended with. Try these for a starter. Can you find 92 yards of white material in Farmville? or how about some magenta, red-orange, two shades of rust, two of brown and some blue? How do you assemble 50 yards of material into one toga? Then how do you put it on?

Though requiring a large amount of material, the costumes for this play are really quite simple. The three chief shapes are the chiton, the dalmatica, and the himation. The chiton is in the shape of a pillowcase and can either be above the knees, for the boys, or to the ankle, for the girls. The dalmatica is a sleeved version of the chiton. The himation is a large square piece of material which is worn like a toga. The most interesting costume is that of the lion. It is made of gold flannel, from a leopard pattern. The make, which is white, yellow, orange and brown, flows from a burlap hood.

These are the costumes which the audience will see on March 17, 18th and 19th, when Andreolas and the Lion is presented in Jarman Auditorium. Oh, and if anyone has an extra pair of scissors . . .

Women's Wiggle Produces Mirth; Texan's Theory

By Phyllis Hummer

A Texas professor's attempt to take the mystery out of a woman's wiggle has caused giggles among many glamorous movie stars.

Doctor Louis H. Paradise, Assistant Professor of Orthopedics at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School, Dallas, says there is no physiological reason for women to wiggle when they walk.

Australian-born Diane Cilento, actress and blonde wife of actor Sean Connery '09, says, "I don't believe it. Women wiggle naturally. They're more flexible creatures than men and more mobile. That's why they wiggle." Doctor Paradise said movies made of people walking showed that women who wiggle walk with short steps and stiff knees. This causes the hip bone to oscillate and this produces the wiggle.

Swiss-born actress Ursula Andress, described as "the finest piece of Swiss architecture after the Alps," went along with the professor. She believes wiggle is very pretty if done right, but it's not necessary.

What's your opinion about the wiggle theory?

PAUL GOODMAN

Asked about the criticism of the Vietnam war in the Senate, Senator Dodd of Connecticut said, "It is the price we pay for living in a free country." This routine response is quite taken for granted. But what an astonishingly negative estimate of the democratic process it is, as if free discussion were a weakness we must put up with in order to avoid a greater evil. To Milton, Shmon, or Jefferson such discussion was precisely the strength of free society; to them, truth was a power, admittedly weak but steady and cumulative, and in free debate the right course would emerge and prevail. In classical democratic theory there is no other method for truth to prevail, since there is no final authority but all the people, and therefore it is an advantage if there are combative opinions, widely disparate and searching.

Senator Dodd seems to have the following epistemology of democracy: we elect governors who then have inside information, through spies and secret diplomacy. They alone, therefore, can make policy and commitments. (Presumably we can repudiate these at the next election, but usually commitments lead to faits accomplis which make it hard to repudiate a policy.) More important there is a permanent group of selfless and wise experts who alone understand the technology involved e.g. material, strategy, and tactics; we must perforce do what they advise. The fact that they make bad predictions and, on the evidence, are partial or at least narrow in their commercial interests and political views, does not alter the picture. It follows that public discussion is irrelevant and harmful because divisive, but it is "the price we pay."

What is the attraction of such a diluted democratic faith? Partly it is our laziness, which Morris Cohen used to call the first principle of political theory. Mainly, I think, it is that we live with a sense of chronic low-grade emergency. Senator Dodd's is the philosophy of emergency, for in an emergency it is rational to concentrate temporary power in a few hands, to decide and make commitments, and for the rest to stick to the faits accomplis for better or worse. But since it is a low-grade emergency — nobody is invading San Francisco — we like to go on as usual, including criticizing, so long as it does not affect policy.

Unfortunately, this attitude keeps the low-grade emergency chronic. There is no way to get back to normal, no check on new faits accomplis, no accountability of the decision-makers, no chance for a philosophic view to emerge that might be realistic and effectual.

In the Senate debate itself, excellent and useful as it was, we saw that not a single Senator was able to raise basic human issues that could put the Vietnam situation in a fair light and perhaps undercut the dilemmas e.g. we live in a period of worldwide communication and spread of technology, and therefore of "rising aspirations"; yet a majority of mankind is fast becoming relatively and even absolutely poorer; hundreds of millions are starving who used to make do under simpler conditions. For our own country, it is really in our national interest to come on as a Great Power, tough about saving face and telling other people how to act or else? Are Englishmen, Frenchmen, and Dutchmen worse off since they bowed out, not to speak of Danes and Swedes who bowed out long ago? Most crucial of all, in the present era of One World and the atom bomb, is there not something baroque and unreal in the proud sovereignty of nation states and the legalisms of who has "aggressed" or whom?

Obviously such "anti-national" issues cannot be raised by Senator, even in a free debate. All the more reason why others of us must freely raise them, if we are going to make sense and perhaps live on at all.

New TV Craze: Batman, Robin Appear In Series

By Phyllis Hummer

Among their wildest fantasies, giddy comic-book addicts never dreamed they would see Batman and Robin (enacted by Adam West and Burt Ward) in a live-action adventure series.

American comics have long been read by kids for kicks, while grown-ups gather all sorts of profound meaning from the strips. Now television has brought the comics to the adults, disguised as "Batman." In the twice-a-week ABC-TV series, the pair fight crime from their incredible Batcave — a nuclear powered laboratory filled with gadgets as yet undiscovered by science.

This way-out show would have attracted lots only had it not been for the tremendous advertising done by the ABC network. We understand the skills above the Rose Bowl game read — "Batman is Coming!" And they didn't fail to get a play every hour on the hour for the Caped Crusader.

ECC, LC Spirit Draw Parallels In Column's Eye

(Editor's Note: The following is reprinted from the East Carolina newspaper for East Carolina College in North Carolina. It is a column by Randy Ryan, dated January 20, 1966. Perhaps Longwood could well benefit from his ideas on school spirit.)

Once again I will take my stand for school spirit. Ooops, did I mention a dirty word. Perhaps school spirit is no longer "in." Whatever the reason, it must be said a little too much to expect a student body of almost 8,000 to fill a gym structure which must also hold the few loyal townspeople and faculty that show up each week.

There are a few fans that show up each week, but the majority of students seem to find better things to do on the night of the game. Perhaps they throw rocks at the moon, or watch one of the moon shows on the idiot box, or come from behind, or what. Whatever the reason, they perform their certain move no further than the doorway while an exciting game is going on right here on campus.

There is no reason why we shouldn't draw more students than we do. The Pirates have won five of the six games they have played at home. Four of these victories have been exciting, come from behind, victories won in the final seconds. We have an exciting ball club, that plays brilliant ball at times and seldom lets down when they get on the short end of a 10 point spread. They always seem to creep and run their way back into the lead and come through with a flourish. Granted, the team does not have the best record in the conference, but that is no reflection on the team spirit.

Recently there has been a great push to make East Carolina a University. What kind of University has less than two thousand students show up? How easy is it to get a ticket for a Duke or U.N.C. game? To get a thousand tickets here all you have to do is walk in at game time. The apathy that exists on this campus is stunning. It makes a joke of any delusions of E.C.U. If the students won't respect their own team, how will any other schools respect them? It is a pathetic situation when a student says, "Get drunk, go made but don't be caught dead at a basketball game."

East Carolina has had a traditional lack of school spirit. We have had it with three years of almost perfect football, we have had it with three years of 500 basketball. It makes no difference if a team wins or loses, anything that might be considered a school oriented function never draws any response from the student body. It seems to have the opposite effect. East Carolina is one of those rare places where a guest may come to speak on an interesting and vital topic only to find that the speaker outnumbers the audience.

The old gym shakes with about

Longwood Scores Close With R-M, Westhampton

by Se'ena Lunsford

Longwood's Blue and White lost their game Tuesday against Randolph-Macon. The score was very close with Longwood losing 48-45. Yvonne Gunter was high scorer with 14 points and Dianne Davis second with 10 points. In the game against Westhampton on Saturday, Longwood's first team lost 53-32. The second team won their game 33-30. The score at the half of the second game was 18-9, Longwood's favor.

The varsity team played Robinson's team, a Junior Class team on Thursday afternoon at 5:00 p.m. The final score was 33-30, the varsity team winning by a small margin. The score at the end of the first quarter was 10-7 in favor of the varsity. Robinson's team led by the end of the first half. In the last quarter the varsity managed to tie the score and then go on to win the game with a basket and foul shot. The game was played in the blue and white spirit with only a few bruised elbows. This just goes to prove how tough the competition is among the class teams.

Batman, Robin Score Hit Show In TV Ratings

hero in his wild adventures, but grownups see "Batman" in a different vein — it fits in with the current pop culture. It's "camp" and so far out, it's in. Adam West is a trained athlete who relies on natural abilities and scientific devices in his war against evil, because the Crusader has no supernatural powers. Playing Batman's sidekick, Robin, is Burt Ward, a 20-year-old water skier. This wide-eyed adolescent is ever ready to deliver such profound orations as: "Gleeees!", "Holy barra-cuda!", and "Holy flypaper!"

Despite all the joking about the theme song of "Batman," Disco-theques have acquired a new dance, the "batstep," inspired by Batman himself.

But "Superman's" TV fans are still one ahead. "It's a Bird... It's a Plane... It's SUPER-MAN!" opens this month as a Broadway musical.

Spotlight Sees Active LC Lady-Karen Ruder, '66

The Sports Spotlight this week is on Karen Ruder, a senior from Rochester, New York. Karen, who is student teaching now in George Wythe High School in Richmond, has been active in many phases of student life at Longwood.

Karen has participated in many class sports, in addition to having been on the varsity hockey and varsity archery teams. Swimming has been one of Karen's major interests and she has been in several water pageants.

Karen is a member of the H2O Club and Longwood Players. She has also been a member of the A. A. Council.

Karen has been a member of The Rotunda staff for several years. This year she is Sports Editor for The Rotunda.

As can be seen by her many interests, Karen has been an active participant in student life at Longwood.

Ath. Assoc. Adopts New Constitution

The Athletic Association adopted its new constitution on Monday night, Feb. 28. Elections are now being held to fill the offices created by the new constitution.

A number of changes have been made in the structure of the A. A. An A. A. Board, which consists of 15 elected members, will replace the A. A. Council, which had a total of about 50 members, only four of whom were elected.

There will now be two representatives from each class instead of just one. There will also be three new chairmen, one for each season of the school year, to co-ordinate the work of the managers whose sport is played in their season.

The A. A. Board will consist of four officers, the eight class representatives, and the three season sports chairmen.

The A. A. will continue to carry on its usual activities, with a few additions. Besides the traditional Color Cup, the A. A. is introducing a Class Cup. Some activities such as swimming and tennis will involve class competition and points will be awarded toward this new Cup. Points will now be awarded for the Song Contest. These points will also go toward the Class Cup.

The A. A. will continue to award blazers to girls who have accumulated a certain number of points in sports activities.

Fai Brown is the president of the A. A. Other officers include Connie Spradlin, vice-president; Peggy Wilkins, secretary; and Carol Blythe, treasurer. The faculty advisor of the A. A. is Miss Heintz.

Class Basketball Leads To Colors For LC Players

Have you seen your class team in action yet? Each class competes in friendly but competitive games. All of the teams have had their share of wins and losses, and spirit is never lacking.

The freshmen teams call themselves the Foul Shots. The Mary Ha Ha's, and the Sneakers. The sophomore teams play under the names Hooper, Hall, and the Unpredictables. HSM, and Robinson are the junior teams. The senior team is the Red Debs.

Color teams will be chosen from the class teams by four members of the varsity team. The selection will be made on the basis of teamwork and skill, and announced on March 11.

FROM THE BOARD

In the past two weeks Student Government has initiated several new programs to help students become better informed:

1. Daily Dope—Monday thru Thursday qualified students interested in current affairs present a news cast of dinner. It is hoped that this service will keep Longwood students up-to-date on world, national, and local affairs.

2. Speaker Program—the second in a series of programs entitled "The Modern Student" sponsored by Student Government will be presented on March 23, at 7 p.m. in the Student Lounge. At this time Mr. Tallison will speak on "Academic vs. Social Life." These programs are being presented to help us better understand the problems and challenges facing today's student.

3. Bulletin Board—in order to keep all students well informed of all the activities of Student Government a new bulletin board has been installed in the New Smoker. This bulletin board will be shared by Legislative Board, Judicial Board, and House Council and will serve to give students immediate notice of the activities of each branch of Student Government.

This year a Student Handbook committee has been instituted. It is hoped that a committee of this type will lighten the burden of the Handbook editor, and therefore improve the quality of the publication. Susan Goodes was elected Handbook editor; Nancy Young, assistant editor; and Pam McGehee, typist.

In order to fully explore the possibilities of NSA on our campus Student Government has formed an NSA committee. This committee consists of:

Sandy Byrum, NSA co-ordinator
Kay Collins, assistant co-ordinator
Diana Johnson, junior representative
Margaret Bridges, sophomore representative
Kathy Stone, sophomore representative
Judy Forrester, freshman representative
Mr. Tallison, faculty representative
Mr. Bird, faculty representative
Mr. Scholnick, faculty representative

Members of the student-faculty Academic Affairs Committee have been chosen. These girls were selected by a screening committee composed of the executive board of the Legislative Board and the faculty representative to the committee. The girls are:

Mary Virginia Manson, Senior

'Androcles And The Lion' Premieres In Jarman

Androcles and the Lion will be presented by the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights in Jarman Auditorium.

The play by Bernard Shaw is based on an old fable about Androcles who meets a lion and removes a thorn from its paw, thus obtaining its friendship. They meet a second time when Androcles, a Christian, is thrown to the lion in the Roman arena.

Androcles is being played by Jim Rhodes, a Hampden-Sydney freshman who played Touchstone in As You Like It. The part of his wife will be portrayed by Linda Long, who carried the lead in The House of Bernard Alba. Lynn Gardner and Mike Weddle also have two leading roles as Lavinia and the Captain. Carolyn McAdoo, a junior, is assistant director.

The farce is an exaggerated comedy with the exception of certain scenes between the Captain and Lavinia, who is Shaw's mouthpiece in presenting his ideas.

Dr. Patton Lockwood, who is directing the play, has incorporated seven extra parts for vestal virgins. The scene which was written in Latin by Dr. Lockwood required much research. Modern slogans such as "Put a Tiger in Your Tank," and "You're in the Pepsi Generation" appear also in Latin over the archway of the coliseum.

The set design will also include unusual and interesting additions. One will be a projection of the Roman coliseum onto the stage by a special projector. Another interesting feature of the set design will be a dividing set. At one point when Androcles walks through a passageway into the arena the set will divide into two halves.

All the additions and features of this play should make it very entertaining.

Oenslager Talks To LC Students During Assembly

Yesterday at 1:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium, Donald M. Oenslager spoke at the assembly on the topic of "The Growth of the Educational Theatre." He appeared through the Visiting Scholars Program, from University Center in Virginia.

Mr. Oenslager formerly was a professor of Scene Design for the Drama Department at Yale University and also Artist-in-Residence at the American Academy in Rome. He has also been Director of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, Parsons School of Design, and the American Theatre Wing.

Oenslager has authored one book, entitled Scenery Then and Now.

Many Longwood Alumnae will return to the college this weekend to celebrate Founders' Day. The construction of the new Panhellenic Dorm is one of the many changes they will note in their old alma mater.

'Gyre' Sponsors Contest For Writing, Art Work

by Barbara Garrison

The Gyre literary board has announced plans for a Fine Arts Contest to be held this spring.

This year the contest will involve art work as well as various types of writing. The deadline for all art work and all typed writing must be April 15. All untitled writing must be submitted by April 1.

There will be five sub-categories of writing, each of which will be judged separately. These will include prose impressions, poetry, short stories, essays, and one-act plays.

Student art work will be judged under three categories. These are drawing and painting, sculpture, and photography.

There will be an award of $10 given for first place in each of the eight sub-categories. Second place winners will receive $5.00. In addition, all winning and second place student work will appear in the next issue of the Gyre.

Three faculty members and one student will judge the writing. The art work will be judged by one faculty member and one student. The names of the judges will be announced at a later date.

If possible, student work should be typed. The material should be double-spaced on regular typing paper with no comments or grades on the paper. Students are asked to write their names and the titles of their work on a separate piece of paper and clip it to the manuscript, which will bear only the title of the work.

Work may be submitted to Kaye Catron, Freda Richards, or any member of the Gyre literary board. Art work should be submitted to Betsy Taylor.

There will be a meeting of those student interested in attending Hockey Camp in September.

The meeting will be held on March 16th at 6:45 p.m. in the Freshman parlor.

Should a student not be able to attend this meeting, she should see Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt at her earliest convenience.

Many Thanks,
Eleanor Bobbitt

College MENC Hosts Children's Musical Program

Longwood Chapter No. 396 of Music Educators National Conference will sponsor demonstration of musical activities given by fifth and sixth graders of Miss Zona Angie from Highland Park Elementary School, Roanoke, Va.

A native of Roanoke and a classroom teacher at Highland Park for the past eleven years Miss Angie, in addition to her regular duties, coordinates the physical education program for all grades in the school, is chairman of the annual science fair and is active in both local and state teachers' organizations. She also leads a Girl Scout troop, a youth group in her church, and devotes time to working with the physically handicapped and mental retarded individuals in her area. She has spent many extra hours working with her class in various phases of the music program.

The group of sixteen to twenty children will demonstrate various musical activities such as square dancing and playing song flutes. They will be accompanied by chord organ and some of the rhythm instruments they have made.

The program will be given especially for the purpose of student and teacher observation of elementary music technique and accomplishments.

Other members of the visiting group who will be guests in the dining hall, will include Senator and Mrs. William Hopkins, Mr. Thomas Gagne, Highland Park Elementary School principal, and his family, and other school patrons.

The program will be given Thursday, March 24, at 5:00 p.m. in Riser Ball. Admission is free, and all interested students and faculty are invited to attend. Members of Music 327 and 324 are especially invited.

Longwood Observes Founder's Day, 1966

Longwood College will celebrate Founders Day in a two-day observance on the campus, Friday and Saturday, March 18-19.

Although the college's origin dates back to 1839, as the Farmville Female Seminary, or Academy as it was sometimes called, the occasion next week will mark Longwood's 75th consecutive annual founding observance since the college became a state institution for education in higher learning for women in 1884.

Alumnae will begin arriving on the campus on March 18, with registration scheduled in the Rotunda from 3-9 p.m. Following dinner at 8 p.m. in the college dining hall, alumnae will attend a college play in Jarman Auditorium. There will be open house in the Alumnae House at 9:30 p.m.

The main Founders Day program is scheduled for March 19 at 10:45 a.m. in Jarman Auditorium, at which President James H. Newman will preside. An alumnae luncheon will be held at 1 p.m. in the senior dining hall, following which will be the annual business meeting of the Association of Alumnae.

Among other events scheduled for March 19 are: coffee in the Alumnae House, sponsored by the Farmville Alumnae Chapter from 9:15 to 10:30 a.m.; reception given by President and Mrs. Newman from 4-5 p.m. in the Student Building Lounge; and open house in the Alumnae House at 9:30 p.m. following presentation of "Androcles and the Lion" in Jarman Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

Founder's Day Program

The traditional Founder's Day program in Jarman Auditorium on Saturday, March 19, at 10:45 A.M., will feature the five Longwood alumnae selected for this year's edition of Outstanding Young Women of America. A panel consisting of five Longwood alumnae will present a sequence of informal five-minute talks.

Betsy Howard Hutchinson, '64, will speak on "What's New in Music." In addition, she will give a short performance at the organ. Suzanne Prillman Lowry, '56, will comment on "New Developments in Textiles." Jo Savage Orser, '62, will give a short talk on "Alumnae Around the World." Barbara Bishop, '60, will speak on "Man and Art in 20th Century." Helen Page Warner, '56, will focus upon "Teaching Foreign Languages in 1966." Miss Warriner will also summarize the ideas expressed by the panel.

The idea behind the panel is to provide its members with an opportunity to share information and points of view that they consider of value and interest to an audience of alumnae, faculty, and any students in attendance. It is the thought of the program committee that the audience would enjoy and appreciate timely comments that focus upon the essence of focus upon "heart issues."

Heads of the departments represented by the five alumnae present the panels in short introductions. This involves the following department chairmen: music — Dr. John W. Molnar; Home Economics — Mrs. Neil H. Griffin; Art — Miss Virginia Bedford; Foreign Languages — Miss Helen Draper (acting chairman); and Department of Education, Psychology and Philosophy — Dr. Charles H. Patterson, Jr.

The overall theme for this Founders Day celebration is "Tradition — Excellence — Challenge, Our Alumnae Mission 1891 - 1966," in recognition of this 75th consecutive annual celebration. At the annual Alumnae Luncheon, Mrs. Caroline Eason Roberts, of Staunton, past president of the Association of Alumnae, will review alumnae activity in response to the broad theme of this year's anniversary celebration.

Mrs. Helen Smith Crumpler, of Roanoke, is current association president and will preside at the alumnae luncheon.

BSU Students Sent By SMO As Missionaries

Three Longwood Baptist students were notified last week they had been appointed summer missionaries by the Virginia Baptist Student Union. The Longwood students were Phyllis Boykin, Linda Enright, and Courtney Fox.

Phyllis, a senior art and French major from Chesapeake, will be sent to Jamaica, Linda, who is a junior sociology major from Richmond, will be working at a Goodwill Center in Gary, Indiana. Courtney, a senior speech and dramatics major from Richmond, will be at a work camp in Southwest Virginia.

Phyllis will be one of thirty American students sent to Jamaica this summer under the Baptist Student program. She will leave July 15 for a week's orientation in Miami and will then spend five weeks in Jamaica. The Jamaica-bound students will work in teams of four. They will be living in the homes of the native Jamaicans and will be conducting Vacation Bible Schools in various parts of the island.

Both Linda and Courtney will be working over a ten-week period. Much of Linda's work will resemble a day-school situation. She will also be conducting Vacation Bible Schools.

Courtney will be one of ten students at the work camp. Their work will probably involve the construction of a church building. On Sundays, the students will go in teams to areas, churches to hold services.

None of the students involved in this summer mission program will receive a salary. Their expenses will be paid by the donations of Virginia Baptist students to the Summer Missionary Offering, better known as SMO.

Lockwood Attends, Judges Competition

Dr. Patton Lockwood, Assistant Professor of Speech and Drama, judged a district one-act play festival on March 9. The festival was held in Groveton, Virginia, and Dr. Lockwood took his directing class along to view the productions. Accompanying Dr. Lockwood were Linda Butler, Courtney Fox, Pat Holmes, and Mildred Gwynne. Of the eight plays presented, three were directed by former Longwood students, now alumnae. They were: Pauline Perrow, Mary Walker, and Mary L. Lander, whose play "A Cup of Tea," won a superior rating, and will go on to the state competition. The other play awarded a superior rating was "The Prisoner," an original play by a student, directed by David Merricks.

All on the trip said they found the judging and trip very interesting and informative, and were especially impressed by the student eagerness and participation in high school drama. It was Dr. Lockwood's first time at judging a play festival.

The Feministic Trend

It has often been observed that women's lives are divided into two phases: first, early years of training and schooling, and then an adult life of worthy occupation.

In earlier days, a woman's life was also considered to have two phases, but of a different nature: first growing-up and being trained in the home and then an adult life devoted to husband and family.

This latter concept of the woman's role is greatly outdated. Longwood College has been proving this since 1884.

Through hard-earned work, "Longwood Ladies" and their sisters in other women's colleges have proved that intelligence has no gender, that women can perform as well as men in intellectual pursuits. It is now a generally accepted fact that a student's capacity is not connected with any distinction of sex, but that women have just as much right to higher education as men. This feminist battle has been won, thanks to pioneering women's colleges such as Longwood.

Women recognized in public and professional life are predominantly college graduates. Although many must yet battle the lingering prejudice and masculine assumption of superiority, the determined coed-grads are succeeding.

Often college administrators and instructors, among many others, fail to look realistically at this modern trend. Not all "femme" graduates are going to be unmarried independent career women. Along with educating women of high intelligence and ability who indicate a wealth of talent in our society, we need to consider also the women of average intelligence.

Perhaps a more direct approach to a comprehensive liberal arts education is the answer — a curriculum that is focused in developing the average young woman's ability to learn for herself so that whatever she chooses to do, and whenever she chooses to do it, she will have the ability to meet her challenges. This might be further achieved by paying less attention to the factual aspect of college courses, requiring less memorization, and stressing individual thought more strongly. What we need in college, above all, is a stimulating intellectual experience that will continue throughout our lives to provide the foundation of a life of growth and fulfillment. Are we getting this experience?

— P. J. H.

I'll Miss You

(Editor's Note: The following is a reprint from the "The Breeze", Madison College.)

Somewhere between the sibling rivalries of childhood and the married bliss of adult life comes a versatile creature known as a roommate.

She can be found sharing your closet, borrowing your clothes, answering your phone calls, meeting your dates, and smoking your cigarettes.

She is comfort in curlers, sympathy in slippers, wit in Weejuns, and the only human being who sees the real "you" all of the time.

Incoming freshmen worry about her, mothers scrutinize her, persistent beaux befriend her, and you use her for a housekeeper, confessor, nurse, drycleaner, seamstress, hairdresser, and fashion consultant.

She is the one who sees you through last minute term papers, blind dates, times of financial stress, diets, room inspections, and trips to the infirmary.

You may scream at her, criticize her, forget her birthday, or ruin her best sweater, but you can't shake her faith in humanity.

And sometimes towards the end of a year of frustrations, flunked courses, and lonely weekends, she can make it all seem worthwhile with a few simple words — "I'll miss you."

Sunbound Rooftoppers Begin Spring Basking

BY PHYLLIS HUMMER

Once again, sun worshippers have been lured from their dorm dwellings by the powerful spirit of nature.

On hot rooftops dwell undomesticated youthful bodies — to worship this slanting spirit of fire, of warmth, of light — of sun.

Rebelling. Returning to nature. Fleeing the confines of the classroom, communing with this natural deity. Turning the tables—submitting to the rites of spring. Up! up! my friend, and quit your books.

Or surely you'll grow double: Up! up! my friend, and clear your looks; Why all this toil and trouble?

The sun, above the mountain's head,

A freshening luster mellow
Through all the long green fields
Has spread,
The first sweet evening yellow.

Books! 'tis a dull and endless strife;

Come, hear the woodland linnet,
How sweet his music! on my life,
There's more of wisdom in it.

And hark! how blithe the throats sing!

He, too, is no mean preacher:
Come forth into the light of things,
Let Nature be your teacher.

She has a world of ready wealth,
Our minds and hearts to bless—
Spontaneous wisdom breathed by health,

Truth breathed by cheerfulness.

One impulse from a vernal wood
May teach you more of man,
Of moral evil and of good,

Than all the eagles can.
Sweet is the lore which Nature brings;
Our meddling intellect
Misshapes the beautiful forms
Of things.

Enough of Science and of Art;
Close up those barren leaves;
Come forth, and bring with you

Comic Strips Lend Variety To Triviating

By Phyllis Hummer

Trivia, Trivia everywhere . . . all to the good.

The Rotunda has featured several articles on this up and coming game of wit, and now brings another new field into the game — the comics. Lifelong newspaper comic readers may astound themselves by recognizing bygone characters of the "strips."

In the game of Trivia, you and your opponents match knowledge of all sorts of unimportant, irrelevant, but interesting details of whatever field you serve up. The purpose is not only to win by knowing more and outsmarting your partner, but to stimulate interesting conversation.

Trivia started among college students and, in the last year or two, has spread to all age groups.

The game isn't concerned with minute facts such as those found in encyclopedias. There's no fun in probing for cold, hard facts such as who invented the can opener, what was the name of Magellan's ship, or how tall is Washington Monument.

For this reason the game has been concerned mainly with movies, shows, radio and TV programs, and other areas of the entertainment field. Television commercials (which are so very familiar to all of us) are inevitably subjects for triviating.

Playing the game is easy — you simply ask your opponents a question to which you know the answer and, you hope, they don't.

Because newspaper comics have been around since 1892 and have been read avidly by the majority of Americans ever since, they offer an even richer field for triviating than the movies or television.

Try some of these questions and see whether you're a Comic Genius—(Answers on Page 3).

1. Who is older, Mutt or Jeff?
2. In Polly and Her Pals, what was Pat's name?
3. What is the name of Beetle Bailey's girl-crazy sidekick?
4. What is Pogo's boyfriend's name?
5. Who is the peg-leg character in B. C.?
6. Who is the youngest member of the H. I. & L. family?
7. Who is Pogo's boyfriend?
8. What was the name of the mouse in Krazy Kat?
9. What was Superman's native planet?
10. What comic strip heroine was the victim of amnesia?

PAUL GOODMAN

Students and other travelers who go through Pennsylvania Station in New York City this winter can enjoy one of the comic experiences of our epoch. The old monumental station, with its astonishing vault, has been demolished, but the shell is being kept for a more profitable structure. Now winter winds freeze you while you wait and the ticket salesmen huddle in fur coats. Thunderous noises startle you and the sparks of welders shower round your ears. You cannot get a meal. NEW and WOMEN are somewhere in the bowels of the Long Island R. R., below. The operation of the trains goes on in make-shift tunnels.

Meantime, in glass cases (grimy with dust) on a temporary wooden wall, there is a splendid display of pictures of the New Pennsylvania Station that is going to happen many a moon from now. A poster proclaims its virtues: "New Modernized Railroad Terminal at 2 Pennsylvania Plaza. Featuring: Electronic Train Information, Moving Stairs, New Ventilation System for Air-Conditioning and Heat, Modern Lighting and Acoustics, Easy Access from All Points."

It is a triumph of Madison Avenue. It gives us the image and the public relations of reality almost as if we had the reality. In the conditions, it is quite impossible to read this sign without cracking up. (Unfortunately, the new design, by Charles Luckman Associates, is banal and skimpy.)

Students of several hundred colleges in the United States will recognize the analogy to the building boom taking place on their campuses. The few years of their careers in college are spent amid scenes of devastation. This is supposed to be transitional; but before one reconstruction is finished there always seems to be a new expansion in the works; and the community shape that used to exist — whether Ward, Green, or Quadrangle — has been irremediably destroyed. Also, it would not astound me if by the time the whole expansion has finally occurred, the idiosyncrasy of universal college — going might likewise be over; in 10 or 15 years some of these makeshift campuses may look like ghost towns.

Usually, but by no means invariably, there is an esthetic plan for the greater campus, namely a picture or model rendered obsolete by the next Federal or Foundation grant.

With the bulldozing and reconstruction, of course, there are the other concomitants of Expansion: the enrollment is excessive; students are processed electronically; they are housed three or four in a room meant for two; the curriculum is continually in process of readjustment; and professors are on the move, irritated away by competitive offers. I have seen all this now for ten years and the immediate future will be worse. A whole generation is being sacrificed.

I have no idea if the demolition and reconstruction of Penn Station is necessary or useful. But much of the campus expansion is both unnecessary and harmful. To begin with, I am not sold on the vastly increased college-going as the best way to invest more in higher education — rather than underwriting more direct means of access to many careers and some professions. Underwriting cultural enterprises like Little Theaters, local TV and radio stations, independent newspapers, and design offices; giving more of the Research and Development sub-fund to small firms that can train scientific apprentices.

When increased college-enrollment has been necessary, it has usually, in my opinion, been unwise to expand the existing schools rather than starting new small ones. I do not believe in the putative advantages of academic centralization; there is a good deal of rationalization to cover administrative imperialism. Certainly in big cities like New York or Chicago, it has been immoral and anti-social for universities to dislocate poor tenants and swallow whole neighborhoods.

A very important defect of the expansion has been in increase and freeze the dormitory method of housing. This is a poor way for most students to live; it is necessarily restrictive, and it is almost invariably more expensive for the students than sharing small apartments or cooperative houses. But it has been the inevitable result of the Federal subsidy for dormitories.

LC Group Goes To DC To See Moliere Comedy

Wednesday, March 2, 28 French students boarded the Longwood bus for a trip to Washington to see Moliere's L'Avare performed by the Comedie Francaise. The trip to Washington passed quickly, and Lisner Auditorium was found with minimum difficulty. The problem was what to do with the bus. An hour and a half later the problem was solved.

The Comedie Francaise was sponsored at Lisner Auditorium by the Washington Performing Arts Society. L'Avare (The Miser) by Moliere is a comedy about the miser Harpagon and his triple marriage plans for himself and his son and daughter.

After the performance the trusty Longwood bus carried the girls to Avignone Freres for a relaxed meal to end the evening.

Loyola Outlines Academic Plan

CHICAGO, ILL., (I.P.) — Loyola University has outlined a new credit plan that allows a student to earn full academic credit in a course by taking only the final semester examination.

Any full-time University student may earn up to four hours credit without attending class. A maximum fifteen semester-hours of credit can be earned in this way. The fee for any one examination equals the cost of one semester hour's tuition.

The student, in order to take advantage of this plan, must first obtain the signature of the chairman of the department offering the desired course.

Granddaughters Club Officiates As Hostess

The Longwood College Rotunda will be the scene of registration of 300 alumnae returning to campus March 18 and 19 to participate in this year's Founder's Day observance. The occasion marks the highlight of the year for the Granddaughters Club as its white clad members act as official college hostesses for the weekend.

Those taking an active part are: Carol Padua, Sue Swenney, Betty Ma Joy, Martha Hall, Mary Lou Goode, Alice Putney, Alice Habel, and Bonnie Jones, president of the club.

"Nike II" is one work in the modern sculpture collection of Carl Roseberg, which was on display in the exhibition room of the Lancaster Library.

Longwood Features Sculpture Exhibit

A provocative 19-piece group of modern sculpture by a nationally known artist is receiving the critical approval of Longwood college students and faculty who have seen the exhibit in the Exhibition Room of the Lancaster Library on the campus.

Presenting creative work by Carl Anderson Roseberg, associate professor of fine art at the College of William and Mary, the exhibit is designated as this year's "Longwood Purchase Exhibit" and includes carvings in stone, wood, alabaster, and numerous metal combinations that will be shown until March 15 and to which the public is invited.

One of the year's major exhibits at Longwood, the show is of special local interest because from the group the college will purchase its first piece of original sculpture for the permanent campus art collection.

Exhibited frequently in Virginia, works by Mr. Roseberg belong to permanent collections in the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, University of Iowa, and Springfield, Missouri Museum. Mr. Roseberg exhibited at the New York World's Fair in 1964.

A friend of Miss Nancy Leitch, of the Longwood art department, the popular 50-year-old sculptor has been a member of the William and Mary family since 1947. For many years he has been active in numerous professional groups interested in making art forms easily available to college group and the general public.

Current Film Courses Add Variety, Unique Flavor To College Studies

The best evidence that today's college student is having a love affair with the World of Film is indicated by the number of colleges and universities that now include film courses in their curriculums. In the March issue of Mademoiselle, Joan Rubin explores the many-faceted world of film-making and the reasons for its impetuous following among both undergraduates and graduate students. It is generally agreed that the best film programs are offered currently at the largest universities where training comes through doing.

The aim of film programs offered at such schools as Northwestern, Boston U., U.C.L.A., and Columbia is to turn out filmmakers rather than individuals skilled in a single area of production: "the creative, yet practical person who can write his own script, direct, and edit it." According to Mrs. Rubin, "Film has become the melting pot of academic pursuits," particularly at the graduate level. And if film courses appear to draw more men than women, it may well be, as Haig Manogian, acting head of N.Y.U.'s TV, motion picture and radio department, says, that "A film-maker must be someone with a poet's sensitivity and a mechanic's dexterity."

A degree in film promises no sure employment. Talent alone counts. What a film school can offer is on-the-job training and experience. Film schools generally provide the cameras and sound equipment and frequently assign each student a budget to defray his costs. There are also many independent sources willing to commission a promising apprentice in his early endeavors — in some cases with films for which he can earn class credits.

Once out of school, there are any number of film-making are as a graduate might choose to enter. The most successful independent producers are those who specialize in sex, sports or science films. Television offers a variety of outlets; companies which produce TV commercials and/or documentaries have many a beginner, but TV still remains the hardest nut to crack.

The "Underground Movie" — shrouded by mystery as it is — draws as its devotees the aesthetes and purists who view film as something other than — and much more than — a movie. More often than not, low budget features and experimental art films never even make costs. The best that film-makers hope for is to hit the festival circuit, and from there, a theater marquee.

In spite of the odds and the almost certain hardships, the Cult of Film continues to blossom at an incredible rate. The Gospel of the film-maker seems to be that things can be expressed in film for which there is no other way to express them. The art forms with a camera in one hand and a recorder in the other.

Frosh Production Gives "Rags To Riches" Story

by Carol Shelley

The spotlight is on the freshman class of 1969 tonight as they present their production, "From Rags to Riches and Back Again." In Jarman Auditorium, Karen Diehl will sing and dance her way to fame as she makes her debut as Katy Kelly.

"From Rags to Riches and Back Again" depicts the life of Katy, a poor girl whose father is the owner of The Shamrock Saloon, who rents her love of the place. However, Katy is attracted to the celebrities who perform at the saloon, such as the Spanish dancer, Nancy Alele, and folksinger Donna Barnes. It is here while mingling with "The Wingers" and the can can girls that Katy gets the first taste of the theater in her blood. She goes on to fame as a singer in vaudeville. There she appears at the Emerald Palace and captivates her audiences with such well known numbers as "Ma, He's Making Eyes at Me." Katy appears on stage with the greases such as Sara Gibbons who sings "Hey Look Me Over."

Katy's Troubles

However when Vaudeville dies so does the fame of Katy Kelly. Act III of the performance finds her waxing floors at the Green Room. But Katy is anything but bitter. She revels in watching Tricia Bates and Sharon McCusker the "Go Go Girls" and she recalls with nostalgia her own career when she listens to the melodious voice of Pam Edwards as she sings "Scotch and Soda."

The freshmen have been working for one month under the leadership of Becky Bartholomew, Chairman of the Production, which will be narrated by Emilie Gillespie.

It is traditional each year for the freshman class to stage a production not only to make money but especially to show their appreciation to the other members of the school who have been so helpful to them throughout their first year.

New editors for 1966-67 are standing, on left, Susan Woltz, Patsy Paul, and seated, Freda Richards.

"Richard III" To Be Offered In Jarman

A movie version of Shakespeare's Richard III, starring Lawrence Olivier, will be presented in Jarman Auditorium tomorrow evening, March 31, under the auspices of Beorc Eih Thorn. Starting at 7:30 p.m., the film will be free to all Longwood students and faculty.

Richard III is one of Shakespeare's early history plays, "a melodrama of glitter and violence as vigorous and bloody as his chief character." The story is of an ambitious nobleman who resorts to every form of treachery in order to gain the throne of England.

Planned in a richly-mounted color production, the movie stars some of the finest Shakespearean actors of our age. According to Time, "The cast that Olivier has assembled is a 'Who's Who' of the British theatre — Sir John Gielgud, Sir Ralph Richardson, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Claire Bloom, Pamela Brown — and they play, for the most part, with a remarkable even and deep-breathing power. Olivier himself interprets the title role with a mastery so complete that Richard III in this generation will surely never be himself again."

Richard III is one of three Shakespearean events that Beorc Eih Thorn will sponsor on from St. Niklaas, Belgium. The lecture included a short history of Belgium, its art and its political structure. The political structure is very interesting since Belgium is a monarchy ruled by King Baudouin and Queen Fabiola. The existing government structure underwent a crisis within the last two months and no resolution has been made yet. Miss Van Hulse also showed color slides of Belgian art, landmarks, architecture, and the beautiful Belgian countryside.

Members of Les Francophiles were surprised one day to find Brussels' world famous little boy missing from the poster by the Dean's office. He has disappeared many times before in Belgium, but is always found again. We are very worried about him. If anyone sees the little boy, would he please return him to Miss Van Hulse's mailbox since he does not speak English and is expected to return to Belgium with her this summer.

Alexander Talks To German Club On Scenic Arts

The German Club sponsored a lecture on March 24, by Mr. Robert Alexander, recent addition to the department of Speech and Dramatic Arts, on his experiences in Germany.

He visited Germany when he was among a small group selected to study at the Bayreuth Festival, which is devoted to the study of the art of the opera. Mr. Alexander, being interested in the technical aspects of the theater, spent most of his time studying techniques of scene design and lighting.

Talk Centers on Projection His talk was centered mainly around the projection of scenery onto a stage by special projectors. He showed many examples of this type of scenery as well as slides of Germany.

Mr. Alexander pointed out that the German theater, including the opera, was much more advanced and very different from that of America. Not only in techniques of staging and lighting, but, because of these, in the actual performance. A German opera may start as early as four o'clock. After the first act you can go out and get something to eat. When you come back the complicated lighting, and sometimes the structure of the stage itself, has been altered for the second act. When this is over you may go out and eat dinner to return and find the same results. It's easy to see how one opera can last as long as eight hours.

After Mr. Alexander answered questions which were raised about the German theater, the German Club held a reception.

Virginia Politics To Be Subject Of Next Forum

James Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond News Leader, will be at Longwood on Tuesday, April 19. Mr. Kilpatrick, sponsored by the Student Forum, will speak on Virginia politics at 7:00 in the Student Lounge.

Woodburn Class Travels To See Debate Meeting

Mr. Robert J. Woodburn, speech instructor at Longwood College, accompanied his debate class on March 29 to Buckingham Central High School for the District Debate Tournament.

Longwood will host a District Forensics Tournament on March 31, including competition in spelling, public speaking, prose and poetry. High schools from various surrounding counties will participate in this tournament. Mr. Woodburn is in charge of the meet and members of Speech 481 will serve as judges, as well as some of the more accomplished English majors.

Editorial Position

One of the major problems confronting the college newspaper, especially the editor of the paper, is the status of the editorial with respect to the newspaper and campus. There are two basic positions that and editorial can occupy — that of an organ dealing mainly with campus activities, or of delving into national and international problems, and bringing a wider scope, hopefully, to the students.

The Rotunda would here like to state to state its policy of being a college organ. However, it adds the stipulation that all matters appearing vital to student interest, no matter what field they lie in, will be taken up and discussed. We want to let it be known that we recognize our editorial right to discuss all topics. But we will not "run them into the ground," for there is only a limited amount that can be said about such things as the Berkeley Riots, our position in Viet Nam, the "Great Society," or Civil Rights before discussion of those topics becomes utterly useless and valueless.

If a current issue raises comment, and it is not a campus activity, or even pertinent to life on the campus (but considered important knowledge to the student body), then, by all means it may be editorialized. The editorial is our opinion, and it may be on any topic, ranging from such earth-shaking ideas as serving breakfast for a longer period each morning, to unimportant things like Red China assuming a seat in the United Nations. The editorial will be on a subject selected to make the reader, think, imagine, and hypothesize.

Student opinion on a subject, and disagreement, and criticism, will always be welcome in the form of Letters to the Editor. Not only is student opinion, but all opinion, such as that of the faculty and administration, warmly received.

Education For "Kicks"

What is college really doing for us? Are we getting our life's goal: education and a way of livelihood, or are we hope for reasons outside of the academic world? A brief scan of the current popular college activities will readily supply the answer.

We should rightfully start back a few generations, when college students concentrated on such earth-shaking acts as swallowing goldfish, sitting on flagpoles, and seeing who could dance the longest time non-stop. From this proud heritage we moved into the time of stuffing undergraduates into phone booths, and Volkswagen, and pushing beds across the Nevada deserts. More recently, however, we have given birth to the "cause," and the picket-line has become prevalent around the campus. Now it appears, students are disturbed by such deep inward ideals that their only recourse is to demonstrate, or block troop trains, or something of the sort.

This is not meant to belittle honest endeavors, or halt valid movements, but are the participants actually shouting the cause, or are they shouting to be shouting? Are they marching toward an objective, or are they marching to march? Are the goals true, or are the mobs that have taken to "protesting" simply doing it for a fad? Is it for a real purpose that they are hauled away from their sleep-in on the Capitol steps? Or is it just their "kick" to be hauled away, or to sleep-in?

Perhaps young America should look around and see where its efforts are really leading. Maybe we should see what our colleges offer besides unlimited opportunities in the field of social and political corrections. Maybe, if we look real hard, we could even find the possibilities of an education around somewhere... couldn't the meeting rooms plausibly be used as class rooms? Perhaps today's college student may begin to survey, and ponder, and find out if he really is getting what he came to college for... if his "kick" school might not also have a faculty, and curriculum within its doors.

Perhaps he can find a more suitable reason for being here, and with a little analysis of this reason, it may expand, and thusly, he will get more out of his college life. This, after all, is how adults are made.

Statistics Tell Tale: Beards On Boys 'In'

By Phyllis Hummer

Throughout the history of man, the wearing of a beard has carried with it certain implications. Depending on when he lived, a man wearing a beard was a nobleman, a doctor, a philosopher, an artist, a hobo, a jazznik, a teacher, a writer, a bea-

"Y" To Present Tape By Dyck's On Sex Views

On April 20th, at 5:00 p.m. in the Student Lounge, the Y.W.C.A. will present a tape entitled "Sex in Perspective." This tape has been prepared for college students by Rose Dyck in cooperation with her husband, Abram Dyck, M.D. It is based on material first presented by Mrs. Dyck as part of a panel at the 1963 Sex Matters Conference at Columbia University. The speaker presents "Sex from Six Perspectives," and then takes a stand for the "Pre-natal Fidelity." She discusses placing sex into its proper perspective after marriage.

Doctor and Mr. Dyck are co-authors of the book World-Waiting. Mrs. Dyck is the mother of college age children, and has had counseling experience with this and other age groups. The Y.W.C.A. hopes that as many students as possible will come to hear this tape, for it has been called most helpful in putting sex in the right perspective.

Peek-A-Boo Garb Features Bared Bellies, Knees

Big fashion news for spring is Knees — no, girls, this time it's not our skirts that are soaring upward, but men's trousers. From a London fashion notebook comes the word that men's dinner trousers will be two inches above the knees. So for you all that have any qualms about knobby knees or fuzzy extremities, this is not your season.

Styles are also peek-a-boo for women — exposing rib cages, necklines, bellies, toes, and various and sundry other areas. What the men are going to have to look at. The female rib cage, according to fashion designers, is "the" place to expose this season. New bodices are often just triangles anchored by the single slash at the front and back waistlines, with everything bare in between the bosom and the waist. Darling, huh?

Things are shaping up like it might be a self-conscious season of fashions...

musician or perhaps a combination of two or three.

Today a beard means nothing. Behind it may be a college professor or a student. Because it has become increasingly popular with young men, it is interesting to note what young women think of the idea. A nationwide newspaper posed the question to girls all over the country: "Would you date a bearded boy?"

In the survey, they expected an "almost" equal division of opinion, with about half the girls answering yes and half no. But this was not so. Seventy-one per cent said they most certainly would date bearded boys. Slightly more than nine per cent weren't sure how they stood on the question. That left less than twenty per cent as objectors.

The girls were asked which adjectives seemed most appropriate to describe what they thought of beards on young men. "Modern," and "cute" were the most popular, but also came words such as "labor saving," "itchy," "artistic," "dirty," "unkempt," "odd," and "old fashioned."

Female comments about bearded boys were varied — from one girl who believes a beard looks masculine, and another who believes bearded boys are interesting and different. One girl commented that it was bad enough to go out with a boy who was always coming his hair, let alone one who would be combing his beard too.

In a survey of teen-age boys, it was found that forty-five per cent admitted they had thought about having a beard. (Although some of them were not quite old enough to grow a beard.) Fifty-one per cent said they hadn't thought about it, and the remainder were noncommittal.

The boys who said they had given consideration to the matter were asked how long they thought they would wear their beards once they grew them. Twenty-five per cent said "forever." Twenty-two per cent said a year or less; eighteen per cent said they'd get rid of it after graduating from college; eleven per cent said two years. The rest either didn't know or said they would wear beards until they got tired of them.

An interesting note to the survey was that thirteen per cent of the boys who hadn't thought about growing a beard at home believed they might do so while at college.

BARBARIC YAWL

Tourist (in Yellowstone Park): "These Indians have a blood-curdling yell."

Guide — "Yes, Ma'am; every one of them is a college graduate."

PAUL GOODMAN

Since my own youth — I was born in 1911 — there has been important progress toward freedom, naturalness, and honesty in sexual matters. In child care, as taught by Dr. Spock or the Department of Labor manual, there is a widespread relaxation of toilet training and a reasonable tolerance of masturbation. There has been a remarkable liberation from censorship of so-called pornography, so that it is now almost possible to write plain English about most human problems. Information about contraception and venereal diseases has become publicly available and usable. Psychology, whatever its merits or demerits, has squelched a lot of superstition. And by and large, religion has let up on hellfire.

In major respects, however, there has been no improvement. Practically, parents leave their young out on a limb with their "freedom"; they are permissive and even sentimentally approving of sexuality, but they do not provide space, moral support, or practical information. Police law is as barbarous as ever, despite the fact that moral legislation with regard to sexual matters like marriage and divorce, abortion, statutory rape, or homosexuality (just as with regard to gambling, alcohol, or drugs) invariably does more harm than good. And the school systems persist, as they did in my childhood, in the fiction that sexuality simply does not exist.

Attitude of the Schools is the Worst

At present, in my opinion, the attitude of the schools does the worst damage. In the first place, there is a terrible waste of opportunity — as is true, of course, also with the rest of the schooling. At the elementary level, it would be a great thing if the wasted physical training would include psychosomatic exercises and aerobics to unblock and harmonize the anger, grief, and sexuality that are dammed up in the average child; but this is impermissible because of the school board, the major, the church, and the yellow press. High school and college would in principle be ideal environments for exploration in the risky field of sex, under the protection of benevolent teachers; but that will be the day! I have even found it impossible to get a college to adopt a course of group psychotherapy for seniors, so that they can gain some awareness of themselves and one another before they graduate, to marry or not marry, to choose careers, to vote.

But the worst damage is done by the school's denial of the existence of sex, for this creates a schizophrenic unreality. Since sex does exist for the children, the schools become in so far as unreal environments: there is no doubt that this is a chief cause of inattention and dropout. More important, since the school is overwhelmingly the unique public and official environment of the young, children and adolescents begin to take their sexuality itself as not quite real, for a chief property of reality is to be publicly expressible and to affect and be affected by other realities.

For the Young: Timidity, Conformity

The consequences are evident in the quality of American life and the sexuality that is part and parcel of it. For the young, sex exists only in their own peer-group; it is therefore ignorant and insulated. It must not interfere with homework, nor can it energize writing, art, sport, career, or any other cultural pursuit. But as part of the youth "sub-culture," divorced from community or group meaning, it necessarily becomes stereotyped. False privacy results in timidity and conformity, and prevents true solitude and individuality. Instead of each youngster developing according to his own disposition, situation, and luck, and eventually learning to cope with the demands of society, all are forced into conformity to an uncultured and jejune peer-group.

Conversely, insulated from the rest of life and yet obviously tremendously important sexuality becomes a glamorous big deal. As Freud pointed out sexuality is co-equal among half a dozen other major human functions, like knowing, making a living, art, citizenship, God, being a parent, to all of which it contributes a color and value. But if it is either inhibited or isolated, it becomes destructive or trivial; it is over-rated or it vanishes.

Book-of-the-Month Club Starts Writing Program

A new annual writing fellowship program directed to the college senior has been announced by Mr. Harry Scherman, Chairman of the Board of the Book-of-the-Month Club.

Officially titled "The Book-of-the-Month Club Writing Fellowship Program," the project will be administered by the College English Association under a grant from Book-of-the-Month Club.

Beginning with the academic year 1966-67, which coincides with the Club's 49th anniversary, the program calls for fourteen fellowships of $3,000 each. For the purposes of the program, the United States and Canada have been divided into seven geographic sections, each section having approximately the same college population. Two fellowships will be awarded in each area annually.

Mr. Scherman pointed out that although there are many fellowships available for those who wish to pursue scientific and scholarly investigations, there are relatively few fellowships available to the young creative writer.

"It is our hope," Mr. Scherman said, "that this program will help rectify this situation. We have designed it to give the gifted senior an opportunity to develop his creative talents in the year following his graduation."

"The fellowships will be given without any strings attached to allow the recipient the widest possible latitude free from immediate economic strain," he added.

The program is open to any person who will be a senior in an accredited college or university in the United States or Canada on December 1, 1966, provided, however, he is nominated by a member of the English Department of his college. Applications must be postmarked no later than midnight December 1, 1966.

The first year's winners will be notified May 1, 1967 and awards given on June 15, 1967. Application blanks may be obtained from any college English Department or by writing to: Dr. Donald Sears, Director, Book-of-the-Month Club Writing Fellowship Program, c/o College English Association, Howard University, Washington, D. C. 20001.

Color Games Yield To Classes of '67-'69

By SELENA LUNSFORD

"Green and whites, green and whites never give in..." Such was the cry heard the first night of color games, and the green and whites proved that they did not plan to give in. Both green and whites and red and whites were assembled on their respective sides of the court. The ball was tapped into play, and the roar began with each side trying to outdo the other in spirit and color songs.

Juniors Receive Teaching Order

Student teaching assignments have been given out for next year, with a number of girls going to teach in various places throughout the state. The following areas will have student teachers: Colonial Heights, Danville, Henrico County, Local Lynchburg, Richmond, and Roanoke.

For the first block, 19 girls will student teach in Colonial Heights, 16 in Danville, 40 in Henrico, 6 locally, 38 in Richmond, 37 in Roanoke giving a total of 156 seniors out of 10 will be doing their student teaching in the summer.

The second block places 19 girls in Colonial Heights, 19 in Danville, 39 in Henrico, 5 locally, 20 in Lynchburg, 19 in Richmond, and 20 in Roanoke. This makes a total of 141 teaching the second block.

Art, Business Education, English, Foreign Languages, Health and Physical Education, History and Social Sciences, Home Economics, Mathematics, Music, Natural Sciences, and Elementary Education are the subjects the girls will be student teaching. Elementary Education consistently had more student teachers, with English, History, and Business Education, running behind in that order.

Currently Student Teaching Rusty is now student teaching at Brooklyn Junior High School in Henrico County. Next year she will be teaching at Newport News. Like most of the student teachers Rusty had her fears, but everything seems to be doing all right. She is teaching gymnastics to her supervising teachers as well as her classes. Rusty's varied interests and activities point to a successful teaching career. The spotlight's on you, Rusty Stephenson!

Longwood Gets $1.5 Millions For Additions

A million and a half dollars in construction funds for an addition to Stevens Science Building and a classroom building have been released to Longwood College.

The total breaks down to $1,000,240 for the classroom structure and $516,105 for the science building addition.

General Assembly Grants The funds were part of the 27 million dollars released to state colleges and mental institutions by Governor Godwin this week. The 1966 General Assembly appropriated 34 million dollars on an emergency basis from surplus funds for pressing construction needs in higher education and public health.

Plans for the buildings have already been drawn. Already underway is the construction of a dormitory and a student activities building.

Students Move To "The Courts" As Spring Nears

Certain areas of Longwood seem to be occupied more than others during the different seasons of the year. For instance, in the fall the hockey field undergoes all the punishments that hundreds of running feet can give. The hockey team started some of this interest in the sport as well as the hockey classes.

As the weather turned cooler, students began moving indoors to the gym for warmer activities such as volleyball and basketball. Another change in season has hit the Longwood campus, this making another move.

Spring Brings Tennis

Spring is here, and with spring comes that mass migration from the indoors to the outdoors. Since the tennis courts have been made ready for the season's activity, there is hardly a minute of the day that they are not in use.

Crowded Conditions

However, with only four courts, it is a little crowded for the classes, tennis team participants, and interested players from the student body and faculty to use these courts during the daylight hours. It seems as if the tennis courts will assume the burden of overcrowding until a new sport takes its place of importance among the students of Longwood.

Mildred Johnson, Mezzo-Soprano, Presents Recital

Miss Mildred Johnson, mezzo-soprano, presented a senior voice recital Sunday afternoon, March 27. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Richard Johnson, of Vinton. Mildred is a member of Sigma Alpha Iota, national honorary music fraternity for women, M.E.N.C., the Madrigal Singers, and the college choir for which she will sing a role in the opera Dido and Aeneas this spring. She is also a member of Delta Zeta social sorority and was Miss Longwood College in 1964.

Her program included an aria from Vanessa, "Must the Winter Come so Soon," and three French songs, two of which were written by the well-known Benjamin Britten. She also sang four German pieces by Wolf and an aria from Barber of Seville. Miss Gail Milestead accompanied Mildred on the piano. The recital was presented in the small auditorium at 4:00 p.m.

Free bowling has been resumed by the Athletic Association for Longwood students.

Water Show Presents United Nations Assembly

"Smile girls!" has been the recent battle cry of Miss Smith as she prepares her Cockettes and H2O members for their annual water show. Upon invitation, the members of this group paid a visit to Randolph-Macon Women's College on March 21, to see the "Fleurs de Mer" perform. Using the theme, "From the Caves to the Sky" these young ladies gave their spectators a wonderful show and gave each H2O member an inner urge to seek perfection in their own show.

During April 27, 28, and 29, when the H2O club of Longwood will bring their long hours of practice to a close and present "The United Nations' Water Assembly." The show will consist of various numbers representing the countries present at this assembly and then a finale in which all members will take part.

The following day, April 30, part of the group will travel to Greensboro, N. C., where two members will perform in competition, representing Longwood in the AAU meets.

FROM THE BOARD

The Legislative Board has passed the following rule change on the suggestion of the Social Evaluations Committee (refer to pp. 48, 49 of the Student Handbook):

6. Dating
  - a. On weekends girls and their dates may attend those Hampden-Sydney College and fraternity functions approved by the Dean of Women. The names of these functions will be posted in the dorms.
  - b. If no registered functions are planned, two or more girls and their dates may visit Hampden-Sydney fraternity houses on week ends (Friday, Saturday, and Sunday) until 9:00 p. m.

This addition of section "b" to the dating rules causes it to comply with Hampden-Sydney's I. F. C. rules concerning dating at the fraternity houses.

The Judicial Board asked the Board to reconsider wording the new drinking rule. As the rule read it implied Longwood students were allowed to drink at any function as long as it was a social function. The Board voted to omit, therefore, the word "social" in 2a of the new drinking rule. (Refer to the New Drinking Rule).

The Board is currently reviewing the Student Handbook in an effort to change outdated, inconsistent, or unnecessary rules. It is important that you express your criticism of rules and suggested changes to members of the Legislative Board.

If travel is of interest to you you may find helpful information on the Travel Information Bulletin Board located in the old smoker.

Billie Sue Board Features Opera Pieces In Recital

Billie Sue is a member of Delta Zeta sorority, Sigma Alpha Iota, and a member of the Concert Choir. She has been chosen to portray Dido in the forthcoming opera, Dido and Aeneas. After graduation she will teach secondary school music in Rosnoke.

Longwood Receives Money From State

By SUZAN WOLTZ

The Virginia State Legislature has made appropriations to Virginia state colleges and universities for the following 2 years, with each year dating from July 1 through June 30. Longwood College received a total of $4,601,855.00 for its operating expenses and construction work for the coming period.

For daily operation during the first year, 1966-67, Longwood received $2,625,505.00. Student revenues will cover $1,535,020.00 of the amount; the rest comes from the taxpayers of the state.

The second year, 1967-68, will receive $3,076,350.00 for operation, with $1,759,500.00 coming from the students.

One of the major factors involved in the raise is to be the purchase of a new bus for Longwood, for which $20,000.00 has been set aside. Change in faculty salaries are also included in the appropriations.

Mr. Jacob H. Wamsley, Business Manager for Longwood, has stated that the appropriations are "proportionately higher, bringing better operations through more funds." He also feels that "the results will mean freer operations of the college as a unit."

The following are appropriations of money and their uses:

Utilities and stitework	$ 222,580.00
(This includes all work done on new construction six feet from their outside walls).
Extension of the Athletic fields and courts	$ 57,500.00
Addition to the Science Building	$ 516,105.00
Class room building and equipment	$1,285,240.00
(This is for the new fine arts building, for music and art. Some renovations of Jarman, for drama, is also called for).
Renovations of the old laundry into faculty offices	$ 18,410.00
(The bank will be relocated in the Lanford Building, the new student activities building.)
New Dormitories	$1,610,000.00
Relocation of the Office	$ 97,750.00
Renovation of the Student Building (into all dormitories)	$ 89,000.00
Renovation of 2nd and 3rd floor Ruffner (into administrative and faculty offices)	$ 207,000.00
Improvements in the electrical distribution system	$ 48,070.00
Laboratory School	$ 450,870.00
Restoration of Longwood Estate	$ 60,000.00

Alpha Kappa Gamma Taps Ten Into Membership At Assembly

Science Department Adds Physics Major

The Department of Natural Sciences is pleased to announce an expansion in its offerings to include a major program in physics, starting in September, 1966. Longwood College, the oldest teacher training institute in Virginia, has never graduated a physics major. Longwood recognizes the importance of the physical sciences in the secondary school curricula and every effort is being made to provide adequate preparation for teachers of physics.

Fewer Graduates

Nationwide, the number of physics majors graduated each year who go into secondary school teaching is smaller than in any other field of education. Thusly, the demand for physics teachers is very high in almost any geographical location. Longwood now hopes to make a significant contribution toward the alleviation of the shortage of teachers in this field.

Introduction of the physics program has been brought about through the combined efforts of Dr. Brumfield, head of the Science Department, Dr. Jackson, Mr. Austin, and Mr. Fawcett. More Course Hours

Thirty-two semester hours in physics are required for the major. The courses offered include general physics, electronics, mechanics, electricity and magnetism, and atomic and nuclear physics. Sixteen hours are required to teach physics by the State Board of Education. The physics courses will be taught by professors Fawcett (who joined the Longwood staff in June, 1965) and McGinley (who will become a member of the staff in September, 1966).

The program of additional courses is being complemented by the purchase of more physics books for the library and more new equipment. The already existing Mathematics Department offers very adequate courses for the new major, and anticipates no change in curriculum.

Women in Physics

Mr. Fawcett has stated the main problem of getting more women into that area of study. "There is no reason why physics cannot become more of a women's field." Previously, degrees in physics were available only at Madison and Mary Washington. The Department of Natural Sciences pleasantly looks forward to attracting more students toward the expanding horizons of the physical sciences.

Players, Jongleurs Give

"The Glass Menagerie"

By JANET FAIRES

"The Glass Menagerie," by Tennessee Williams, will be presented by the Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs this Thursday, Friday, and Saturday night in Jarman Auditorium.

The cast, which consists of four characters, will feature Mary Ann Chinn as Amanda, Shirley Timberlake as Laura, Thomas Bradley as Tom, and Warren Fulton as Jim, the gentleman caller. Mr. Alexander, who came to Longwood from UCLA, is directing. Assisting him will be Carole Gibson. Susie Holsclaw is stage manager and Pat Dugger is the technical director.

The plot of the play evolves around a family of three people, a mother and her daughter and son, who are completely out of touch with reality. Amanda, the mother, pictures herself as living in the gay life of the delta plantations; Tom, her son, hopes to be a writer of great adventure although he works as a stock clerk and supports the family; and Laura, who is the most out of touch with reality lives in a world which evolves around her collection of glass animals. The action of the play takes place around the one gentleman caller Laura has, Jim, the gentleman caller, is the only character in the play who is in touch with reality. His call is the only real contact Laura has with a man, and it results in not only the culmination but the collapse of Laura's love life.

Local Industrial Personnel View Education T.V.

The Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring a series of programs for industry and personnel at the supervisory level, over educational television, via channel 23, Richmond. These programs consist of 2 half-hour shows a week.

Since the Farmville area is on the fringe of the reception of this channel, it cannot be easily picked up in private homes. However, as a service offered to local industry, the Longwood College closed circuit television system picks up the signal and rebroadcasts it to the sets in the Hiner Educational Building.

Local people in industry view the shows in Hiner, and take advantage of the opportunity to do so. This is the second year for the program and service offered here at Longwood.

LC Girls Attend Recent Meets; Gov't, Home Ec.

The SIASG held their student government convention last week from April 13th through 17th. The location of the meeting was Agnes Scott College in Decatur, Georgia.

Girls attending from Longwood were Nancy Brown, Ann Casteen, Bruce Flournoy, Anne Kay, and Nancy Spain.

Home Economics Meeting The Virginia Home Economics Association held a meeting from April 13th through the 16th. Longwood students attending were May Gilliam, Sandra Hamrick, Lucy Hawthorne, Margaret Poole, Carole Tingley, Betty Williams, and Kathleen Wolfman.

because she learns of his engagement during the visit.

The set, which is expressionistic, was designed by the newly created scene design class. There is a scrim in front of the set which gives a misty quality to the action in order to add to the lack of reality. The set, built on a suspended stage, gives the effect of being a prison which holds Amanda, Laura, and Tom.

"The Glass Menagerie" will be the last of the Longwood Players' presentations for this year.

Honors Council To Give Service: Tutor Program

Now that mid-term estimates have been distributed, the Honors Council wishes to remind all students of the tutoring program that has been made available to them. Several students have already taken advantage of the plan and are receiving qualified help with the subject in which they are weak.

Any Longwood student desiring a tutor may pick up an application form in the office of the Director of Admissions. These forms must be completed and returned to Rose Mary Street, Wheeler 220, as soon as possible. The committee will then arrange for the applicant to meet with a tutor.

The Honors Council cannot over-emphasize the fact that college students should be able to recognize their need for extra help and seek assistance before it is too late. Possibly a few hours of tutoring now will prevent a great deal of unnecessary pressure at examination time.

'Rotunda' Prints With New Style; Offset Method

Like The Rotunda's new face? It may not look very different, but a major change has taken place. Previously printed by the Letterpress method, The Rotunda has moved into Offset printing. This process treats the entire paper in a photographic manner. All print and pictures in the paper come out clearer, and much more distinguishable.

The offset printing press is made in a manner that will allow it to produce up to 10,000 copies per hour. This is a great improvement over the slower type press. The Farmville Herald not only prints its own copies but also prints the Tiger, the Longwood Rotunda, and the Apomattox paper. By printing more than one paper on one press, the total cost is reduced greatly.

We thought a new name-plate appropriate with our new dress. This one was designed and executed by Linda Shell, our cartoonist. We hope you enjoy The Rotunda's new look.

Uninformed Infirmary

One of the most criticized and discussed objects on any college campus, including Longwood, is the college infirmary. However, it is our opinion that students too frequently are critical without knowing all the facts behind policies and actions of that organization. Therefore, it is the purpose of this writing to bring some previously more hidden facts to light concerning our health service, and hopefully, stop rampant criticism and comment that is made without adequate knowledge on the part of the observer.

Dr. Elizabeth B. Jackson, of the Science Department, headed a committee on Student Personnel for the Longwood College Self-Evaluation Study for the Southern Association of Colleges. All information in this editorial came directly from their findings. Our infirmary was found to be entirely satisfactory, and very well rated in comparison with other southern colleges. Recommendations of the committee were made and carried through.

Since June, 1957, many improvements have taken place, including the installation of newer and better forms of lighting, patient-call-bell systems, more medical equipment, and the establishment of a modern kitchen. In the personnel department, there is one part-time doctor, and three full-time registered nurses, one of which is always on duty. Other nurses are brought in, as well as pre-nursing students, as the need requires. Not many of us have a nurse readily available at home in this manner.

There are 27 beds in the infirmary, but, luckily, the number can easily be increased if the necessity arises. For instance, in a 1957 flu epidemic, the infirmary housed 97 patients.

Now we are college students, and no longer can mother tell us when we are too sick to go to school, or when to take us to the doctor. We are not at home any more, and, just as living in a dormitory is not like living with your family, so going to the infirmary is not like going to your family doctor. We are expecting too much if we want to consider them by comparison. We should now, certainly, know on our own when we need medical help, and then when to go to the infirmary.

All too often the student body hears only the negative side of infirmary experiences. The vast percentage of infirmary cases are the ones that go "unsung," and are easily taken care of, and receive quick and easy remedies.

Running an infirmary is expensive, and takes time and effort on the part of the staff. Our infirmary has been found to have very adequate help and facilities. So, we stress, to job before making a criticism. The infirmary is doing its job, and now the Longwood student body should do theirs by realizing the campus situation. Unjust criticism is unfair to every one, especially the infirmary.

Familiar Enemy-Apathy

We've checked in the bookstore and they're still selling pens, pencils, and stationery. And our competent post office has been dutifully delivering all communications.

But the Rotunda hasn't received a single letter from you, our "subscribers."

We'd be overjoyed if we thought every article in the paper has satisfied your literary tastes and fancies.

But the consensus of the editors is that a familiar enemy - apathy - has crept in and overtaken all the L. C. coeds, leaving the campus reeling with "I don't care" and "It's too much trouble" attitudes.

We realize, that once crushed by such opposition, it's hard to rebound with brilliant self-expression. We realize, too, that the student body might have been weakened before the battle itself - perhaps personal opinion and individuality have always been lacking on the L. C. campus. But we seriously doubt it.

Still, even when all might be lost, we plead to you, our readers. We urge you to challenge, comment, insult, embarrass.

You might realize this is your paper, your college, your life. You might realize that nothing can be accomplished, improved, or remedied without your opinions.

We, the editors, could run wild and use "your" paper for our own wants and needs. But we'd rather hear from you.

Letters to the editor may be left in the post office in c/o the Rotunda, or if the walk is too far, you may give your right to any member of the Rotunda staff. All names will be withheld upon request.

P. J. H.

LONGWOOD — MEET "KATMAN"

Serial

"Katman" Makes Debut In DC Story Intrigue

By JEAN D'ARRK

Clancy and O'Mulligan stood on the corner and talked.

"Guarding our own government men is one thing, but when those diplomats come in, well, they make our job twice as tough," "Yes," O'Mulligan agreed, "the international set of Washington leaves something to be desired for our poor Secret Service agents."

"Take this present visitor — the Shah of Ristanborchek. He's got a harem of 42 wives, each with a cool million in jewels. His #1 wife has that famous Sea Queen Emerald — 29 carats worth of trouble."

Yes, I sorta hope the chief won't put me on the case — 42 beautiful dames and all them jewels. . . It's enough to make a man quit the Pennsylvania Avenue racket."

"Well," Clancy finished off, "gotta run, Luci's going trouss-seau hunting."

Just at that moment a tall man leaned over his desk in the Department of Justice, and reached for a phone. He dialed a popular Georgetown number. The phone was slowly answered by a shapely girl in a red sat dress. "Hello, is Kenneth Parker in?" "Yes, one moment, I'll see if I can rouse him. . ."

"Hello," Parker sleepily said. "Parker, this is the chief. I wanted to talk to you about your old job. With this Shah of Ristanborchek in town we are in need of your special services. Can you come right down?"

"Listen, I'll talk to you, but, like I've said before, I'm in another line of business now," his husky voice answered. Parker eyed his fingers and several stock certificates and bracelets that were sitting by the phone as he spoke.

Another line of business is right!!! Little did the chief know that now Kenneth Parker, one-time clerk-typist at the Justice Department, was now KATMAN, a savor-faire second story artist. Yes, as a cat burglar, Ken had done well, and, as more and more money came his way, he became more and more sure of himself, and enjoyed the good life. He was considered the Don Juan of Foggy Bottom.

"Cleo," he said to the girl in red, "I've got an appointment. Why don't you just toddle off, and quit hanging around?"

Kenneth drove up to the building's plush Stutz-Bearcat, and stepped out. The car, an automatic pilot, parked itself, and placed a dime in the meter. He lightly tripped along the walk in his gray flannel suit, with gray pin striped shirt, and burgundy tie. A gray hat completed his outfit.

He thought how the chief would look if he knew those were his Katman clothes; he prided himself on being a well-dressed thief. His only identifying mark was the eye patch he wore, which he slipped out of the band of his hat when he worked nights. No telephone booth or Bat cave were necessary for him.

He entered the chief's office. Sitting down, he waited for the chief to speak.

"Parker, at 24, you had great possibilities here. Your mild manner made you likeable, and your ability to speak 34 languages is a real asset. You're not at all bad looking, either," he added, as he viewed his physique. Parker was not the 97 pound weakling.

"We'd like you to join up with us to protect the Sea Queen Emerald, which belongs to Venusia, the Shah's #1 wife. She's beautiful, too, if you like black hair, blue eyes, 36-22-36 figures, plus brains. Went to a Longwood College, I'll remember right."

Parker eyed the picture. "You've got yourself a boy," he whispered.

Kenneth hurriedly drove over to the Washington Hilton, using his special helicopter attachment to avoid traffic. The harem was quartered on the 13th floor. Being an avid health fan, he chose to walk the distance, on the outside of the building, using his climbing equipment. This made walking a real challenge. He entered a side window.

Venusia was reclining on a pile of Tiger pillows, wearing cerise hip hanger pants and a purple rick tickie. She preferred Western style clothes. Inserted in her navel was, however, a large blue-green stone, which sparkled at every angle. "Meet the Sea Queen," she said, lightly patting her stomach, after introductions had properly been made.

"So that's the Sea Queen," thought Kenneth. "I thought it was made for necklaces, not navel. . . ." He musted further. A slight chuckle evaded his lips as he slid down very close to Venusia. "Let me have a closer look at this jewel."

"Pill" Question Arises On College Campuses

(Ed. Note: The information for this article was taken from "Next: A Sleep-In?" published in "Mademoiselle" Magazine, April, 1966.)

The traditional cry of universal college students has been "leave us alone," begging for increased freedom of some sort. But students are crying for a different reason in the current birth-control controversy. The big question at hand is whether or not college health services should prescribe birth-control pills for unmarried coeds. The issue began last fall when a doctor at Brown University admitted having prescribed these pills to a student. Since then college newspapers throughout the country have been urging their schools to do the same.

Students have never been forbidden to accept any moral—even in the strictest colleges. The colleges previously were not involved with the distribution of birth-control devices or prescriptions, leaving the matter remain one of personal choice and individual responsibility. It's now the students who are insisting that the college get involved.

This development is surprising. Three years ago the girls at Vassar were disturbed when President Sarah Blanding publicly condemned premarital sex for her girls, interfering with what the coeds believed to be a private matter. There have been no such stipulations placed on sexual activity at the colleges at which the birth-control controversy has erupted: Barnard, U. of Calif., American U., Michigan, Wisconsin, New Mexico, or Carleton. The students are angry because the deans and college doctors say that prescribing pills is not part of the college role.

It's not as though the pills exist exclusively under the jurisdiction of college officials; many private doctors fill prescriptions for unmarried girls in lieu of unwanted pregnancies. But now the students are pleading with their colleges to be the distributors.

One reason for students making a public issue of birth control is good old college-group spirit. Students can organize and show the world that "there's a bunch of us freethinkers." At Berkeley, students formed The Campus Sexual Freedom Forum, an organization which actually sells membership buttons.

On the whole, college men are greatly in favor of college involvement with birth control. College girls are less militant in their response to and participation in the controversy. Some coeds simply need, want, and freely acknowledge their dependence upon strong college rules that protect female students from the possibilities of being seduced — thereby postponing the problem of individual choice. Perhaps there are girls who feel that it wouldn't be so wicked to have safe premarital relations — wouldn't, that is, be cheating if the sanction for being safe came from Alma Mater herself.

Certainly, the students concerned with getting their colleges to agree to distribute birth-control-prescriptions have some valid arguments on their side. A Yale medical student argues that health services exist to meet students' medical needs; the understanding is that all cases will be handled confidentially. He sees no reason why birth control should not be regarded as one of these needs and treated in the same fashion. Of course it would be less of a financial strain on the student, if this, like any more routine health service, were provided by the college. But the matter of cost is mentioned by very few of the disturbed students, and is not crucial.

Students concerned with the issue are by no means all hot-heads or anxiously obedient children. Probably the vast majority of American college students are able and willing to make up their own minds about what they want to do or not do, and to accept whatever responsibilities are implied. However, college administrators are on the spot and are being forced to react. Whatever the colleges decide to do — whether to give out pills or hold lectures of forums or all of these, they must recognize the anxiety and confusion beneath the growing student protest.

Longwood Has Sessions

For Summer School, '66

Longwood College will hold two six-week sessions during the summer of 1966, beginning on June 13 and extending to September 2, according to Dr. Richard B. Brooks, Dean of Longwood.

Designed for both undergraduate and graduate study, the first session is scheduled from June 13 to July 22. The second session is scheduled from July 25 to September 2. There is also a three-week session for graduates only from July 25 to August 2.

In addition to regular courses to raise collegiate certificates and collegiate professional certificates, there will be a six-week reading institute on the campus for elementary teachers of Southside Virginia. Sponsored by the National Defense Education Act, the reading institute is scheduled for June 20 - July 29.

For the second consecutive summer, high school graduates who have been accepted for admission to the college, may attend the six-week sessions. Students may enroll for two courses in each of the two six-week sessions.

Information describing further details of the summer program is being mailed this week to elementary and secondary schools of the Commonwealth.

DANA "GERI" GEARHARDT

Spotlight Lands Dana Gearhardt

There's one girl on campus known for her wet hair. This girl is Dana Gearhardt, better known as Geri. She changed to a Physical Education major in her freshman year. Since then Geri has participated in such class sports as hockey, volleyball, basketball, and softball, along with class swim meets.

Swimming is really Geri's specialty. For four years she has been a member of H2O and Corkettes. This year she is president of the H2O Club. She will participate in the Water Show in four numbers, one of which is a solo number. Geri is also in the Varsity Swimming Team this year.

She has served on the AA Council in various capacities, such as class volleyball manager. She received a blue blazer and has been in Circus every year as such things as a monkey. She was also in May Day as a fairy. Geri did her student teaching at both the elementary and secondary level in Roanoke. This summer will find Geri working at Camp Rim Rock in West Virginia as a member of the waterfront staff. Geri currently lives in Puerto Rico.

Practice Begins On Hockey Field For LC Archery

If anyone is interested in participating on the Varsity Archery team, see Dianne Davis. Practice has begun on the old hockey field after a few battles with the weather. Miss Brockenbrough is the coach.

Five people will be chosen and matches have been arranged. Games so far have been scheduled with Randolph - Macon Woman's College (with no date definitely set as yet) and with Westhampton on May 10 in Richmond.

There will be two telegraphic meets, one of which is national. Individuals will have a chance to participate on the All American Collegiate Archery Team. Dianne Davis and Karen Ruder are the only two members remaining from the previous archery team. The score has a record of 499 points for a Columbia round.

Practice is on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays at 3:00 and 4:00. There will also be class and color archery for all those interested. Be watching for more news of this.

Lychnos Elects New Officers; Anderson Pres.

Office Of Education Calls For Teachers

The U. S. Office of Education has issued a call for National Teacher Corps volunteers and the program as soon as funds are available.

The May 31 deadline also applies to requests from school districts for assistance from Teacher Corps teams this fall. "Our objective," said Commissioner of Education Harold Howe II, "is to reach and teach the children of poverty. For that task, we need experienced teachers and college graduates — including June graduates."

Starting by mid-June, some 3,000 recruits selected from the applicants will spend eight to 12 weeks of summer training at colleges and universities. That is why the May 31 deadline for applications is necessary. By September, Teacher Corps teams should be ready to move into 200 to 400 city and rural poverty-area school systems, where their help is requested.

During the training period, recruits will attend university courses on the sociology of poverty and the teaching of educationally deprived children. While in training, they will receive $75 per week plus $15 for each dependent. Those successfully completing the training will become members of the Teacher Corps.

On acceptance by a local school agency, Teacher Corps members will be paid at the local level of teacher salaries.

About one-fourth of the Corps members will be teachers with an advanced degree and several years of experience, including many who have worked with deprived children. Most will lead teams of about five teacher-interns on assignments in local school districts. Experienced teachers will, where possible, be assigned to their home school districts.

The teacher-interns will teach part-time under supervision of team leaders, assist in school and community projects, and study for an advanced degree at a nearby institution.

School districts may qualify for a Teacher Corps team if more than half of the enrollment in at least one school in the district consists of children with families having annual incomes of less than $3,000.

The National Teacher Corps was authorized in the Higher Education Act of 1965, which was signed into law last November 8. Appropriation requests for the remainder of the Fiscal Year 1966 and for Fiscal Year 1967 are before the Congress.

The Office of Education said that final action on Teacher Corps applications must await Congressional decisions on the appropriation. Applications are

Music Professor Performs Series Of Concerts

Dr. Joanne Curnutt, associate professor of Music at Longwood College, has been giving a series of concerts since the middle of March. This will be completed on May 10, when she gives a harpsichord concert for the Three Arts Club in Blackstone.

The series began with a harpsichord concert at Randolph-Macon Academy, Front Royal, with the Madrigal Singers of Warren County High School, which is directed by Madeleine McNeil, a 1962 graduate of Longwood College.

Last week, she was guest harpsichord artist at Lynchburg College's Hobgood Auditorium as part of the Fine Arts Series and heard Dr. Howard Hanson, composer, lecturer and director of the Eastman School of Music, where she received her doctorate, in Rochester, N. Y. He spoke in Lynchburg as a Virginia Center speaker.

A bowling tournament will take place April 28-May 1. There is no entrance fee.

European Summer Jobs Available For Students

Grand Duchy of Luxembourg—Every student in America can get a summer job in Europe and a travel grant by applying directly to the European headquarters of the American Student Information Service in Luxembourg. Jobs are much the same as student summer work in the U. S. with employers offering work periods ranging from three weeks to permanent employment.

Lifeguarding, office work, resort-hotel jobs, factory, construction, camp counseling and farm work are only a few categories to be found among the 15,000 jobs ASIS still has on file. An interesting summer pastime not found in America is tutoring. Numerous well-to-do European families are inviting American college students to spend the summer with them and teach their children English.

Wages range to $400 a month, and in most cases neither previous experience nor knowledge of a foreign language is required. ASIS, in its ninth year of operation, will place more American students in summer jobs in Europe this summer than ever before.

Students interested in working Europe next summer may write directly to Dept. VII, ASIS, 22 Ave. de la Liberté, Luxembourg City, Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, enclosing $2 for the ASIS 36-page booklet which contains all jobs, wages, working conditions, etc., job and travel grant applications, and to cover the cost of handling and overseas air mail postage.

Legislative Board Votes

Longwood Out Of NSA

The Legislative Board voted on March 28, 1966, to drop Longwood's membership in the National Student Association. This decision was made after much research and discussion among members of the Board, a student committee, and faculty members.

Longwood affiliated with NSA in the spring of 1965, and since that time, the Legislative Board has continued to gather further information on NSA and its policies. In March of 1966, a committee under the Legislative Board headed by Sandy Byrum, NSA Coordinator, and Kay Collins, Assistant NSA Coordinator, recommended to the Board that Longwood drop its NSA affiliation.

In order to follow up this recommendation, the Board members sought further information. Facts on NSA were sought in the NSA "Codification of Policy," recent editorials in daily newspapers, and letters from schools affiliated with NSA and ones who have dropped their membership. Mary Mason Green and other members of the Young Republicans Club had done earlier research on NSA which was given to the Board. On the basis of this information and the discussions on NSA, the Board made its decision.

The Board's stand on NSA was based on the following basic points:

1. NSA is so involved politically in national and international affairs that it does not stress solutions to immediate campus problems.
2. NSA has taken stands on so many issues regarding national and international affairs that it would be impossible to inform the student body in an intelligent manner of its various views.
3. The material received from NSA is not pertinent to problems on the Longwood campus. There are other sources which are more effective than NSA's Information Service.
4. The Legislative Board feels that Longwood students can learn to speak for themselves on current problems and not through a national group which may not be representative of the Longwood student body. If Longwood College really feels strongly about some issue, it can initiate a program on its own without the push of a larger group such as NSA.

5. The only useful benefit of NSA recognized by Longwood is NSA's information on student travel and I.D. cards for discounts. These benefits, however, are still available to Longwood without affiliation. Any person can write to NSA's travel bureau if he desires such information.

The Legislative Board, however, realizing the need of affiliating with some type of national group which would encourage student awareness of world problems as well as providing pertinent information on campus problems, is looking into other student groups. The student body is encouraged to ask their class representatives any questions about the Legislative Board's stand on the National Student Association.

Business Group To Offer Forms For Scholarship

PI Omega Pi, the honorary business education fraternity, is offering two scholarships of $50 each this year. Any rising sophomore, junior, or senior business major is eligible to enter.

Application forms are available on the PI Omega Pi bulletin board in the Business Education wing. Anyone wishing to enter is requested to fill one in, and return it to Gall Gooch in South Cunningham 109 or to Barbara Gillespie in the Home Management house.

The scholarship fund has been established by funds received from student services to college organizations and to the faculty. The scholarships will be presented at the Honors Assembly on May 3.

Five Girls To Vie For

"Miss Longwood" Title

By GWYN MUSE

Saturday night, April 30, at 7:30 p.m., thirteen lovely and talented girls will vie for the title of "Miss Longwood." The theme of this year's pageant is "Bon Voyage on the S. S. Longwood," and highlights will include an appearance by Miss Linda Pritchard, the reigning Miss Longwood.

The contestants include Laura Diane Cogburn, Shirley Ann Timberlake, Betty Lou Helig, Jo Anne Tucker, Betty L. Thomasson, and Nancy Maxey. Also in competition are Jane G. Winfree, Karen Diehl, Carol Marie Eubank, Arne J. Stowell, Barbara Joan Hall, and Mayling E. Simpson.

The girls will be judged on poise, appearance, talent, and intelligence, as is customary in all the contests leading up to, and including, the Miss America Pageant. The five judges for this year's pageant are all veterans of beauty contest judging. They are William Sweeney, past judge of the Miss Virginia and the Junior Miss Virginia Pageants; John Kelly, also a past judge of the Miss Virginia Pageant; and Geanine Hylton, Mrs. Virginia, 1964. The other two judges have also been active in contests of this type. They are George Chenuett of WLSL-TV in Roanoke, and Marge Fisher of The Roanoke World-News.

Before the actual pageant, the contestants will have met the judges and some of the judging will have already taken place. Separate interviews are held Saturday morning, and luncheon and a reception for contestants and colleges will follow. In the evening the girls will appear in swim suits and evening gowns, and in their individual talent presentations. After each contestant has appeared these three times, five finalists are chosen. Each will be asked a question and the judging will be concluded.

Before the runners-up and Miss Longwood are named, Miss Congeniality is announced and awarded a prize. Chosen by the contestants, one girl receives the title because of her personality and her friendliness displayed during the course of the entire contest. The girl who wins the Miss Longwood title will receive $100 plus numerous prizes from local merchants. In the late summer, she will travel to Roanoke to compete for the title of Miss Virginia.

Honor Council To Hold May 3 Honors Assembly

On May 3 the Honors Council is sponsoring an Awards Assembly, to honor those students who have achieved academic excellence.

At the Assembly, awards and certificates will be presented in nine areas. They are: the John R. Clark Math Award, the Student Education Association Scholarship, the PI Omega Pi Book Award, the Sigma Alpha Theta Music Awards, the Publications Book Awards, the Dabney Lancaster Scholarship, the Fred O. Weygal Scholarship, Longwood Players Dramatic Awards, and the Honors Council Scholarship Certificates.

The Honors Council has contacted all of the honorary groups on the campus, and is asking the members of them to dress in white, and sit in at a special reserved section of the auditorium. All faculty and students are urged and encouraged to attend.

The Honors Council has recently been reactivated. It presently consists of two representatives from each of the eight honorary organizations on campus, and is sponsored by Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt. The purpose of the Honors Council is quoted below:

"The council attempts to stimulate and to encourage each student to take full advantage of every learning opportunity offered by the academic setting of college life . . . lycueums, lectures, library, etc.

The council endeavors to make the student ever more aware of her primary purpose for being in college—to learn—not learning in the sense of rote memorization . . . but learning with the full knowledge that after the acquisition of facts must come understanding."

Several of the things the Honors Council has been doing to carry out its purpose are as follows: they feature quotes from scholars in publications, feature stories on individual students achieving academic success,

Jones To Represent LC At Fall Festival

Miss Bonnie Jones, a junior, has been chosen as Longwood's Harvest Festival Princess for the coming year. Bonnie, chosen by a faculty committee, is an elementary education major from Manassas, Virginia. She said her first thoughts were, "Well, I was just so thrilled, and excited, I couldn't believe it!"

The Harvest Festival is held annually by the Junior League of Roanoke, and it takes place in Roanoke. The date is September 24. This year the festival will feature a football game between V.M.I. and the University of Georgia. Princesses from all colleges in the state take part. They are provided with escorts and dances to stay.

Dark-haired, dark-eyed Bonnie is active on the campus. She is currently president of the Granddaughters' Club, has been secretary of the Wesley Foundation for two years, and will be Religious Editor of "The Virginian" next year.

Among Bonnie's interests, besides school, are teaching art, and sewing. She makes many of her own clothes.

She is anxious to attend the festival, and to see Roanoke, as she will be student teaching there next year, during the second block. The committee that chose Bonnie felt that she had the necessary attributes to be a very worthy representative of Longwood. The princess must be attractive, a student in good standing, have a pleasant personality and possess a good character.

Something rather humorous happened to Bonnie as she waited for Dr. Brown, who had sent for her to tell her the good news of her selection. Mrs. Cover, sociology professor, met her in the office and kept teasing her about another sociology course she must take. Bonnie confessed that she was a "little worried," but that Dr. Brown came and rescued me. Then all that I felt was happy."

"The Rotunda" would like to congratulate Princess Bonnie, and wish her the best of luck in the coming festival.

Assembly Committee

Plans New Changes

The Faculty - Student Committee to study the Assembly Program at Longwood met recently in March to continue deliberations and consider additional points regarding the implementation of the revised assembly program.

Faculty members of the committee, chaired by Dr. Rosemary Sprague, are Mrs. Josephine Magnifico, Mr. Earl Rubley, Mr. Edwin H. Vassar, and Dr. Ruth Wilson. Students on the committee are Theresa Albright, Nancy Brown, Linda Gardner, Jenny McCoy, and Shirley Timberlake.

Following lengthy and thorough discussion, the committee announces the following recommendations: It is the unanimous opinion of the committee that their adoption will be in the best possible interests of the continued academic and cultural growth of the college. The program, listed below, is on a one-year trial basis, contingent on one-year night series. The committee wishes to thank Dr. James Newman, president of the college.

Recommendations of the Committee

  - h. Senior Convocation
- (The inclusion of an Honors Council Assembly was approved at the March 1st meeting, upon the presentation of the council's intention to make such an assembly a time for recognition of academic achievement on the part of those students elected annually on the several honor societies.)

Five Students Attend Conference At V. P. I.

By MEG PHERSON

On Thursday, March 31, five Longwood girls, Dot Chappell, Jo Ann Clabo, Charlotte Evelyn, Phyllis Myers, and Meg Pherson, went as YWCA delegates to a statewide YWCA conference at V.P.I., entitled "Conflict '66".

The "conflict" was centered around the two most crucial issues existing in the "Great Society" today, Civil Rights and Viet Nam. Civil Rights, involving the domestic side of American policy, was discussed by Roy Wilkins, director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and James Kilpatrick, Editor of the Richmond News-Leader. What each speaker had to say seemed to fit home with the entire delegation's topic was "The Rights and Responsibilities of the States" with direct reference to the South.

In regards to the Civil Rights Bill, both speakers admitted their extreme dissatisfaction with the new law. Kilpatrick said it went too far and Wilkins believed it didn't go far enough. Wilkins stated that the degree of talent in Negroes is no measure of their rights. Kilpatrick saw that now the Negroes are assuming preferential treatment because of their race. He made a direct cut at the present administration as being men who assume monarchical powers under some "Divine Rights of Kings."

The second issue, dealing with U. S. involvement in Viet Nam, is also very controversial. The speakers were Norman Thomas, head of the Socialist party for 40 years, and George Cabot Lodge, son of the famous ex-ambassador to Viet Nam, Henry Cabot Lodge.

Norman Thomas gave his belief that the U. S. is obsessed with the idea that the devil is Communism, that we are divinely chosen to police the world, and that by wishing or non-recognition we can get rid of Red China. Convinced that we should not be in Viet Nam, Thomas said we should cease fire and negotiate with the Viet Cong.

Lodge, on the other hand, does not see the U. S. policy as trying to control South Viet Nam. Rather, we are obligated under previous treaties to defend the right of the people to choose their own government without predatory nations stepping in. We are fulfilling our commitment to help protect these people from Communist aggression. We must be patient and not expect overnight end to the war.

Each of the speakers presented a part of the prevalent public opinion existing today on these two very important issues. Their conflicting attitudes made both sides of the question known.

One point that added to the enjoyment of the weekend was the escort "service" provided by the V.P.I. students. Each girl had an escort to all meetings and social events on the campus.

The Tech YMCA is planning on making the "Conflict" an annual conference, and the Longwood girls have strongly recommended that more students be able to attend next year's "Conflict '67".

Speaker Merits Praises

Many speakers come and go at Longwood, some drawing no noticeable attention, while others make a very lasting mark, and leave an indelible impression on the minds of the students. We found the latter to be the case in last week's Student Forum, featuring James Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond News Leader, who spoke on the topic, "Virginia Politics Today."

From the amount of questions asked at the end of Mr. Kilpatrick's talk, student interest ran very high, especially once it was on a subject that can be dry and unapproachable. The secret to the interest was, of course, Mr. Kilpatrick's presentation, which was highly commendable. He presented his case in a manner that was unbiased, but also stated that he had his own opinions regarding certain subjects.

He did not show prejudice in his initial words, and gave both the strength and weaknesses in the Virginia political situation. For example, in the coming Senatorial election, he showed the good and bad points in the possible elections of Byrd, Robertson, Boothe, and Spong, and the advantages and disadvantages of one or the other growing or losing the Senate seats. He let his listener draw his own conclusions concerning who was actually the best candidate.

Mr. Kilpatrick backed up many of his ideas with quotes, which added to the effectiveness of his speech. He did not press on any issue, and even added that he would "not be backed into a corner regarding certain questions." Of course, as editor of the Richmond News Leader, he has many important opinions, and holds the power and ability to change attitudes through editorial privilege. This is what we most admire him for: he did not try to outwardly change our minds, nor did he say whether he was right or wrong. He did not give a political speech, but presented more of a friendly, informal discussion.

We do not think that in any way, however, Mr. Kilpatrick avoided certain issues. He delved right into questions and answers concerning integration, the fate of the private academy, the fate of the Republican Party, and other current problems taking place in Virginia. He proved himself to be very well read, and gave many apparently sensible viewpoints.

The audience returned Mr. Kilpatrick's pleasantness with well-thought questions, proving once again that interest shown in one thing only brings on more interest in related things. And from the amount of questions asked, the students attending were very interested. It was a well-behaved, inquisitive audience, who justly appreciated the value of their lecturer.

So, to the Student Forum, for bringing Mr. Kilpatrick to our campus, we offer a grateful "Thank You." More speakers of his caliber are needed, especially in the field of politics which typically is of little concern to Longwood students. The work of the Student Forum, especially in bringing speakers like Mr. Kilpatrick, is very appreciated.

English Shocks User!

(Editor's Note: The information for this article comes from Charles Rice's "Punchbowl," from "This Week" magazine. English is a perfectly shocking language! Journalists have been accused of being liars, rascals and drunks . . . And all simply because they work with English.

A study was recently made by a reputable journal. Charles Rice, who used his Thesaurus to compile some amazing facts. . . One can find 30 synonyms for LIAR, but there are none for TRUTH - TELLER. Thesaurus gives 108 expressions for RASCAL, ranging from rapscallion through rascal. . . base, poor, shallow, beggarly, three - soured, hundred - pound, filthy, written - stockingknave (Shakespeare). But there are only 38 expressions for the OPPOSITE OF RASCAL.

One gives a meager total of 12 synonyms for SODDER and a wealth of 137 for DRUNK. And in similar fashion, RIGHTeousNESS does not have as many racy meanings as SIN, nor PROPER CONDUCT as many as MISCHIEF.

Appropriate for today's world situation, there are over 400 entries under WARfare and only 42 under PEACE. Unfortunately, VICE (390) wins over VIRTUE (120); OBEDIENCE (110); GLUTTONY (100) over FASTING (50). The DEVILS (59) triumph the ANGELS (35), and the LOAFERS (70) beat the GO - GETTERS (17).

So, the English language becomes hopelessly immoral! As Mr. Rice so aptly pointed out: "Virtue is its own reward but sin keeps the English language going!"

Two Girls Represent LC at Golf Meets

Early Friday morning Becky Bondurant and Kathy Williams, accompanied by Miss Barbara Smith, left for the Virginia Collegiate Invitational golf tournament. They arrived in Staunton at noon and stayed at Mary Baldwin College. First on their agenda was a practice round of golf at Ingleside Country Club where the tournament was to be held. After playing five holes, the girls, after rain, they gave up the idea.

On Saturday morning Becky teed off at 8:07 and Kathy at 8:14. The weather was so foggy that they could not see the green, and the course was very wet. This kept the scores somewhat higher than normal, and the ball would not roll as far therefore cutting down on distance. Even under these conditions, our girls came out in great shape with Becky taking second place with a score of 87 and Kathy shooting a 98. The 18 hole match was over at 1:30 that afternoon.

Second - time winner of the match was Jane Mack, a Senior at Queens College in Charlotte. She shot a 10 under par 82 to win the match by a small margin of five strokes. Becky, Freshman on the Varsity golf

'Mad' Sunday Nights Mark Campus Paper

By PHYLIS HUMMER

I find myself in the "Rotunda" office late at night - What, you never knew there was a "Rotunda" office? I'm sure at one time or another you've all seen the dingy little cubbyhole in the back of the Home Economics building, with a sign hung over the door: "The Rotunda" - the Student newspaper.

Echoes of innumerable questions, chaos and tension fill the small office. I begin thinking about all the things that make up the newspaper the students read every Wednesday evening. Many people would think I was out of my tree if I asked them what a newspaper was, and would simply say that "a newspaper is a newspaper." But to the Gang down at the "Rotunda" office, it's much more than that. It's supreme confidence. It's questions shouted above the pecking of the countless typewriters that don't function, conversation, opinions, panic, frustration, and headline counting.

"Is this head o'k? Where is a piece of paper? How can I start this article? Where is the second lead story? What do you mean, you didn't get any ads this week? Has anyone seen a pencil? Another week without a Letter to the Editor? - And so it goes, long into the night. This mass confusion results in mispiling articles. It results in a tremendous hole in the front page at 12 midnight. It results for headache upon headache for the staff. But out of these tears, frets and frustrations is born a "Rotunda" each and every week.

It's a deadline that has to be met. It's countless walks to the "Heard" office. It's tension. It's needing information for a story and finding out after numerous phone calls and telex, that your particular victim is out of town for the week end. It's getting many things done at once. It's wondering if any form even resembling a publication will come out on Wednesday.

It's when we can't find the right word. It's when we have a test the next day and haven't cracked the book yet. It's when the staff doesn't agree whether a certain article should be printed.

It's different sounds and feelings. The sound of typewriters, an exclamation of triumph when a suitable headline has been written, a right word has been found, the buzz of many busy minds at work. The feeling of panic, of incompetence when we seem not to be able to do anything right.

It's different people, all kinds of people. The staff who combines ideas, personalities and work to make up the "Rotunda." It's the complaints, praises, grudges, and compliments of these people. It's the times when they lose their tempers, when they cry, when they create.

It's responsibility. The responsibility of a trust given to us by our fellow students. It's knowing that we hold a very influential power in our hands, and wondering if we are big enough to handle this power.

It's that wonderful, comforting feeling when the newspaper comes out on Wednesday evening.

"Pierced" Looks Bring New Fads Into Ear Lobes

By JANET FAIRES

The present abundance of pierced ears, not only at Longwood but other campuses, has been met with an equal abundance of pierced earrings. The sales of earrings has zoomed within the past years resulting in a great profit for jewelry manufacturers.

The demand for earrings that are unusual and unique is on the rise and it can be foreseen that other minor industries who have no connection with jewelry making may begin to profit from the sale of earrings. Take, for example, the makers of guitar picks. With the folk singing and beetle rages, which resulted in an increase in the sale of guitars, which resulted in the increase in the sale of guitar picks, this minor industry increased their sales. But now that girls have found that the unusually shaped, colorful pieces of plastic and felt can be easily put on ear wires and worn to give a wild and daring look, sales should show an even greater increase.

But why should girls stop here? One freshman girl after enjoying a chicken dinner noticed the tiny wish bones and thought "why not?" Does this indicate that girls may begin buying fowl for their wish bones and that the chicken-pickers union can demand an increase in wages because of the increase in sales? Who would thought pierced ears could so greatly effect our economy?

If you stop to think about it pierced earrings could be not only unusual but also practical. A forgetful girl who couldn't remember to take the front door key with her when she went out on a date, or frequently lost it, could get a set of keys made put them on wires and wear them.

Of course many boys don't like the girls they date to pierce their ears but perhaps they could be remedied by another type of piercing. Animal crackers and various types of candy would give one's date something nourishing and tasty to nibble on. If your date didn't like the idea though you could then pull out your plump of quarter, dime, and nickel earrings and take a cab home.

It seems that the future may hold promise for the sale of anything that is different, purposeful and comes in pairs. Have any ideas? You may be able to capitalize!

"Katman" Shows Girl Washington By Night

By JEAN D'ARK

(Our story this far: The Shah of Ristanborck, with his harem of 42 wives, including Venusia, his #1 wife, has arrived in diplomatic Washington for a visit. Kenneth Parker, alias that renowned second story artist, KATMAN, has been assigned by the Secret Service to protect Venusia, and her 29 karat emerald. The Sea Queen, which she wears in her navel.)

Venusia handed Parker the jewel. "Surprisingly, it's really quite comfortable," she said, with a small smile on her lips. "And quite valuable," he added as a gesture of good feelings. "Why don't you let me hold it for you, for safe-keeping purposes, of course?"

"I wouldn't dream of it," she answered. "I have a special case for it right here." She walked over to a bureau drawer and pulled out a small oval silver case. "This bobbin pin I have wedged in the lock makes it easy for me to put in away and get it out. I don't need to worry about it getting stuck or anything."

"Hummm . . ." Parker made a mental note of the entire situation.

"Where are the other 41 wives?" he asked her.

"Oh, they're taking a special Gray Line Sightseeing Tour. For most of them, it's their first trip to Washington. I haven't been very long in several years. But I'm not interested in running around and looking at a bunch of buildings and relics."

"Well, I'm supposed to offer you my complete and total services . . . to uh, keep an eye on you, of course." He gazed intently into her blue eyes. "You know, there is a lot more to our fair city than 'buildings and relics.' Take my home, the part of the Capital that I'm most familiar with, for instance. It's called Georgetown, and we have very few relics there . . . He could not help smiling at the thought.

"Perhaps there are some things I would like to see, Kenneth," she said softly. "Why don't I slip on something more appropriate, and we can, uh, go places."

She swayed into her bedroom, and returned a little later with a pop art dress on. He could tell it was by the Bardahl oil can printed on the front, and Gene Pitney's name embroidered on the back.

"Do you use Bardahl," he questioned.

"Why, as a matter of fact, I don't know . . . we're in the oxen racket, you see."

"What a coincidence," he exclaimed, going toward her.

White alligator sandals, a matching club bag, blue gloves, a blue bandanna, and blue sun-glasses completed her outfit. "I'm ready to take on anything in the city, now," she said. "Where is that guide book?"

"Right here," he said, pointing directly to himself. He was standing directly in front of her, and since he is Katman, it was a good thing she was not a canary, Kenneth. Venusia by the arm and they started out. An exclamation of delight was heard when she saw the Stutz-Bearcat, with its special swivel seats, designed to look like bar stools. The acoustics of the automobile were hand-made to aid the tone of the 20 speaker stereo system, plus a m.-f.m. radio and built-in tapes. When the drapes were closed, the car gave complete privacy, and had the air of a recreation or games room . . .

They first visited a few of the more minor sights: the Smithsonian, the Freer Art Gallery, and the Aquarium. Venusia's interests were wide and varied. As dusk began to fall, she questioned him further about Georgetown.

"I thought George Washington had lived at Mount Vernon," she said with an air of innocence. "What did he do in a place like Georgetown?"

"Plenty," was all Parker could manage to say.

To make a long story short, they saw a lot of Tomfoolishness at the Tomfoolery, a number of scarlet garters at the Scarlet Garter, and much money business at the Monkey Business.

At about 2:30 he drove her back to the hotel. As they entered the suite, Caramel, an other wife, ran up to Venusia with some exciting news.

Venusia, who gave your copy of the "Alibi" to several years. Found-alma mater is having its Found-alma Day next week end, while you'll be here in the states! They've issued you a special invitation to be present at the ceremonies.

"Oh," she shrieked, and then, "I must go to Longwood, it's been so long since I've seen my old stomping grounds."

"Now, wait a minute," Kenneth said. "You'll need protection. . ."

"Then you must make the trip with me," she said without further hesitation.

Young Repubs. Sponsor Speech

On Thursday, April 21, the Young Republicans held their bi-monthly meeting in the Student Lounge. As their speaker they had Dick Obenchain, who ran for Congress in 1964 as a representative from the third district. Mr. Obenchain was introduced by Mr. J. T. Baxter, a Young Republican from the third district.

Mr. Obenchain spoke on the role of the Young Republicans in the Republican party in Virginia. Republicans must use the things they have learned in an effective way so as to keep the party alive, and to make sure that people know what the Republican party stands for.

Meetings of the Young Republicans are held every other Thursday night at 7:00 p.m. in Dr. Helms' classroom.

LC Tennis Team Loses Matches In First Games

The Longwood Varsity tennis team traveled to Lynchburg for their first match of the year on Wednesday, April 20. Four singles and three doubles were played. The number 1 singles was Kaye Moore, number 2 - Anna Pettis, 3 - Gay Rice, and 4 - Pat Ingram. The singles were split with Longwood taking two and Lynchburg two. Gay Rice had the best game, as she had to play three sets.

The number 1 doubles were Barbara Lewis and Sharon Williams, 2 - Anna Pettis and Rosemary Rudy, and 3 - Kaye Moore and Pat Ingram. The first two doubles were split so the whole match depended on the best two out of three sets in the last doubles. Longwood took one set and Lynchburg took the other, making a third set necessary to determine the outcome of the whole match. Our L. C. ladies had the score tied at 5 all, but Lynchburg pulled ahead to win the set and the match by a slim margin of 7 to 5. In the doubles, Rosemary Rudy, the only Senior on the team, and Anna Pettis also played a fine game.

Saturday found the Madison team here at L. C.; this marked the first home match for the Longwood netters. Bad weather and court conditions had kept the Varsity team from practicing between the Lynchburg and Madison matches. Madison brought the good weather with them, won all the matches, and took home a victory. Three singles and two doubles were played. Number 1 singles was Kaye Moore, 2 - Gay Rice, and 3 - Marsha Moorefield. In the doubles, number 1 was Anna Pettis and Rosemary Rudy and 2 was Sharon Williams and Barbara Lewis.

Our girls have had a little bad luck with the rainy weather and bad court conditions, but there are still four matches left, and we wish them the best of luck in these remaining matches. Come out and support the team!

Les Francophiles Present Speaker, Miss Van Laere

Miss Luce Van Laere spoke to "Les Francophiles" on April 18 on a "Promenade en Province sur les traces de Van Gogh et Daudet." Miss Van Laere, director of a school for social and cultural work in Brussels, is visiting Miss Van Huuse of the Longwood faculty.

Slides of Country In her talk, Miss Van Laere pointed out the variety of culture and geography in Provence. She also showed magnificent slides of the arid plains, high mountains, St. Tropez beaches, and Roman ruins. Among guests at the meeting were Dr. and Mrs. Newman, Dinner in Dining Hall. After the talk, Miss Van Laere joined members of the Foreign Language Department and officers of "Les Francophiles" for a dinner in the dining hall.

JAYNE EDDY

Senior Spotlight On Jayne Eddy

By GINNY SIRC

Do you know a Senior Physical Education major who has played Varsity field hockey for four years, wears sunglasses nearly all the time, has her own Corvair convertible, is "always alert" for 8 o'clock classes, and is noted for saying "Eh?" when you speak to her? Of course, it's Jayne "the Payne" Eddy!

Jayne came to Longwood from Hanley High School in Winchester, Va. Not only has she been outstanding in field hockey, but she has played class basketball, softball, and volleyball and is a dedicated member of the Monogram Club. Last fall Jayne was awarded a blue blazer in recognition of her participation in the field of athletics. Her favorite pastimes include bowling, horseback riding, shooting pool, playing chess at 25¢ a game, and eating. Jayne is also a member of Phi Mu social fraternity.

Third block found Jayne student teaching in Lynchburg in preparation for her job at Hampton next year. At present she is struggling along with the rest of the Senior majors through Organization and Administration of Physical Education (fondly called O and A), a course taught by Miss Heintz. "Yes, Jayne, the Sports' Spotlight is on you, in recognition of your enthusiasm and true Longwood spirit. Welcome back to the L. C. campus!"

It can tell you that the Water Show is going to be something spectacular. I have observed some of the practices from my secret perch, and the precision shows much long and hard practice. The scenery has not been unveiled as yet, but the girls have been working constantly on it. I predict an excellent show.

After seeing some girls playing tennis at 6:00 a.m., I decided a schedule of the hours when the courts are in use would be helpful. The first hour to avoid in the 6:00 a.m. rush. On Monday, Wednesday, and Friday the courts are in use from 9:00-5:00 by the tennis classes and varsity team. On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday the courts are used from 9:00-10:00 and from 3:00-4:00. Also, check the varsity tennis team schedule for game times. Students are asked not to play on the courts when they are wet or soft because the footprints are hard to remove.

Beginning this year different faculty members are going to assist with the class and color sports. Edwin Miles is manager of softball, and Miss Ripley is the faculty member; Bobbie Allen will manage badminton, and Mrs. Harris is the faculty member; Eleanor Umdenstock is manager.

Practices Begin On New Field For Softball

Attention all you Seniors, Juniors, Sophomores, and Freshmen!!! Class Games in Softball, as well as Color Games in Softball, are coming up. Why don't you stop goofing off and head over to the New Field, and get in on some action???

Times are 6:45, from April 27 through 28, and 4:00 on Thursday, April 28. From May 2 through the 5, times are also 6:45, and on Tuesday, May 3 and Thursday, May 5, also at 4:00.

Softball is a great game, and the more you play, the better you get, and, of course, the better you get, the more you want to play. It's great exercise to limber up those muscles and trim off a few pounds for the fast approaching swimsuit season. It's great relaxation, too, as well as a figure beauty aid. So relieve tension (get away from those pre-exam jitters) and head over to the New Field, Today!!!

of swimming, and Miss Heintz is the faculty adviser; and Carolyn Prillaman will manage bowling assisted by Miss Huffman.

All students are urged to take advantage of recreational bowling now before the end of the school year.

Remember recreational equipment can be checked out between 4:00-5:00 everyday until further notice.

Check the posted softball schedule for practices and rules. Support your class.

Be alert for news of tennis doubles for class reps.

I urge all students to read the revised AA Constitution for changes concerning class and color sports. There will be a class as well as a color cup given this year. These changes affect all the students.

Tickets On Sale As Water Show Unveils Surprise

For one night, why not journey to ten big countries? The United Nations Water Assembly will present England, Russia, Germany, Japan, Spain, France, Israel, Africa, Austria, and the United States. Each country has an act performed in the water by various groups of girls from the H2O Club and Corkettes. The finale shows all of the nations gathered in an assembly of the nations. The numbers were written and will be performed by the members of the Corkettes and H2O. Not only have the girls been practicing for weeks for the spectacular show but also began work on the small details before exams.

The eleven numbers will begin performance on Wednesday night and will end on Friday night. Friday night after the show, 6 members of H2O and Corkettes will go to North Carolina for Collegiate AAU Competition.

For all of you who have been wondering about the mystery, be sure to attend the unveiling on Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday nights. All of the girls have been working extra hard to stage one of the best Water Shows ever. Congratulations also go to Miss Smith, the sponsor, for her time and effort. Don't miss the show. Tickets are only 35¢ and may be bought from members of the H2O club and Corkettes.

Class And Color Cup Changes In Effect

Enthusiasm is running high as the year's end approaches and the presentation of the color cup is anticipated. The new Athletic Association award, the class cup, will also be presented this year. Changes in the Athletic Association constitution have caused some apprehension on the part of students as to how the two awards will be made this year. The Athletic Association Board, in order to clarify the status of the color cup, is anxious to make certain that students understand what activities are included in the awards. Since the constitutional changes were not made at the beginning of the academic year, the system which has been in effect for some years will be employed in awarding the color cup this year. The new award system will commence in September 1966. For this year the lists presented here should enable students to determine the status of the classes with respect to the class and color cups.

The winner of a point tournament receives 10 points toward the color and/or class cup. In the individual events, the winner of the tournament earns 5 points for her class and/or color team.

In tournaments to be held for the remainder of the year, classes must have a team entered in the class tournament. The softball tournament and the swimming meet teams will not be combined sister class teams. If a sufficient number of students from each class is not entered in these events, the activities will not be held. Therefore, classes should encourage members of their classes to attend the many practices which are scheduled.

Assembly Committee Favors New Changes

Contest, Senior Convocation.

N.B. Under this section, the committee wishes to recommend further that the students be apprised through whatever channels seem proper and expedient that the basis of their attendance at the several assemblies is a general consensus of what assemblies will most interest them, and at which ones their presence is both desirable and necessary.

IV. That it be further stated in the Student Handbook that additional assemblies or meetings may be called as deemed necessary, and that the students requested to attend will be notified at that time.

V. That those campus organizations which have in the past sponsored assemblies now have their programs and/or speakers at another time, their regular meeting time, per ex., and depend upon the interest and worth of those programs to attract an audience beyond their own immediate memberships.

VI. That a separate, evening series of lectures, musical events, or whatever the committee might feel to be of general interest, be established, to begin in the fall of 1966.

N.B. The committee wishes to point out that such a series will in no way compete unduly with the present Artist Series Program which is devoted to bringing the best in cultural events to this campus. The new series which we envision will provide an excellent, convenient framework for such lectures as the University Center might have available, visitors from other campuses, musical and dance events that are well worth the hearing and seeing but have not made the "big time."

In other words, the evening series will provide new complementary cultural outlet for Longwood College, and if thrown open to the general public, may provide a valuable contact with the town and surrounding area.

VII. That the evening series be a monthly one, to be scheduled for October, November, February, March, and April.

VIII. That the present Student Assembly Committee with a single advisor (faculty) be enlarged to include three faculty members, chosen by the Student Committee, as assistants and advisors, and that this committee have as its function the scheduling of both the traditional campus events and the new series.

IX. That Freshmen be required to attend the evening series, as a means of further widening their horizons and increasing their cultural and intellectual growth, and that upper classes attend on an optional basis.

N.B. The committee feels strongly if the new series is interesting and varied, upper classes will want to attend, and required freshmen attendance will provide a suitably large dependable "audience core."

X. That, if at all possible, neither a traditional assembly, nor an evening series event shall be scheduled for the same week as an Artist Series event.

XI. That, inasmuch as the 1 o'clock hour on Tuesday has proved to be, in most cases, unworkable and inconvenient, both traditional assemblies and the evening series be scheduled for the evening. Wednesday is suggested as the most appropriate choice.

N.B. The committee does, however, wish to recommend that the 1 o'clock Tuesday hour be kept free as long as possible, since it could be a most convenient time for class and organization meetings, and various faculty and committee meetings.

Purpose of Headquarters: The chief purpose of the Headquarters will be the permanent location of the Sorority's Executive Office which serves 64 collegiate and 137 alumnae chapters and more than 29,000 individual members throughout the country. The Mabel Lee Walton House will also serve as a center of activities for all members and will store Tri Sigma's memorabilia and archives. The Headquarters is being financed by individual member and chapter contributions.

LC Alpha Chapter

The members of Alpha Chapter of Longwood College attended the Dedication. Alpha Chapter was founded at Longwood College on April 20, 1898. The members celebrated their Founders Day on Wednesday, April 20, with a Banquet honoring their sponsor Miss Kate Trent. The Chapter was also honored with the visit of their National President, Mrs. Nelda Crawford (an alumnae of Longwood College) who was an honorary guest at the Banquet.

Officers of the Chapter for 1966-67 are: President, Haney Randall; Vice-President, Sharon Strickland; Recording Secretary, Sue Ramsey; Corresponding Secretary, June Lancaster; and Treasurer, Kathy Stone.

Visit National Gallery On April 15, Mrs. Lemen took a group of water-color and oil painting students to visit the National Art Gallery in Washington, D.C. They viewed a collection on loan from Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mellon and Mrs. Bruce Mellon. They are part of the family who gave money originally to found the National Gallery.

Home Economists Have 56th Annual Convention

"Home Economics Potential... Unlimited" was the theme of the Virginia Home Economics Association, which was held April 14, 15, and 16 at the Cavalier Hotel, Virginia Beach, Virginia. Home economists of the following professional areas participated: colleges and universities; elementary, secondary and adult education; extension service; health and welfare; business; homemaking; and institutional administration.

Longwood College was well represented at the convention with seven students and two professors. Mrs. Frances Gee has served the VHEA as secretary for the past two years. This year Longwood College led the college club section of the VHEA with Miss Lora Bernard serving as advisor, Miss Margaret Poole serving as president and Miss Betty Williams and Miss Lucy Hawthorne serving as co-secretaries.

The delegates especially enjoyed the Friday night banquet with Dr. Naomi Albanese, Dean of the School of Home Economics, University of North Carolina, Greensboro, speaking on "Leadership Challenges for the Coming Decade."

Governor Mills E. Godwin, Jr., proclaimed the week of the convention as Home Economics Week in Virginia.

"Home economics reaches into every phase of family living and is essential to the various areas of health, nutrition and human relationships."

"The Virginia Home Economics Association provides leadership for professional home economists in colleges and universities; research; extension; preschool, secondary, and adult education; business; institution administration; and health and welfare."

"Membership in the Association is dedicated to the promotion of the well-being of individuals and families, the improvement of homes, and the preservation of the values significant in good and wholesome family life."

"As Governor of the Commonwealth, and in recognition of the contribution made by the Virginia Home Economics Association, and its 56th Annual Meeting in Virginia Beach, Virginia, April 13 through 16, 1966, I take pleasure in designating the week of April 10 through April 16 as Virginia Home Economics Week and urge citizens of Virginia to join in tribute to the home economists for their contributions to the welfare of our community, to personal and family life."

All of the delegates agreed that the convention was truly a challenging experience which gave them an insight into the woman's place in government, and the job opportunities that are available to women in the field of home economics, as well as an opportunity for professional growth.

"Dido and Aeneas" Opera

L. C. Spring Production

By SUZAN WOJTYZ
On Saturday, May 7, the Music Department will present, as its Spring Production, "Dido and Aeneas," an opera by Henry Purcell. The time of the opera is set for 8:00 p.m., in Jarman Auditorium.

Leads in the story will be Billie Sue Board, a senior, playing Dido, Queen of Carthage. Opposite her is sophomore Anne Stowell, playing Aeneas. Linda Pritchard, a junior, portrays Belinda, Dido's Lady-in-Waiting, and Mildred Johnson, a junior, plays another of Dido's attendants.

Three Witches in the story are sung by Judy Hester, Faye Carter, and Susan Fuller. Phala Leggett, a sophomore, is cast as a sailor, and Carolyn Brockmeyer is cast as the god Mercury.

Mr. Robert Blasch is the accompanist on the piano. Also accompanying the opera will be several members of the Richmond Symphony.

The following is a short synopsis of the plot by acts and scenes:

Act I, Scene I - Dido, the Queen of Carthage, confesses to her attendants her love for Aeneas, who, during his flight from Troy and in his pursuit of the fulfillment of the divine decree that he must found a new empire, has visited Carthage. The royal pair meet and vow their mutual love.

In Act I, Scene II, the Sorceress and Witches meet in a cave to plot mischief upon both Dido and Aeneas.

Act II, Scene I - a hunting expedition. A terrific thunderstorm separates the two parties, and Dido's company hurries back to the capital. A malicious spirit, sent by the Sorceress, appears in the guise of Mercury, and warns Aeneas that the gods are angry because he is not proceeding to Italy, and then demands his departure.

Act III finds Trojan sailors preparing their ships, and the Sorceress and Witches rejoicing and threatening a storm at sea to harry Aeneas and his followers. They prophesize the death of Dido. Dido reproaches Aeneas, and after his departure sings her death-song.

"Organ Week" Hosts

Dr. Arthur Poister

A six-day "organ week," to which a number of out-of-town students and teachers of organ were invited was held on the campus of Longwood College.

The main features of the work-study-performance sessions were two days of organ master classes, directed by Dr. Arthur Poister, one of America's outstanding teachers of organ. All sessions were held in Jarman Auditorium or the Jarman Rehearsal Room.

The most comprehensive organ workshop ever held on the Longwood campus, the occasion was sponsored by the Guild Student Group, a number of local area organ students who are affiliated with the American Guild of Organists. Workshop arrangements were made under the direction of Dr. Joanne Currutt, associate professor of music at the college.

Dr. Poister's first master class was held on Friday, April 29, from 9 a.m. to 12 noon, and featured "larger works" by Johann Sebastian Bach. Classes in "smaller works" by Bach were held on Saturday, April 30, during the hours of 3 to 12 p.m. and 2 to 4 p.m. At 5:30 p.m. there was a "Poister Picnic."

Sally Tod Pottage, senior organ major from Crewe, presented a senior honors recital on Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m. in the Rehearsal Room of Jarman Auditorium. Other recitals were scheduled in Jarman Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings. The concluding program tonight will be a junior recital by Sylvia Elizabeth Butler, of Richmond.

University organist and professor of organ at Syracuse University, Dr. Poister is nationally recognized as the foremost American interpreter of Bach's works for the organ. He has played in seven Bach festivals. Five times he was given the honor of playing at conventions of the American Guild of Organists. In 1956 the "Choral and Organ Guide Magazine" ranked Professor Poister among the "ten most distinguished organists in the United States." He has given organ concerts throughout the world.

May Day Brings Mom's Luncheon To Annual Fest

May Day this year will be primarily a weekend honoring the mothers of the girls at Longwood.

At 12:15 Saturday there will be a mother-daughter luncheon. The high point of the weekend will take place at the Dell at Longwood Estates at 2:00. Queen of May Day, Helena Hall will be crowned by Marlene Armour, Maid of Honor. The princesses who were elected earlier this year are Jane Brown, Judy Cumfitt, Ginny Daugherty, Carol Dedischew, Betty Jo Hammer, Barbara Hooper, Pam Kerber, Kathy Mapp, Connie Parkins, Mary Kay Richeson, Pam Spiggle, and Eleanor Walnes.

The theme of this year's May Day is "Showcase" and will be carried out in the form of a variety show, which will be hosted by Mr. Robert Woodburn. Millie Gwaltney has acted as Chairman for this year's May Day festivities.

Dr. Charlotte S. Hooker. Professor of English has written an article entitled "The Poet and the Dreamer: A Study of Keat's 'The Fall of Hyperion'" which will be published in volume 17 (1966) of "The McNeese Review," an annual publication.

Former Geography Professor Assumes New Duties July 1

Mr. Harold K. Magnusson, of the Longwood College Department of History and Social Sciences, has been named registrar of Longwood, effective July 1.

He succeeds Charles F. Hileman, who held the position of registrar and assistant to the dean for several months last fall before resigning because of ill health and returning to his former home in Millboro, Virginia, where he is now associated with the area public schools.

President James H. Newman announced Prof. Magnusson's appointment and stated that he would not only serve as registrar but would continue to teach some classes in geography as assistant professor of geography. A native of Lansing, Iowa, Mr. Magnusson received the B. S.

degree in secondary education at Longwood in 1956. In 1959 the college awarded him the master of arts degree in education. He attended the 1961-62 summer sessions at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, where he did graduate work in geography. In the fall of 1962 he was appointed to the Longwood faculty as an instructor.

Current Longwood faculty marshal, Mr. Magnusson has served as chairman of the steering committee for a major self-evaluation of Longwood by the college faculty in 1962-63, in behalf of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

A former president of the Virginia Education Association, he has been active in several state professional groups. Presently he is editor of publications of the Virginia Geographical Society, and has served as president and treasurer of this state-wide group of teachers of geography. He is also a member of the American Geographical Society, Association of American Geographers, and the National Council for Geographic Education.

Student Gov't. Names Lamb, '67 For Publications

By GWYN MUISE
Alice Lamb, a junior from Richmond, has been elected chairman of the Publications Board for 1966-67. She is well-qualified for this position, having served on "The Virginian" staff for two years, and as Junior Class editor his past year.

An elementary education major, Alice hopes to teach second grade after graduation. Her personal interests include knitting, cooking and collecting recipes, and sewing. When the school year is over, the new chairman will still be working as she has been doing in past summers, in the Business Office of the Medical College of Virginia.

Alice, who will replace the outgoing chairman Mary Ruth Reynolds, says that one of her main interests is that more students become aware of the existence of the Publications Board and its function on the Longwood campus. The board, which consists of the editors, business managers, and faculty sponsors of "The Gyre," "The Rotunda," and "The Virginian," serves to promote interest in campus publications. It also assists editors with problems, and helps to elect editors, assistant editors, and business managers for each of these publications.

Alice, in her new capacity as chairman, held her first Publications Board meeting Monday night.

Schools Face Revolution,

Educational Innovations

(Ed. Note: This article is a reprint from "Education Today" in the Miami Herald.)

Our children's children will go to schools far different from the ones we know today.

Innovations in education are more talked about than practiced now, except in a very few "model" classes. But by the year 2000 all school children will benefit from sweeping changes in education.

"Education USA," a publication of the National Education Association reported recently on a conference called to plan a new community in Arizona. Planners foresaw these educational changes:

THE PRE-SCHOOL and early elementary years will take over as the high-prestige schooling years and will receive the money and status which now go to the upper grades. All children will start school at three and four years of age, meeting in small groups in residence-like centers.

THE ONE-TEACHER classroom of 30 students, all the same age, will be a thing of the past. New age groupings will cut across today's rigidly graded classes: kindergarten, first and second will work together; third, fourth and fifth will combine, as will the sixth, seventh and eighth years.

THE BASIC SUBJECTS of the future - no doubt far different from those children study today - will be taught mainly through programmed materials, each child working separately at his own pace. Teachers will thereby be able to spend most of their time on individual or small-seminar-type instruction.

Another future educational change, being experimented with successfully in a few schools today, is the doing away with the standard class periods, all the same length no matter what subject is taught.

These are being abandoned in favor of flexible scheduling, depending on a day-to-day basis working out on the time needs of a particular class on a particular day. A science class, for example, may need three hours to complete an experiment one day and no class time the day after.

William Boutwell in the new "P-T-A Guide to What's Happening in Education," reports that secondary principals looking into the future predict that students will spend only 18 hours a week in class instead of the present 30. Twelve of these hours will be in large-group instruction (100-plus students) under master "teacher specialists;" six hours will be small seminars led by less experienced "general teachers."

Students, he says, will check their own progress by using machines and self-marking tests instead of waiting for teachers to grade their work. This will help youngsters develop independence and take more responsibility for their own education.

Planners predict that students finishing 14 years of this new schooling will outscore today's college graduates.

It's ironic, however, that in view of these coming changes, the schools we build today are obsolete even before they open. Boutwell charges that our "eggcrate" schools (a series of boxes for one teacher and 30 pupils) are chaining us to an outdated learning pattern.

Come to AGK "Faculty Firesides" at 9:45 p.m. Thursday in the Cypress Room.

Longwood Girls Capture Honors In Singing Field

In Singing Field

On April 23 The National Association of Teachers of Singing held their State Student Auditions at Mary Washington College, in Fredericksburg, Virginia. Girls from Longwood captured top honors in all three existing fields.

Ann Freshman, a freshman from Healing Springs, Va., was first in Group I, Preparatory. In Group II, junior Linda Pritchard, from Virginia Beach, placed first, and in Group III, Advanced, Judy Hester, a senior, received the top honor. Judy is from Chesapeake, Va.

All these are music majors in voice, and students of James K. McCombs, Assistant Professor of Music. They were in competition with 40000 only.

Participating in the auditions were, as well as Longwood, students from Hollins College, Richmond Professional Institute, Old Dominion College, and private teachers of music who are members of the association.

This event was the first annual State Audition. Previously national ones have been held, the last being in Athens, Ga. Anyone so desiring may enter the National Student Auditions.

Kappa Delta Sorority held its annual spring banquet honoring its new initiates Saturday, April 30, in the college team room.

The Gamma Theta-Kappa Delta Scholarship dedicates, Mrs. Francis Willis Walker, presented an original poem to express her feelings for Kappa Delta. A check for $150 was presented to Dr.

Newman for the scholarship. Mrs. Julia Popper, past president of the National Council of Kappa Delta, was the guest speaker. Other guests included Dr. and Mrs. Newman, Mrs. Florence Stubbs, sponsor of Alpha Phi, Mrs. Ruth Wilson, Mrs. Martha T. Melvin, Panhellenic sponsor, and several alumnae.

Necessity - Strict Study

The recent discussion of Strict Study Hour brings to mind the possibility of abolishing the system as a whole. The end of Strict Study is something The Rotunda stands against, for several reasons.

Firstly, we feel, to end the system would result in insurmountable nightly chaos, and no study could possibly be accomplished in the dormitories. The major criticism with this point of view is summed up with the words "Study where quiet is required—go to the library, or West Wing, or the science building."

We hate to think what would result if the entire student body turned up in the library, or west wing, or science building, to study one night. Just having one class at a time in a building the size of the library gives cramped quarters, as registration well demonstrates. There are not enough facilities on campus to allow for total outside-dormitory study. And, no matter where you study, the more people around you the noisier it becomes. Study entirely outside of the dormitory would, naturally, necessitate larger groups of people together. Where else can you study alone, or with just one other person, for as long as you want to, except in your own room?

Besides, who doesn't prefer to study with their shoes off, or their bermudans on, either in a relaxed position or sitting up at desk? Desk space is not a rarity in your room, whereas getting some in the library, especially during exam time, can often be a major feat. You can be much more relaxed, and in a better frame of mind to take on information, in your own familiar room surroundings.

Perhaps the problem with the Strict Study Hour lies with the hall presidents. An incapable hall president will look aside at offenses of the rule, or often may be guilty of violations herself. Who wants to give a good friend a call down just because she plays her favorite record on her phonograph after 7:30?

And, honestly, now, isn't it just more peaceful, relaxing and calm to settle down for 2½ hours in the evening? And being able to break out at 10:00 does not make it a hardship at all, for anyone, even the most "active" student.

If a new substitute system could be found, then the end of the older one would possibly be justified. However, if the present Strict Study Hour cannot be adequately enforced, and it is not we feel, hope for a successful change is very slim. We should concentrate on making the present rule effective! We should try to bring about the success of the current plan, not give up in failure only to embark on another "solveless" solution.

The Rotunda backs the present Strict Study Hour with only, perhaps, modifications for improved enforcement. We feel it a shame that the idea of changing or abolishing the rule is even considered, especially now since the Honor Council is valiantly trying to raise academic interest among the students. And students, if they would obey study regulations, might perhaps find some personal improvement in store, both academically, and mentally, and thus by become more of what a college student is supposed to be.

Review

"The Glass Menagerie"

Rates 'Semi-Success'

The Production of Tennessee Williams' "The Glass Menagerie" by the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jangleurs can be deemed a semi-success. Artistically the presentation was good but the play lacked in audience appeal.

In direct contrast to conventional performances "The Glass Menagerie," the play, directed by Robert E. Alexander, was unusual and stimulating. The Williams' play, as visualized by Alexander, had more fiber to it than is ordinarily shown by the somewhat insipid portrayals of the usual characters.

Warren Fulton's Jim was a shock to the audience, for though Fulton played his role well for the most part, the conventional interpretation is that of a sympathetic, yet egotistical caller. Fulton was merely egotistical. He deserves kudos nevertheless, for his beautifully resonant voice.

The song of Mary Ann Chinn is well known to the Jamian stage and the speed with which she delivered her lines as Amanda, the mother, did not detract from her majestic delivery. In Thursday night's performance she did not appear old enough, but by Saturday she seemed to have aged enough to be totally believable.

Also on Thursday night Tom Bradley's portrayal of the brother Tom was a little flighty, but he was perhaps enraptured with the audience at first, and settled down by Friday night to give one of the best performances of his career on the Longwood stage. Bradley seems to have overcome a pronounced drawl which had earlier impaired his speeches on the stage.

In the role of Laura, Shirley Timberlake seems to have found a vehicle for her considerable talent. She was sensitive, and almost believable in the part of a somewhat unreal girl.

Miss Timberlake's limited facial expression, as called for in her part, were impaired by the presence of the gauze screen separating the audience from the players. Alexander attempted to separate the audience emotionally from the stage, but in addition he detracted immensely from the quality.

The main objection of the audience to the play, other than the lack of visibility, was the incomplete use of updating. The play was to be contemporary, with uses of Batman imagery and of Sean Connery and Casey Stengel then anachronisms such as "cut a rug," and "hot ass."

The actors and the actors are to be commended, regardless of certain flaws, for their attempt at a difficult play, and for their insight into what was possibly Tennessee Williams' intent, which was to write "The Glass Menagerie" as a semi-success.

Contest Questioning

To the Editor,

As we sat eating our bologna and cheese sandwiches, we could not help pondering how the Miss Longwood contestants must have impressed the judges with their stacking ability — and we don't mean measurements. It certainly seems that if Longwood College is willing to reap the glory and publicity of having their girls compete in the Miss Virginia contest that they would strive to make the contest more enticing. We doubt if bologna sandwiches add to the appeal.

It appears that a meal in Weyanoke Dining Room or another similar pleasant atmosphere would not only have given the girls a better opportunity to put their "best foot forward," but also would have been more enjoyable for the judges. It is doubtful that amid the noise of announcements, dishes, and chatter that the judges were even able to hear the girls, must less enjoy conversing with them.

As Longwood College continues to expand, perhaps next year this will also include a pageant of a higher caliber.

Sincerely yours,
Carol Skelley and Selena Lunstford

Assembly Speakers

Dear Editors:

The assembly program presented by Longwood every Tuesday at 1 p.m. has an admirable goal, presumably that of exposing the student to varied speakers in hopes of giving the student a well-rounded education. There is one basic weakness — the speakers themselves. In the series of lectures presented by the Visiting Scholars Program, only one speaker has spoken extemporaneously; the other speakers have read their lectures. These men are professors at large universities and authorities, some have even written books on their subjects. Yet they could not even present a proper speech.

They completely ignored the fundamentals of speech-making. Some of the lectures had poor organization which made it hard for the listener to follow the main points of the speaker. But even when the lectures were organized it was almost impossible for the student to understand the lecture because the topics were too technical. The average student does not have the proper background to understand the lecture on Dante and Aristotle or "Yeats — Belatedly." Many students have not read the works of Dante, Aristotle, or Yeats. Therefore it is impossible to expect the student to understand the technical aspects of such topics when she has no basic ideas about them.

We have a suggestion that should improve the situation. Before the lecture a short resume could be handed out giving the background for the lecture. As in the lecture "Yeats — Belatedly" a brief summary of his life and works would have been very helpful. The same idea could apply to the Dante — Aristotle lecture.

But the most important criticism is that the topics are not the least bit interesting or applicable to the student body as a whole.

The poor audience reception to the lectures might be corrected if the lectures were more understanding and interesting, and the quality of the speakers improved. But maybe we do not understand the purpose of these lectures. Perhaps it is the training that all ladies should have how to politely listen to a boring lecture.

Student Query For Alexander To Stay at LC

Dear Editor,

Once in a while as we go through college we all encounter a truly fine professor. He is certainly not perfect, but in several ways he is different from the "average" professor. Mr. Robert Alexander is a professor of this type.

Those of us who have had the opportunity to work in Jarman with him on the plays this semester and/or to have him for a class rejoice in finally being given responsibility for things that we are capable of doing. This is undoubtedly the best way to learn about the theater or anything else, for that matter — to learn by doing, correcting our own mistakes as we go, yet still receiving guidance when needed.

We are sorry to hear that Mr. Alexander's contract hasn't been renewed for next semester. He doesn't have his Doctorate degree — a degree he could only get in Theater History. The administration prefers a person with a Doctorate to fill his position. Our question is why if a person is formally well-trained and also experienced in the technical aspects of the theater and able to show his students the necessity for an abundance of creativity and initiative in theater work — why must he be replaced because his students can't address him as Dr. Alexander? Certainly we all can agree that professors definitely exist who have their Doctorate degrees, and

Katman, Venusia Hit

Longwood With Visit

By JEAN D'ARR

Our story this far, Venusia, the #1 girl of the Shah of Ristan-borkeh, and owner of the famous Sea Queen Emerald, and her body guard, Kenneth Parker, alias Katman, have taken in the sights of Washington, D. C. Venusia has now decided to return to her old Alma Mater, Longwood College, for a visit. Kenneth, as her protection, must accompany her.)

"Now, wait a minute," Caramel was saying, "what will the Shah say?"

"Ha," Venusia laughed, "you just leave ole Ristan to me. I have methods of persuasion you other wives haven't even thought of. How do you think that I became his #1?"

So, with that statement, she hurried off to tell the Shah of her plans.

The next morning, she was all packed and ready to go, and waiting for Kenneth to pick her up. She looked rather tired, like she hadn't gotten a wink of sleep, but was very excited.

She was dressed in a lemon yellow sari. The Shah had insisted that she wear native costumes, especially since she had presented her case as a "Good Will Ambassador's" trip. Little did he suspect that that was the only native outfit d'art along. The other garments were all in Venusia's impeccable western taste.

They created a little stir when they stopped in Hot Shoppes, in Richmond, for a bite of lunch. Kenneth had wanted to take in the Jade Isle, but Venusia wanted to re-acquaint herself with local customs.

"Goodness, I don't remember that 4-lane road at all," she said as they pulled into Farmville, and as she surveyed Main Street, exclaimed, "You mean they still don't have it fixed? They've been working on that new asphalt top for quite a long time now."

"I think the top is finished. Presently they're working on a water main, or heated sidewalks, or something," Kenneth said with the air of one who knows. Venusia only smiled.

She checked into the Alumni House, and Kenneth was forced across the street into the Weyanoke. He was hoping for adjoining accommodations, however, the Alumni House envisioned no such possibility. Venusia was surrounded by welcoming Granddaughters as she stepped from the car.

"By the way," Katman was saying, "where did you put the Sea Queen? Perhaps you might want one to keep it for you?"

"Oh, that won't be necessary. I've got it in its case, and I can just drop it by the Home Office at night."

"Home Office!!!" Katman rather choked. Venusia was more of a pigeon than he thought. "In on the agenda is dinner in the Dining Hall. Is Slater still here? Oh, good, they are. Come on, Kenneth, you'll just love this."

Kenneth turned rather green at the prospect. Somehow the idea of eating with 1500 girls was a bit staggering to his imagination. But she grabbed his hand and led him off.

"What's a statue of Paul Newman doing here, in the Rotunda," he commented as they passed into the smoker. Venusia pushed by the milling girls. There were no reserved tables on week ends for students, but, as guests, they were allowed to enter early.

"Let's order some Sparklin Burgundy to have with dinner and we can have Cognac afterwards in that, how do you say Freshmen Parlor?"

"Kenneth, baby, get with it. This is a state institution. We'll have iced tea or coffee. If you must drink, I guess we'll just have to go to Leo's, or else Hampden-Sydney."

"What's Leo's?" he questioned.

"Oh, it's a sort of atmosphereless 'Cedar Door' or 'Shadows,' kinda a filling station with tables."

The answer must have satisfied him, for he asked no questions. He could only muster the comment "Gads, there are a lot of women around here!"

After dinner they went to a concert in Jarman. During intermission Katman amused himself by exploring some nearby buildings, the Cummings, much to the delight of the residents. He was really beginning to enjoy himself.

They took a walk around the campus, and then proceeded to Leo's. Venusia really needed to walk more upon her return from the establishment, as she sang the "Charlie Boy" song quite loudly as she approached the Alumni House.

She gave Kenneth a friendly tweak on the ear at the door, and headed up to her room. Needless to say she was a little surprised when she found him already there as she entered.

"Kenneth," she burped, "What are you doing up here..."

Yes Ma'am, this is our "Home Sweet Home." Yes, sir-ee, good ole' 894!

Well, now that you mentioned I guess it could be a little neat er. But I was so bogged down with studying all week and my roommate's been in the infirmary. She doesn't mind the flit either.

By the way, why didn't you let me know you were coming and I could have fixed some coffee for us. Yes Ma'am, I know all electrical appliances are for-bidden in our rooms. Well, the I could have fixed us some "Tastle Ade."

But that is nyrized collection.

Intramural Archery Practices Underway

Have you signed up for intramural, class and color archery? If not, there's still time, so sign up now and support your class and color! Note that the archery tournament will not conflict with the softball tournament schedule.

To be qualified for the teams, a person must shoot 6 Columbia rounds during regular practice times. No more than 2 Columbia rounds may be shot at one practice with the exception of practices on Saturdays and Sundays when 3 rounds will be permitted. The Columbia round consists of 24 arrows from 50, 40, and 30 yards each.

Individual scores will be taken at practices for the intramural tournament and the highest scorer at the end of the practices for the intramural tournament will be the winner. The class teams will consist of the 5 highest scorers from each class at the end of the intramural tournament. Each class may have 5 members on the team. The color teams will consist of the 5 highest scorers from each color at the end of the class tournament. In both class and color tournaments, the score for one team will be the total of the scores of all team members. The color member will shoot 1 Columbia round at a match. The winning team will be the team with the highest total score after two Columbia rounds.

Practices are held on weekdays at 5:00 and 6:45 and will run through Friday, May 6. On Saturdays, there are practices at 4:00 and 5:00 and on Sundays at 2:00 and 3:00 unless announced otherwise.

Yes Ma'am, the cat's name is Buffy. I don't understand why he has to go—he sleeps in the shower and doesn't bother anybody. He's become sort of like the mascot of First Floor. Guess you didn't know they have a duck on Third Floor, huh?

You know, when we really do clean up our room it's traumatic. I can't find anything for days. When things are laying around like this I know exactly where everything is. Oh, you think that's a pretty flimsy philosophy?

And besides we only have three dresser drawers between us. Oh, No, please don't open the closet, I'd hate to have my opening arms because they are new life to us and new leaders for when we will pass on. We are eager to instill in them our sense of tradition here, and they are eager to learn.

ZTA Fraternity Attends Meeting And Adopts Child

State Day for Province I of Zeta Tau Alpha Fraternity was held at Madison College, in Harrisonburg, Virginia, recently on April 23. The chapters present were from Washington College, George Washington University, the University of Virginia, Madison College, and Longwood College.

At 10:00 a.m., there was a registration and coffee hour in the recreation center of the Pan-Hellenic Dormitory. Discussions and the initiation of new Zeta Tau Alpha into alumnae were held at 11:00 a.m.

A luncheon was served at the Belle-Meade Restaurant. Toastmistress was Mrs. Julia Yancey Ryan, Dr. Patricia J. Bruce, of the faculty of Madison, presented a welcome. The State Day speaker was Mary Stacy Jackson, past president of Province I, and mother of Sandra Lee Jackson, president for 1965 of the Alpha chapter here at Longwood. The Zetas attending from this campus were Carey Howell, Frances Stewart, Diane Dixon, Becky White, Diane Twilley, Janet Thompson, Suzanne Meek, Carolyn Hudgins, and pledges, Cynthia Clitche, Judy Owens, and Christy Cline.

Zeta Adopts Orphan Zeta Tau Alpha here at Longwood has adopted an orphan girl from France. The adoption took place through the Christian Children's Fund. The little girl is Myriam Vandroux, and she lives in the "Villa des Sapins," which means "The Home in the Pines." Villa des Sapins is an old chalet just outside of the village of Valdoie, near Belfort, on the Swiss border of France.

Due to the conflict with the Philadelphia Art Show, the dead line for art work for the "Gryl" contest has been extended until May 26. All work may be turned into Betsy Taylor or Linda Dyer, in S. C. A ten dollar cash prize goes to the winner in each category.

Chi Mysticism Instills Student Questioning

Dear Editor,

It is an annual phenomenon that freshmen come to Longwood, all of them wide eyed and anxious. We will always receive them with open arms because they are new life to us and new leaders for when we will pass on. We are eager to instill in them our sense of tradition here, and they are eager to learn.

CAROLYN BURNETTE

Spotlight Shines On Burnette, '66, Blazer Owner

This week's Senior Sports Spotlight is on Carolyn Burnette, better known as "Sooty." Carolyn transferred from Ferrum Junior College to Longwood at the beginning of her Sophomore year, and since has been quite active in representing L. C. through athletic participation. "Sooty" was on the Varsity basketball team for two years and has also been active in class hockey, volleyball, tennis, softball, and archery. Last fall she was awarded a blue blazer at the Athletic Banquet. This was quite a feat, as she had only two years to earn the required number of points for the award. Carolyn was also on the Athletic Association Council for one year.

She recently completed her student teaching in Lynchburg and will be teaching at Robert E. Lee Junior High School next year. This summer will find "Sooty" teaching swimming in her home town, Altavista, Va. This is a big joke among the Senior Majors because they all know that she does not have her instructor's certificate in swimming. Carolyn drives an old white Rambler and likes golf, bowling, water skiing, and a sailor named Gary!

Best of luck in your teaching at Robert E. Lee next year, Carolyn!

I hope you were not one of the unfortunate ones who missed the Water Show because you really missed an excellent production. Congratulations to all members of the H2O Club and Corkettes and Miss Smith for a fine performance. The Water Show was a sellout every night. Even an unfixed strap won't stop Geri.

New hours have been set up for students to check out athletic equipment. On Monday through Friday the hours are from 4:00-5:00 as usual, and on Saturdays anyone can secure equipment from 1:00-4:00 and on Sundays from 2:00-4:00. The equipment is for badminton, tennis, volleyball, basketball, ping pong, etc. If you find yourself with nothing to do, why not make use of this sports equipment.

I can only wonder when the bicycles will be ready for use. Softball practice is still going on the New Field by the New Gym. Support your class and color. See Edwin Miles in SC 107 for any information. Rules are on this page.

If your aim is accurate and you don't mind a few bruised arms, try class and color archery. Practices are on Monday through Friday at 5:00 and 6:45, on Saturdays from 4:00-6:00, and on Sundays from 2:00-4:00. The rules are posted all around the campus and also on this page. Support class and color archery.

Because of all this rain, students are asked not to use the tennis courts until they are dry.

Have you taken advantage of recreational bowling yet? If you haven't, you can't imagine all of the fun that you are missing. Watch in next week's paper for the results of the bowling tournament.

Calling all freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and seniors! Are you supporting your class and color in any of the sports activities going on at this time? Schedules have been arranged for students to participate in more than one activity if they wish to do so. The sports include class and color softball, archery, swimming, badminton, and tennis doubles.

After seeing the Water Show, more students should be interested in class swimming. Practices are not as well-attended as AA bulletin boards for a schedule of practices. Remember you need 8 to be able to compete. The meets begin May 11.

Two golf matches have been arranged with Lynchburg College. The first match will be played on May 3 at 1:00 on the L.C. Golf Course; the second is on May 14 at Lynchburg.

Sophomore Maxey Wins Miss Longwood Pageant

By CAROL SKELLEY
"I was shocked out of my mind," were the words of Nancy Maxey, from Arlington, who was recently named Miss Longwood College. She is a sophomore majoring in Physical Education, and was influenced very greatly in this decision by her high school physical education teacher, a former Longwood student.

Nancy wants to teach in the elementary schools because she feels that physical fitness should begin at an early age.

When asked her opinion of C., Nancy laughed and said of course there had been trying times, but that she loved the school. She feels that seniors have enough privileges, and at the present time there are no rules which she would like to see changed. She served on the committee which recommended changing the drinking rule.

Nancy is a member of Alpha Sigma Alpha social sorority, and Orchestra. She has played varsity hockey and participated in class basketball. She is a member of the Methodist Church and enjoys sewing, knitting, and playing bridge.

Nancy will do another modern dance interpretation for the state pageant, from July 4-9. She urges "EVERYBODY to come," to the pageant because audience support means a lot. Nancy definitely feels that teenagers grow up too fast today. When asked what she would do if she had a sophomore daughter in high school who wanted to go steady she commented, "I would advise against it, but I would never force her."

Nancy received many nice gifts including gift certificates, luggage, a silver Revere bowl, and $100 scholarship, "The Rotunda" wishes to extend its congratulations to our new queen and wishes her the best of luck in the Miss Virginia Pageant.

State Selects Street For Top Business Place

By GWYN MUSE

Rosemary Street, a junior, has been named "Miss Future Business Teacher of Virginia" at the State Phi Beta Lambda convention held last week in Richmond. Others receiving awards were Mary Lou Whitehead, who won second place in the state for extemporaneous speaking, and Joyce Harris, who placed third in the state in the vocabulary relay. The Longwood chapter of Phi Beta Lambda was named as an Honor Chapter and awarded a certificate.

Also at the convention, Rosemary, who was state secretary last year, was elected state vice-president for 1966-67. She will be a candidate for national vice-president at the National Phi Beta Lambda Convention to be held June 12-15 in New Orleans, La.

To be selected "Miss Future Business Teacher of Virginia" Rosemary had to submit to the judges a personal data sheet and a letter of application stating why she felt qualified to represent Virginia under this title. Three letters of recommendation were also required. At the convention a general knowledge test was given and the applicants had a personal interview with three judges. During this interview they were asked about themselves and their interest in business education. One such question concerned introducing a new teaching technique.

Rosemary, a business education major, is a member of Phi Omega Pi, the honorary business fraternity, and is currently the

Ex-Governor Harrison Speaks At First Outdoor Graduation

Two prominent Virginians will speak at Longwood College's first outdoor commencement, scheduled for the weekend of June 4-5.

Some 200 seniors will hear former Governor Albertis S. Harrison, Jr., on Sunday, June 5, at 10 a.m., in special graduation exercises in the college mall.

Dr. A. Purnell Bailey, superintendent of the Richmond district of the Methodist church, newspaper columnist, and radio speaker will deliver the baccalaureate sermon in Jarman Auditorium on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock.

Following distribution of the diplomas at the Sunday morning outdoor exercises, there will be an informal reception and luncheon in the Rotunda, beginning at 12 o'clock noon, to which all new graduates and their parents and friends, as well as faculty and staff members, are invited if they have made advance reservations.

There will be a "class night" in Jarman Auditorium on Saturday evening at eight o'clock, to be followed by a lantern parade at ten o'clock.

Plans for the outdoor exercises provide seating capacity for as many as 2600 students and guests in an area beginning at the front of Wheeler dormitory, on the west, and extending eastward along the mall to the rear of Jarman Auditorium. The speaker's platform will be placed on the top terrace immediately in front of Wheeler.

In the event of rain, there is an inclement-weather alternative to the outdoor setting which would transfer the Sunday morning exercises to Jarman Auditorium, supplemented by 20 classrooms into which the graduation program will be transmitted by special sound amplification if such additional seating capacity is needed.

Dean Richard B. Brooks will preside at the baccalaureate sermon, at which the college choir will sing. President James H. Newman will preside at the Sunday morning exercises and award the diplomas.

Following a meeting of the faculty on Wednesday evening, President Newman announced that at this commencement recognition will be given to "those students whose general averages for four years of study are above B-plus (a quality point average of 3.35 or above). The statement, "With Honor," will appear on their diplomas. He also stated that diplomas of students having completed an honors program in a special field will have a notation to this effect.

Plans for the outdoor exercises were conceived and developed several months ago by a combined faculty-staff-student committee headed by President Newman. General arrangements for commencement are being coordinated by J. H. Wansley, business manager and treasurer, and Professor Harold K. Magnusson, faculty marshal, with the active assistance of senior class leaders.

The following committee chairmen are responsible for student activities associated with commencement: Carol Cleary White and Carol Gibson, co-chairmen of senior assembly; Anne Coleman and Frances Stewart, co-chairmen of "Sneak Day"; Kaye Catron, lantern parade chairman; and Sally Fulton, chairman of senior banquet.

Class President Anderson stated that no details of "Sneak Day" would be made public in advance of the events being planned for this annual senior class fun day.

Sophomore Class Elects Officers; Jacobs As Pres.

The Class of 1968 recently held elections for their Junior Class officers. Those elected were: Eloise Jacobs, president; Margaret Bridges, vice-president; Kathy Stone, secretary; and Nancy King, treasurer.

Hailing from Richmond, Eloise is an Elementary Education major who would like to teach fourth, fifth, or sixth grades. Eloise was Assistant Dorm President for North Cunningham this year, and was also a helper for the Colleagues. She is in Sigma Kappa Sorority, and will be second vice-president of it next year. She is also a member of the Film Committee, and helps with the "Rhyming Primers."

Vice-president Maggie Bridges also comes from Richmond. She is an English major. Previously she has held the class offices of Treasurer, for both her Sophomore and Freshman classes. Maggie is a member of Kappa Delta Sorority, of which she will be Secretary next year. As the Chairman of the Colleagues, she was active in the Freshmen orientation program.

By PHYLLIS HUMMER

By popular vote and the opinion of the Committee for the Purchase of Art by Virginia Artists, the painting, "The Porch," by Miss Theresa Pollak was purchased for Longwood College. This oil painting will be hung in the parlor across from Dean Brooks' office.

Theresa Pollak, a native of Richmond, holds a B.S. Degree from Washington College, and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. She received her art education as a child under Nora Houston and Adele Clark in Richmond, later at the Art Students' League in New York, the Fogg Museum School at Harvard and under

Highly Tights Va. Tech Band, Visits Longwood

The Concert Band of VPI will perform Saturday, May 14 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium under the auspices of Sigma Alpha Iota. Directed by Mr. Thomas Dobyns, the "Highly Tights" will play a variety of selections ranging from show tunes and march music to symphonic pieces. School attire may be worn to the concert, and there will be no admission charge. Drinks will be sold during intermission.

The Band, originally ten men in 1883, consists of approximately 70 cadets, all volunteers since there is no established music department at VPI. Their name, "Highly Tights" comes from an interesting situation involved in their victory march in Richmond after World War I. The drum major inadvertently dropped his baton and picked it up, seemingly untroubled by the experience. An onlooker in the crowd shouted "highly tight!"

Memorial Fund Begins To Honor Francis Simkins

A special Memorial Fund has been started for the late Dr. Francis B. Simkins, professor of history. Dr. Simkins was considered an eminent man among historians, and was held in esteem by friends over the entire country.

The Memorial Fund, set up under the auspices of a special committee of the Department of History and Social Sciences, will consist of donations from individuals, with the money going toward a prize for the best writing of southern history for an author who has previously been unpublished.

Longwood College will take charge of raising the money, while the Southern Historical Association will select the book, and present the money. The faculty committee consisted of Dr. James M. Helms, Dr. C. G. Gordon Moss, and Dr. Marvin W. Schlegel.

It is hoped that enough money will be collected to endow the prize, and with this in mind, letters have been sent to Dr. Simkins' friends notifying them of the project. There is no pressure of any kind to donate money, however, all contributions, including those of the student body, may be made in the Business Office.

Class Election Changes

With the recent class elections going on around Longwood, we feel that perhaps the student body should look at the present system of electing their class officers. While the elections are perfectly legal, and valid, there are several elements missing from the current method which could be corrected.

Firstly, class offices are important. They are so important, in fact, that electing them while sitting around on the floor of a rec in curlers and bathrobes is pure irony of "democracy." It gives no dignity at all to the election, and makes it seem rather first-gradeish.

Another element present is the hand-vote. Voting by show of hands is quite legal, but secret ballot is a better system, both for the candidate and the voter. Counting written ballots may take more time, but, in all cases, all doubt is removed as to the victor. We find closing the eyes during a vote the most childish practice of all; and a major handicap of the hand vote. Is this type of election really going to prepare us to go out and vote in local, state and national elections as a qualified American citizen? No, of course not. It is foolish to even consider that such a point in present class elections will ever allow the student body to benefit by blossoming into mature, responsible, adults. The present system is not of this caliber.

A final criticism is this "speaking for the candidate policy." No one, not even a best friend, can adequately speak for a candidate, except to mention such things as personality, grades, etc. There are many more characteristics, and much more information, that it is necessary to know to be able to judge the qualities of the individual candidates, and their possibilities as future officers. There are many pertinent things that should be known by the voting class, things that only the candidates themselves can express.

Any voter would prefer to know certain views and ideas that candidates hold on subjects that are important and vital to the class. Candidates should be given the opportunity to speak their feelings on topics that will be coming up during their year as a class officer. Things such as the Freshman Production, the Sophomore Road Show, the Junior Ring Dance, and the Senior Week-end, are examples of things on which candidates could hold opinions, opinions that are vital to the outcome of the event. And of course, opinions of candidates should be the basis of any election.

The Rotunda has some suggestions to make regarding the system, and changes that, we feel, should be considered. Firstly, if nominations were done by individuals, and given to a certain person during the week prior to the election, written on a piece of paper, a great deal of time at class meetings would be saved. If enough candidates names were submitted to warrant a primary election, then one could be held on paper, in lieu of a class meeting. Ballots could be given out by hall presidents, and collected by them later, and, in this manner, perhaps more people in the class would be participating in the election, and having a voice in the selection of class officers.

Finally, and this we consider most important, are speeches, to be given by the candidates. In a set length of time after names have been submitted, and a primary run, the remaining candidates would prepare statements of policy, and why they, themselves, feel qualified to run and hold office. This, coming from the candidate in a prepared fashion, would be considerably better than someone else "speaking for the candidate" in the helter-skelter, unorganized way that now exists, the way that only succeeds in making class meetings longer than necessary.

These statements by the candidates could be given at a class meeting in Jarman, with the contenders on stage. This makes the whole procedure appear more dignified, and stable, and serious, than the present system. And the new assembly plans make such a procedure entirely possible.

The results, one orderly, regulated, planned class meeting, in lieu of one that is mass confusion, rather chaotic, noisy, smoky, and seemingly just a bother to all. Ballots could be handed out at this planned meeting, voting taking place there, and handed back in and counted by the evening. It seems fair, and has more of the air of a real election, instead of just a club meeting. It makes the students appear more interested in something that should, by right, be important to them.

This is not meant in any way to belittle present or future class officers. It is merely a criticism of the method in which elections for classes are held, and several suggestions for improvement. We feel that everyone could benefit by the suggested changes: the candidates, the voters, and, mainly, the classes, who must secure the most competent leaders available. And, with this method, the best leaders will be sought, and elected, and, thusly, the classes on the whole will be able to function better.

Miss Longwood Contest Draws Girls' Response

To: The questioners of the Miss Longwood Pageant:

It was with much regret that I read your letter to the editor on May 4th, concerning the Miss Longwood Pageant, in particular, the lunch in the dining hall. It was quite clear that you do not understand the purposes, practices, or meaning of the Pageant and activities included in it. The judges of any Miss America preliminary look for a future Miss America each time they judge. The girl they look for must, of course, have a talent and be able to display it in a convincing manner. She must have a beauty that is natural, and she must also be graceful in her movements. The judges also look for such qualities as intelligence, ambition, determination, and sincerity. But one of the most important qualities the girl must possess is that she be able to conduct herself like a lady in any situation, whether it is at lunch in Longwood's dining hall or at dinner in the Waldorf Astoria. The point is not that a situation be made for her to "put her best foot forward," rather that she be her natural self, and her manner be one characterized by grace and poise in any situation.

Personally, I think that all the judges and contestants enjoyed the meal, bologna and all, and everyone seemed quite relaxed and at ease throughout the hour. I did not notice anyone who seemed uncomfortable, and the conversation was natural and pleasant.

As to the caliber of the Miss Longwood Pageant itself, we welcome any constructive criticism that will help to improve it. Having been produced for only two years, it is nowhere near perfect. As we continue to gain experience by a new pageant each year, we hope the quality of the production will naturally improve, and along with it, we hope that support from the student body will also grow.

Now, I would like to ask you one last question: Did you go to see it yourself?

Carolyn Prillaman
Miss Longwood Pageant

To the Editor:

In reply to the letter of Miss Skelley and Miss Lunsford who expressed a judgement of the recent Miss Longwood Pageant which was based on an offhand observation, we would like to comment on the activities of the pageant with the advantage of having been directly involved as hostesses to the judges.

The purpose of the morning interviews and the luncheon was to see the contestants in a natural environment, which the campus facilities best provide. Having the judges eat with the girls in the Dining Hall also was the most expedient manner of fitting the meal into a very busy schedule. We can assure you that the contestants and the judges were quite able to converse since we were present at the tables and took part in the conversation. Furthermore the participants in the pageant stayed to enjoy a second cup of coffee after the students had left.

The judges were impressed with the family style atmosphere of the Longwood Dining Hall and special services which the waitresses displayed toward them. We were thanked most graciously by all of the judges for their accommodations and have even received a letter from Mrs. Hylton (Mrs. Virginia 1964) in which she expressed her enjoyment of her judging duties and commended all aspects of the Pageant.

The Miss Longwood Pageant is not sponsored by a civic group or commercial interest as are most local pageants and, therefore, does not have the resources to finance a Pageant as elaborate as we would like. And, since the campus pageant is unable to depend on profits from ticket sales because student support is not as strong as it should be, those in charge have done a fine job in spite of the handicaps which face them.

Sincerely,
Billie Cuthrell

Milk Headline Most Misleading

Dear Editor:

The Daily Deepwater reporter called our attention to a news story in the Richmond Times-Dispatch for May 2. The headline, STUDY TERMS MILK A CAUSE OF ACNE, is so misleading that I would like to draw attention to the facts given in the study.

Dr. Jerome K. Fisher's findings were based on a study of 1,088 patients who drank four or more quarts of milk a day. The recommended daily allowance is two to four glasses of milk. The allowance does vary with stages in human development but at no stage is the requirement as high as four quarts. Excessive quantities of milk ad-

Katman Adventures End On Happy Note

By JEAN D'ARK

(Our story last far: Venusia, owner of the famous Sea Queen Emerald, and Kenneth "Katman" Parker, her bodyguard, have paid a visit to Venusia's Alma Mater, Longwood. After seeing the various sights in the area, Kenneth has taken Venusia back to her room in the Alumni House, and said good-night at the door, Venusia is rather taken back to find Kenneth in her room as she enters.)

"Kenneth," Venusia was saying, "What are you doing up here?"

"Listen, Venusia, we don't have much time. I've got a proposition for you . . ."

"A proposition?" she exclaimed quite loudly.

"Yes, now throw a few things into that overnight bag. We've got some unfinished business."

He took her hand and silently led her down the stairs. She was a little surprised when he jimmied a window in Dean Wilson's office to gain entrance to Rutherford. But she was downright shocked when he saved through the door of the Home Office.

Katman brandished his flashlight like a rapier. Spying the jeweler's silver case in a concealed wall safe he had opened, he grabbed it with one hand, and Venusia with the other, and headed for the phone.

"Yet, now throw a few things into that overnight bag. We've got some unfinished business."

"Thank you," said Venusia graciously to Night Watch.

"Byrd Airport, and make it snappy," said Katman to the driver.

Upon arrival at the airport, Katman purchased two tickets for Pago-Bora-Luanau, a small tropical island in the Caribbean. It was owned and operated by Babyface Nelson's old friends, and worked as a large plantation. The natives were happy and contented, for they received their fair share and cut of the profits.

On the international scene, it was considered an independent entity.

"Kenneth, I don't know if the Shah will sanction such a trip for me . . . although I want to travel with you so badly. I don't know why, but for some reason, he thinks it wrong for me to travel about so with you."

Kenneth decided that he had to move now to convince her or scrap his whole plan.

"I, ah, wanted to tell you that this has not been like an ordinary assignment for me. I've really enjoyed being, ah, your bodyguard. You know, the life of a secret agent is not an easy one. Sometimes one has to find other sidelines of business, and interest, to make ends meet in a more fashionable style."

"Oh, I get it . . . you're stealing the Sea Queen and kidnapping me for ransom! How exciting, but maybe a bit trite."

"Don't you see, Venusia, that I consider this a package deal? If I could 'convince' you to come away with me, well, the three of us could live a good long time in real bliss - you, the Emerald and I could certainly enjoy life. Do you think it's stealing to enjoy life? Besides, would I have told you all about it if I didn't want you along?"

"That is pretty thoughtful. But would I like it at Pago-Bora-Luanau? I would be giving up a very lofty position. As #1 wife I hold power, prominence, and lots of pebbles like the Sea Queen in my hands."

"Of course," she added as a second thought, "you mean a great deal to me, too. Life on the island would probably be like one long vacation."

"Well, you think it over. I'm going to get some cigarettes."

On the way to the counter, Kenneth noticed the newspaper rack. Headlines on the "Richmond Times - Dispatch" read "Shah renounces Harem to marry Bronx Beauty Operator." He quickly bought a copy and read the story. It seems the Shah had found true love at last, with a certain American, Gertrude Schwartz, a beauty operator whose specialty was manicures.

Gertrude, before she would return with him to Ristanborchek, was making him give up all of his wives. And, unbelievably, he had agreed. The Harem was officially set free.

Kenneth debated on whether to tell Venusia. He wanted her to make up her mind on whether or not to accompany him on her own free will. He decided to disclose the information after she had made her decision.

"Kenneth," she said at last, "I've decided to join in this venture. After all, I'm with you, as owner of the Sea Queen, you could never get into any trouble or accusations for stealing it. It is my turn to be your bodyguard. I say, I feel, my civic duty to take care of you."

Kenneth thought, "Others have tried to care for me before, but never because of 'civic duty'! This Venusia is considerably more than meets the eye. But what meets the eye is nice, too."

The three of them boarded the plane, Kenneth, Venusia, and the Sea Queen. Kenneth held Venusia by one arm and the Sea Queen by the other. Pago-Bora-Luanau was just a short jump away.

They settled back comfortably into their seats. Dinner was on the way, and, while they sipped some champagne, Kenneth started out: "Venusia, have you ever heard any tales of someone called 'Katman' . . . ?"

Orchesis Dance Assembly Takes Place In Jarman

Members and apprentices of Orchesis and students from the intermediate and advanced classes of modern dance performed yesterday in Jarman Hall. Over 32 students danced and 8 compositions were developed. The large beginning class did not participate because it takes approximately two semesters for a student to understand herself, dance, and how others move in the first semester. In the intermediate group, the students learn to project meaning and understanding of dance to the spectator. The advanced class works completely on composition.

The opening dance — "Day Break" from Throckmorton's music was a study of levels and movement of changing form and color. Two groups from the intermediate class performed the number.

The second work — "Three Moods", a study of human tension, reflected the contemporary scene. It, as a dance reflected every day living or aspects of self concepts of people, when a group process is at a breaking point. Two groups from the advanced class performed. Loebner's distinguishing tones of sharp, changing and heavy intensity of music prompted the whole work.

The third work — "Ceremonial", was a study of earth ritual relative to spring and based completely through the meaning of folk dance patterns or steps from the Russian idiom. One could sense here a nostalgic tune and an urgency to move. Free movement, specific grapevine patterns developed into stylized attitudes that included ballet concepts.

"In the Arena" was intentionally designed for the dancers through a specific five and three beat rhythm. Here one enjoyed the bull fight and the misfit bull cornered by the matador, picadors and the torador.

"East and West", a study of gesture or set patterns of human movement, reflected principles of ballet that relate to the Orient. Students in the advanced class researched in the library, and others drew designs of possible attitudes. An Indian theme was used to clarify a group form as a Shiva figure. Two groups performed this. Each clarified a slow moving procession into a set pattern, which emerged as a lyrical and space study from western civilization, but which returned to a set position as sculptural or architectural forms of the Orient.

"Lament, a Dance for Three" from Barber's Adagio for a String Orchestra, was preserved on audio-visual tape as a future reference for students understanding dance as an art form. Begun as a set human sculptural form, the onlooker became a part of the sorrow of self to others, which always reaches beyond selves.

"What Shall We Do?", was a self explanatory variation study in which a movement concept was used. The second variation used a trio which defined a late sailor trying to get back to the ship. "Outer Space" was a free style jazz study of humans on the moon.

We extend our congratulations to the members of Orchesis, the advanced dance class, the intermediate dance class, and to Mrs. Landrum for their hard work and fine presentation of dance in the Orchesis assembly!

Phyllis Collins, caught in the midst of a Banana Cream Pie fight.

Spotlight On Phyllis Collins In Final Issue

By GINNY SIRC

Would you believe a banana cream pie fight? Would you believe Phyllis Collins throwing pies? Well believe it or not, the picture is your proof! Not only is she outstanding in pie fighting, but "Alfalfa" Collins has played Varsity hockey for three years and Varsity basketball for one year. Phyllis, from Alexandria, Va., has also been very active in all class sports and was on the color team for hockey this year. She has been a member of the Athletic Association Council for two years and is a member of the Monogram Club. Last fall Phyllis was awarded a blue blazer for her athletic participation here at L.C.

Her student teaching was done in Roanoke and next year she would like to teach and work with Indians. "Alfalfa's" hobbies and interests include learning to play the guitar, "repairing clocks," and horseback riding. She has a green and white (how's that for a spirited Senior!) Chevy named Betsy. Phyllis, known for her sneezing, has recently decided that she's allergic to her blanket.

To anyone who would like free lessons in pie fighting: Ask for "Alfalfa" Collins on second floor South Cunningham.

The Rutunda extends its Best Wishes not only to Phyllis, but to the rest of the Seniors in their teaching next year.

No books may be checked out of the Library after May 18 unless special permission is obtained from one of the librarians.

All books are due back in the library on Tuesday, May 24. Grades and credits will be withheld for any overdue library materials or unpaid fines.

Class and Color Activities Close School Year 66-7

As the end of the school year approaches, so do the end of class and color sports. All of the true green and whites and red and whites await the results of the class and color victories.

The first big athletic event was the class and color hockey games. The faithful spectators as well as the players remember the red and white victory. Following hockey came volleyball, a class sport. This was followed by class and color basketball. The green and whites retailed the hockey losses and won the color tournaments. Then began the numerous badminton games with partners from the different classes participating. Soon class and color teams will be chosen for archery and softball, and individuals will participate in swimming meets and tennis doubles for the classes. For the first time a class cup and a color cup will be given.

Next year will bring with it another barrage of class and color sports, and again at this time of the year, students will be waiting for the same announcement. Sports prove to be for all.

CICI SPECTATES

By SELENA LUNS福德

After much practice, class teams are ready to be chosen. Bad weather hampered most of the sports activities for awhile, but the sun finally appeared making softball practice, archery practice, and tennis practice possible. The number of required practices had to be reduced to be able to fit them into the schedule. If you are not a participant, support your class and color teams with your lungs. The class cup is just as important as the color cup. Check your class or AA bulletin boards for sports practices.

The swimming meets will begin on May 11.

Archery class tournaments are May 9: 4:30 — seniors vs. sophomores and at 6:45 — freshmen vs. juniors. On May 10: 4:30 — sophomores vs. juniors and at 6:45 — freshmen vs. seniors. The color tournament will take place on May 12 at 4:30 and 6:45 and on May 16 at 6:45.

The class tournaments for softball will be held on May 9, 10, and 11. The color tournament will take place on May 16.

ment will take place on May 16.

The hours are still the same for checking out athletic equipment, on Monday through Friday from 4:00-5:00, on Saturdays from 1:00-4:00, and on Sundays from 2:00-4:00. If any of you feel that you need practice for any of physical education classes, or if you just happen to enjoy a certain sport; utilize some of the equipment. Improve your skill and have fun at the same time.

If you have not taken advantage of recreational bowling yet, you should soon because ten-day period begins on May 18 and exams follow that. During this time of quiet and nervousness, why not relax with some of your friends by bowling a few games. The cost is free.

This is the last paper for the year. CICI will spectate no more this year, or, at least, no one will know I am spectating. We would like to thank Miss Heintz for all of her help.

Golf Team Victorious At Lynchburg College

The new golf team defeated Lynchburg College at the Longwood Golf Course on Tuesday, May 3, by a score of 11 to 0. Members of the team are Becky Bondurant, Nevis Born, Dianne Davis, and Connie Gallahan.

Match play, scored on the Nassau System, was used to determine the number of points for each of the four matches. One point each was given for the winner of the most holes on the first nine holes, one point for the winner of the second nine holes, and one point for the winner of the greatest number of holes on the eighteen hole match.

The Lynchburg golfers won a total of 12 holes in the four rounds while Longwood students won 47 holes.

A return match will be played in Lynchburg on Saturday, May 14, at the Cedar Hills Golf Club at 9 a.m.

Longwood hopes to be able to expand the varsity golf schedule next year so that at least six matches will be played during the spring season.

Summary
#1 Golfers: Lynchburg, Robin Price; Longwood, Becky Bondurant — 3 points
#2 Golfers: Lynchburg, Trudy Taylor; Longwood, Nevis Born — 3 points
#3 Golfers: Lynchburg, Millie Puckard; Longwood, Dianne Davis — 2 points
#4 Golfers: Lynchburg, Vickie Maphis; Longwood, Connie Gallahan — 3 points
Team Totals: Lynchburg College — 0 points; Longwood College — 11 points

Architecture Draws Few Women To Jobs

(Editors Note: This is news from "Mademoiselle" Magazine.)

Strange as it might seem, one would have to pass 45,000 people on a city street before meeting one architect. And of this admittedly small percentage, only 3% are women. This is not to say that women are unwanted by the profession. Only Princeton, of our 79 major architectural schools, declines to open its doors to women. In the May issue of "Mademoiselle" magazine, Edith Rose Kohlberg, a free-lance writer, explores the possibilities for women in the field of architecture.

If anything can be said of the woman who would be an architect, it is that she must be tough and talented, for the necessary training is long, arduous, and expensive. Generally, five years of preparation are required for a Bachelor of Architecture degree. Three exceptions to the rule are Columbia, Yale and Harvard, which do not take students straight from secondary school; they require four years of undergraduate work and a B.A. before admission to their programs, which take three-and-a-half to four years. All graduates of whatever architectural school are awarded the same degree, considered a "first" providing they pass the professional exam.

Once graduated, the young architect who wishes to become licensed, must undergo a state-required apprenticeship period of three or four years. Although there are architects who work for years without being registered, most apprentices start out with the goal of getting a license in order to establish themselves as designers. (You cannot set your own practice without passing a state exam.) A first job might be as junior draughtsman where one could expect a salary of $80-$100, although salaries on the West Coast are higher than in the East. The size of a firm often determines the range of experience an apprentice gains at this time.

The complexities of today's community make increasing demands upon our architects. In a country that spends approximately 65 billion dollars a year on construction, that is heavily engaged in building major housing projects, cultural and trade centers, and educational complexes, the need for architects of vision is tremendous. As Miss van der Rhoe, generally considered the greatest of the post-war architects, has said, "Architecture is not a playground for children, young or old. Architecture is a real battleground of the spirit."

The approach to architecture today is socially oriented. "There's been a quiet revolution here. Less emphasis on teaching to build monuments and more interest in the urban problems of the future." Says Mrs. Kohlberg, "Ours has been a period of revolution in technology and advances in social thought which when coupled together, make it potentially one of the great ages in the history of the building art."

The role of women in architecture is becoming increasingly important

Iler Retiring From LC Staff At Year's End

By SUZAN WOLTZ

Miss Olive T. Iler, Associate Professor of Physical and Health Education, is retiring from the teaching profession at the end of this year. Miss Iler came to Longwood in 1925, became head of her department in 1949, and remained so until 1962.

A graduate of Sargent's School of Physical Education, in Massachusetts, Miss Iler also has a B. S. in History from Longwood, and a Masters Degree from the Teacher's College, Columbia University.

Before coming to Longwood, Miss Iler taught Physical Education at the Chevy Chase School for Girls, in Washington, D. C., and then on the high school and elementary levels, as a supervisory, in Baltimore, Md. She has been director of numerous summer camps, as well as teaching summer school, and enjoys spending time at the seashore, mainly Monmouth Beach, N. J.

Tennis is her personal favorite sport, but she also enjoys hockey and basketball. She has coached varsity squads in basketball, hockey and tennis. Other favorites, in the hobby line, are reading, "especially mystery stories," and needlepoint, creelwork, and gardening.

Miss Iler is active in Longwood life. She has sponsored the classes of '29, '33, '37, '43, '47, and one Red and White class, '54. She is a member of Alpha Kappa Gamma, Chi, Pi Kappa Sigma social sorority (now Sigma Kappa), AAUW, AAUP, AAPHER, VAAPEHR, and the NEA. She is especially proud of her honorary membership in the Tidewater Hockey Association.

Further adding to her list of activities, Miss Iler has been sponsor of the AA and of the Monogram Club, and has been involved in numerous individual activities, such as taking the basketball team to New York. She hails from New York City.

When asked her opinions about changes in students over the years, Miss Iler replied that she finds "all unusually nice girls here. I perhaps feel most pride in girls on teaching. All throughout the state we have very fine girls, and we can be proud of them. Most are really outstanding, and we are interested, good workers."

Future plans include living here in Farmville, and keeping abreast of events here at the college. Miss Iler concludes that, even now, as she retires, she "remembers the pleasant things." She has received many honors, including two yearbook dedications and one "Rotunda" dedication. And now, at this moment, "The Rotunda" would again like to remember Miss Iler, and wish her the best of everything in her retirement.

Library Receives Gift Of Volumes

The Library has received a gift collection of 75 volumes from Les Francophiles, the Longwood club of students of French. The gift books comprise chiefly contemporary works of fiction drama, biography and criticism, and will add materially to the Library's collection in these fields.

In addition, Miss Julia Pollard of Richmond, a supervising teacher of Longwood student teachers, has presented a gift of $50.00 to the Library for the purchase of books.

Library Receives Check
The Library also has received a check for a memorial volume in memory of Mildred Altice, B.A., 1946, who died recently in Winston-Salem. The gift was presented by a group with which Miss Altice had worked in assisting the visually handicapped. The letter accompanying the check stated: "She often referred to her days in college, and her gracious, intelligent, and charming characteristics were a great inspiration to our members and a great credit to her college."

Miss Altice, who was blind, had a record of straight A's while a student at Longwood.

Good weather brings fun-minded Longwood girls outside in the sun. Here some prepare for a softball game.

Judy Bateman steps up to home plate as her turn to bat comes. A number of girls have been enjoying class and color softball.

Longwood), Arnee Stowell, Mayling Simpson, Shirley Timberlake, Karen Diehl, Jo Anne Tucker, and Betty Lou Thomasson.

Milk-Acne Story Brings Response From Home Ec.

excessive fats, carbohydrates and salt which may be contributing factors to acne.

Milk in excessive quantities was not the only contributing factor to acne, according to Dr. Fisher. He advised moderation in the use of sweets, fried foods, ice cream, peanut butter, natural cheese, beer, nuts and pastries. He also pointed out that acne tended to be aggravated during periods of stress, such as final examinations.

As college students we need to develop the ability to read with discrimination the material we find in newspapers rather than jumping to conclusions based on sensational headlines.

Recent Question On Strict Study Needs Clarity

Dear Editor,

This letter is written to clear up any misunderstanding concerning House Council's recent discussion of the value of Strict Study Hour. House Council sponsored an informal discussion on the subject at 6:45 on Wednesday, April 27, 1966, and we had hoped that anyone who had any question or opinions on the subject would attend.

An editorial appeared in the following "Rotunda" of May 4, 1966, which showed a lack of knowledge of what had been discussed at that conference. House Council had been approached by students, faculty, and administration to evaluate the effectiveness of Strict Study Hour. The following are criticisms and suggestions we have received:

1. In the first place, the name "Strict Study Hour" is deceptive, since it connotes a regulated study time where students may date, play, or use their time as they see fit. A "study hour" could more realistically fulfill Longwood's needs since it allows an individual's choice of how to use her time.
2. Also, maintaining a "Strict Study Hour" of 2 1/2 hours has the effect of emphasizing that study is only necessary for 2 1/2 hours a day. House Council would like to encourage and maintain an atmosphere conducive to study for a period of more than a mere 2 1/2 hours a day. Any person should have the right to study at any time she wishes.

3. Another unenforceable element of Strict Study Hour is the stipulation that no organization hold meetings during Strict Study Hour. By necessity many organizations meet during Strict Study Hour; for example, Student Gov't, practice for Water Show, etc.
4. One of the suggestions for a substitute for Strict Study Hour was to replace it with a "Quiet Hour" from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. during which time reasonable quiet would be required. Organizations could hold meetings at this time.
5. Another suggestion was to have printed signs for studying purposes and that if someone were to enter a room with such a sign on the door, she would be subject to calldown.
6. House Council is also evaluating the possibility of opening Hiner, the Science Building, and West Wing to study until curfew in order to offer more facilities for studying.

As you see, there is a necessity to revamp our present Strict Study Hour and the emphasis is placed on the student to discriminate as to when she wishes to study. If you have any questions or opinions, I would be glad to discuss this with you.

Sincerely,
Bruce Flournoy

Illinois Paper Makes Fun Of Draft Test

The examination being offered as a means for deferment from military service has begun to cause many male students to worry. For the first time, it's true to say, "a low score on this exam could kill me."

Magazines have been running sample questions from the deferment exam to give a person some example of what he is in for. "Scout" finds these samples totally inadequate. As a warm-up for those students taking the exam, "Scout" has composed the following sample exam which should be a sure guide to how well one can perform on the real exam.

"Cahoots" Meets, Names New Officers For 1967

By CAROL SKELLEY
You all saw the signs, "Cahoots is coming! Cahoots is coming!" Would you believe — it came! The Rotunda was the scene of riotous merrymaking last Thursday as the Cahooters "cahooted" to the tunes of "Salvation Army" and "In Your Easter Bonnet." The senior members of this bevy of beauties (?) were led on their last triumphant march by noble leader, "Tinkie" White.

Gettysburg Has Revised Policy Of Employment

As a part of its general policy regarding faculty employment and promotion, Gettysburg College has adopted a tenure and dismissal program. This program has been initiated to provide for any situation requiring the dismissal of a faculty member with tenure.

Originally investigated by the Executive Committee of the faculty, the system was approved recently by the Board of Trustees. The final program was to adopt the 1940 "Statement of Principles of Academic Freedom and Tenure" and the 1953 "Statement on Procedural Standards in Faculty Dismissal Proceedings," both of which are approved by the Association of American Colleges and the American Association of University Professors.

As stated in the Executive Committee report, professional incompetence, gross neglect in fulfilling responsibilities, moral turpitude, or financial exigency of the college are grounds for dismissal. A change in the college program eliminating the need for certain courses is also reason for release of a faculty member.

A college spokesman explained that any problem would first be discussed with the professor through his department. If solution could not be reached on that level, a committee would investigate the need for a formal hearing.

It was also stressed that any professor in question would be tried by fellow faculty members. Any final action, of course, would naturally be taken by the Board of Trustees.

Students Show Art Work Today In LC Library

The Annual All-Student Art Exhibit will be on display in the Dabney Lancaster Library gallery from May 11-May 21. This display will feature all types of art work: painting, drawing, prints, sculpture, crafts, and art education. Crafts in the exhibit will include ceramics, enamel, silver jewelry, wood carving, metal work, weaving, and printed textiles.

Some work by beginning art students will be on display in the halls of the Art Department.

Many exhibitors will take part in the show including many of the art majors: Debbie Hedley, Phyllis Boykin, Betsy Taylor, Sarah Wohlford, and Pat Perego.

The exhibit is open to all students and interested public during the regular library hours.

Informing the public next year will be the duty of Mary Kay Lucas; she took the place of Mary Lou Shoulders. Rusty Stevenson gave up her important job of public relations to Sheila Murray. Planning Cahoot's bushes and other such projects will be under the direction of Brenda Gibson. She succeeded project leader Della Anderson. Bebe Woodruff will follow the tunes of Becky Knight; this year's exalted son leader.

Of course, no Easter Parade is complete without a beaquer queen and Ann Quaff, radiant in her bib and wet paint sign graced this year's delegation with her presence. Similarly, the Cahooters decided that all first class organizations needed an ex-officio member, and promptly named Betty Jo Hamner, president of the rising senior class.

Yes, Cahoots came! Now, anyone for revelous living???

Rules Changes Make Teaching Different Job

A list of rules for teachers posted by a New York principal in 1972:

1. Teachers each day will fill lamps, clean chimneys and trim wicks.
  2. Each teacher will bring a bucket of water and scuttle of coal.
  3. Make your pens carefully. You may whistle while to the individual tastes of the pupils.
  4. Men teachers may take one evening each week for court-ing purposes or two evenings a week if they go to church regularly.
  5. After 10 hours in school, teachers should spend the remaining time reading the Bible or other good books.
  6. Women teachers who marry or engage in unseemly conduct will be dismissed.
  7. Every teacher should lay aside from each pay a goodly sum of his earnings for his benefit during his declining years so that he will not become a burden on society.
  8. Any teacher who smokes, uses liquor in any form, frequents pool or public halls or gets shaved in a barber shop will give good reason to suspect his worth, intentions, integrity and honesty.
  9. The teacher who performs his labors faithfully and without fault for five years will be given an increase of 25 cents per week in his pay, providing the Board of Education approves.
- So chin up, Student Teachers, things aren't so tough as they may seem!

Simonini Gives Paper On Classroom Speech

Dr. R. C. Simonini, Jr., former chairman of the English Department at Longwood College and currently resident consultant for the Arlington County Public Schools, gave one of three position papers at a conference in Washington, D. C., April 29-30, sponsored by the Center for Applied Linguistics. The title of Dr. Simonini's paper was "Communicating with the Classroom Teacher." The two other conference papers were by Owen Thomas of Indiana University on "The Nature and Uses of Language" and W. Nelson Francis of Brown University on "Linguistics: Controversy and Consensus."

Pupils from one of the demonstration schools in Arlington's English Language Study Project, directed by Dr. Simonini, were also used at the conference to show participants what can be done in teaching linguistics in the schools. The purpose of the Washington conference was to improve the effectiveness of instructors of the language component in English and Reading Institutes to be financed by the National Defense Education Act this summer. About 125 instructors from colleges and universities attended.

Dido And Aeneas Rates Success

By SALLY TOP POTTAAGE

The Concert Choir's production of Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas," Saturday night, was well-executed and displayed a venturesome spirit as the choir undertook the difficult combination of dramatic and choral artistry.

The principals were well-cast. The lyric quality of Dido, played by Billie Sue Board, was set off by the resonance of Aeneas, played by Arnee Siowell. Lifting gaiety characterized Dido's two ladies-in-waiting, Linda Pritchard as Belinda and Mildred Johnson as Woman-in-waiting. Judy Hester as the Sorceress and Sue Fuller and Faye Carter as assistant witches were entertaining and dramatically convincing. The evil spirit, in guise of Mercury, was well-presented by Carolyn Brookmeyer. Phala Leggett as a sailor, sang blithely and with clarity.

The Witches' Scene in Act I was most effective, due to both the chorus of writhing, cackling witches and the absence of light, with only a green glow issuing from the cauldron, and accentuating the faces and hands of the witches. The inclusion in Act III of a drunken sailor's dance choreographed and performed by Phyllis Lasley, was an excellent blend of modern dance forms with the seventeenth century characteristics of the opera.

There were weaknesses in the portion of the accompaniment played by a string ensemble and in a lack of complete adjustment of the cast to the dramatic aspect, but the overall effect of the opera was a unity of presentation and a highly enjoyable performance.

Take your good time going home.

Fly half-fare on Eastern via Florida.

Florida swings in the spring—but it really swings in the summer.

Lower off-season room rates are in effect. And Eastern will take you to Daytona or Ft. Lauderdale or even Miami for half-fare. So take a detour and enjoy it on your way home. Or go home first and down to Florida later.

Just use your Eastern Youth ID card, or similar card from another airline. If you don't have such a card, it's a snap to get one—provided you're under 22 and can prove it. For the specifics, stop by a Travel Agent or any Eastern ticket office.

Once you have your card, you can get an Eastern Jet Coach seat for half-fare. You can't make an advance reservation. But if there's a seat available at departure time, you can fly to any Eastern destination within the continental U. S. including Florida.

WUS Sponsors '66 Campaign For Donations

The Freshman Commission of Longwood's YWCA is having the annual World University Service fund raising campaign this week. The World University Service of WUS, as it is popularly known, is a non-profit international student organization. This student self-help program is active in over 60 countries in Africa, Asia, Australia, Europe, Latin America and North America. Sponsors of WUS in the United States are only student organizations such as the National Councils of the YMCA and YWCA and the National Student Association.

In a letter Leon Marion, the Southeastern Regional Executive, sent to the college, he stated Longwood has given up to $972.22. This was in the 1947-48 school year. Last year the college donated $180.05. This year's commission has set a very high goal of $400.

HAROLD REEVES

Harold Reeves Concludes So. Institute Lectures

The presentation of a popular Southern humorist, who is a nationally known raconteur of Gullah stories, will conclude this year's series of lectures sponsored by the Institute of Southern Culture at Longwood College.

The public is invited to join Longwood student and faculty on April 21 at 4 p.m. in the Student Building lounge to hear Harold S. Reeves of Charleston, S.C., speak on "A Breath of the Carolina Low Country."

Mr. Reeves is an expert on picturesque patois-Gullah of the South Carolina low country. He has lectured in some 10 states. Producer of an LP Gullah record of world-wide circulation, he has conducted a radio program called the "Gullah Network" and devoted much time to keeping alive the Gullah dialect.

He is a graduate of Randolph-Macon Academy and the University of South Carolina. He served as an officer in World War I. For a number of years he held an executive position with the Social Security Administration. An Episcopalian, he is a leader in the civic, cultural and religious affairs of Charleston and the Society of the Cincinnati.

"Geist" Tapping Recognizes Leadership, Scholarship, Service

Geist, the local honorary leadership organization, will hold its second Recognition Assembly on Tuesday, April 25 in Jarman Auditorium at 1:00 p.m. At this time new members will be taken from the rising senior class.

Geist, its name based on the German word meaning "Spirit, Imagination and Intelligence" is a relatively new organization on the Longwood College campus. In its first year of functioning as the honorary leadership organization, Geist has presented several new ideas and activities to the student body. Dedicated to promoting college loyalty and preserving the ideals and traditions of the college and to fostering a spirit of mutual cooperation between the students and faculty, Geist sponsored the Geist festival in the Fall. In recognizing and encouraging scholarship as a vital part of leadership and service, Geist plans to award its first annual scholarship to a deserving member of the student body in the Honors Assembly in May.

Membership in Geist recognizes these three outstanding qualities in the student-leadership, scholarship and service—these qualities tempered by humility, integrity and intellect, the true measure of the individual. Outstanding scholarship, leadership and service not only in school and class activities, but within an individual field of study—these are recognized by membership in Geist. This membership is a challenge and should be accepted as such—A challenge to constantly strive for those beliefs and ideals that will strengthen the individual member, the organization itself and the college as a whole.

SAI Sponsors Highly Tighties' Concert At LC

The Concert Band of the "Highly Tighties," the Virginia Tech Regimental Band will perform Saturday, April 22 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium under the auspices of Sigma Alpha Iota. Directed by Mr. Thomas Dobyns, The Highly Tighties will play a variety of selections ranging from show tunes and march music to symphonic pieces. School attire may be worn to the concert, and there will be no admission charge.

The band, originally ten men in 1963, consists of approximately 50 cadets, all volunteers, since there is no established music department at Virginia Tech. This is the first year that their director, Mr. Thomas Dobyns, has been a member of the Virginia Tech faculty. Their name, "Highly Tighties" comes from an incident at the victory march in Richmond after World War I. The drum major inadvertently dropped his baton and picked it up, seemingly unruffled by the experience. An onlooker shouted "highly tighties" meaning stuck-up. Band honors include, among many, being the only band to have ever won three consecutive First Place awards in the Presidential Inaugural Parade.

Sigma Alpha Iota will host the Band at dinner in the dining hall. After the concert, a party will be given in their honor.

Phi Beta Lambda Wins Va. "Outstanding" Award

By KAREN CAMPBELL
On April 7, 8, and 9, representatives of the Longwood chapter of Phi Beta Lambda attended the State Phi Beta Lambda Convention at Natural Bridge, Virginia. Fourteen state chapters were represented at this convention, consisting primarily of the election of state officers and various competitive activities.

Several Longwood students were the recipients of awards at this convention: Mina Koons won 2nd place in extemporaneous speaking, Nancy Harris placed 3rd in the contest for the title "Miss Future Business Executive" and Betty Hynson received 2nd place in the competition for "Miss Future Business Teacher." Carol Anthony was elected as one of the state officers, Reporter. Also the Longwood Chapter was selected as the most outstanding chapter in the state for 1967, thereby capturing the title from R.P.I., longtime holder of the award. Representing Longwood at this convention were the following girls: Betty Hynson, Joyce Harris, Nancy Harris, Jean Oakley, Jean Chapman, Elaine DeAtley, Carol Anthony, Mina Koons, Mrs. Mary Thomas, Rose Mary Street, and Linda Thrasher. Mrs. Francis Hamlett, sponsor of Phi Beta Lambda, and her husband also attended the convention.

Upcoming events in Phi Beta Lambda include the annual Spring Banquet; preparations are now being made for this event.

'Wonderful Wednesday'

Self-Education

"Giving students an incentive to educate themselves" — this is one of the greatest challenges facing undergraduate education, according to Dean John Stephens of Atlanta's Emory University. Emory and Dr. Stephens think an answer to this challenge may have been found. It's called "creative Wednesday," and it is a day during which there are no classes or student activities. The school's 2,187 undergraduates are left free to pursue any activity they choose, whether it is studying, reading, taking up hobbies or independent study, or just resting. The result of this midweek break is a higher classroom attendance, and 24% of the student body on the Dean's List, as compared with 21.1% before the change was instituted. No one was really surprised when the faculty legislative committee council voted overwhelmingly to continue "Wonderful Wednesday" — as it is now popularly known — for another year.

"Giving students an incentive to educate themselves" — this is the key to "total education," the ominous problem faced by every institution of higher learning. For many years administrators, professors, and students alike have contended that learning is not confined solely to the classroom, the laboratory, or the study carrel. It is here that lectures are given, notes rapidly scrawled or transcribed, ideas discussed; theories formulated. It is here that the complicated process of learning begins. The knowledge a student acquires in the classroom is only the basis upon which he begins to build his stock of total knowledge. And it is this "total knowledge" toward which "total education" strives.

"Giving students an incentive to educate themselves" — how does one do this? There is no set formula, no standard rule by which professors or students may judge whether or not they have given or have been given this incentive. Just as there is no formula, so there is no standard measure. Dean Stephens thinks he may have found part of the answer in "Wonderful Wednesday." This midweek break was established with one idea in mind: to give students a free day to use in any way which they wish. Not all students take advantage of the day, but the majority do. Emory students pack the library, work on independent study projects, read, and some have no connection whatsoever with the student's major, and one group spends the day in an Atlanta Negro slum, tutoring children. These activities will probably not help students to bring up their grade in Math 368 or Philosophy 240, but these activities are helping the students to acquire that much-sought-after "total knowledge." Outside the classroom, Emory students are working on their own — understanding how a Negro child thinks and feels, studying the distribution of histones in chromosomes, reading Goethe, going to concerts, visiting museums and other campuses for lectures. They are learning.

"Giving students an incentive to educate themselves" — the biggest challenge facing undergraduate education. Dean Stephens and Emory University think "Wonderful Wednesday" is a good beginning. They could be right. — G. A. M.

Duke Graduate Advises: Influence Prof For A's

Ed. note: The following is reprinted from "The Duke Chronicle."

A man who scored straight A's through Duke has given some cunning advice on how to make the dean's list.

"Remember that the reason you are in school is to influence your professors to give you the highest possible grades. You can become a great lawyer or doctor afterward," said Dr. William J. Bryan, Jr.

"Examinations are not the time to present your original thoughts or write a treatise on how the world ought to be. Just give the professor what he wants to hear."

"Never ask a question in class unless you are absolutely sure you know the answer. If you don't, you may appear stupid and that will not help your cause."

Bryan, 40, is both a lawyer and a doctor and is head of the American Institute of Hypnosis in Los Angeles.

Bryan attended Duke and made Phi Beta Kappa. He earned his law degree at the University of Southern California and was elected to the Order of the Coif, national honor society for law students.

He obtained his medical degree at the University of Illinois, where he had somewhat less than an A-average because "I wasn't following my own advice."

Bryan said he wasn't suggesting that a student should not study, do assigned reading or take notes.

"But you need to do more. For one thing, before school starts, you should research every professor you'll have. Learn where he's from, where he went to school and read everything you can find that he's written."

"Put your answers in his words, even if you don't understand them. . . . Accept anything he says verbatim. If he says black is white, that's fine. Put it down. Quarrel with him after you get your A."

"Gaze up at him in class and never take your eyes off him. If he makes a point that you think he thinks is important, nod your head."

"Ask a question only if you perceive that he wants it asked, to advance the discussion. He'll probably say, 'I'm glad you asked that. There's a man who's paying attention.'"

If you don't know an answer, improvise. Bryan said, citing his own experience.

"Once, on a physiology exam, I had to describe a test for the adrenal cortex function. I didn't know the answer, so I made one up. I said, 'Inject radioactive sodium in the veins and measure the body's retention with a Geiger counter, as reported in the East Africa Journal of Internal Medicine.'"

"It was a 25-point question. I got back my paper with one point taken off because I didn't give the dosage."

Sweden Reports Faculty Member Publishes Article

Dr. Alexander Berkis, Associate Professor of History and Social Science, recently received a book in which his article, "The Rule of Ernest Birn in Russia and Courland (1790-1799)," was published. It came out of Stockholm, Sweden at the end of last year.

His article dealt with the dictatorship and political acts of the Duke of Courland, Ernest Birn, in Russia.

Dr. Berkis, who received a Master of Law degree from the University of Latvia at Riga and a M.A. and a Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin, has a new book, "The History of the Duchy of Courland 1561-1795," in the process of publication.

He is also co-author of two other books which were published in Sweden during the last year.

Michigan Coeds Rebel; Stick Up For Rights

(ACP) — Coeds at Michigan State University struck back on mass recently at Hank Kniskern, an undergraduate, after he wrote a letter to the "State News" saying that women should not be allowed to "take up space" in colleges and universities.

Asking a submission to "the glory of being a plain, old-fashioned, loving woman," Kniskern had written: "Every time I look up from a book and see a girl in a thigh-high skirt and skin-tight sweater, with bleached hair, holding a half-burnt cigarette (that has not touched her lips), as she casually gazes over the boys passing by, I shake my head at the feeble arguments which favor a college education for women."

Coeds ranging from freshmen to married graduate students responded with a deluge of letters to the "State News." Even a few males joined the attack.

Many analyzed Kniskern's motives. One junior speculated that he was "shot down for a date last weekend by your thigh-high skirted, skin-tight sweatered, bleached blonde, and you had to blow off some steam."

Corra Hendricks, classifying herself as "one of the nine out of ten who graduated and then got married — but without even waiting the appropriate year or two first," couldn't decide whether Kniskern "had recently been jilted by a coed, had flunked a class in which a girl excelled, or just plain hated his mother."

Her education, she continued, "has not exactly gone down the kitchen sink. At present, it is helping my husband gain a Ph.D. degree, and even if it weren't it has not been in vain, since I sincerely believe an educated populace, male and female, is important."

"What really disturbed you?" asked sophomore Carol Koch. "Were you splashed by a bus? I feel sorry for a young lad whose interest and incentive to

Oleg Cassini Says

IT'S A SENSUOUS REVOLUTION

Madame, if you ever had any doubts about which sex is the most influential, look around. While it is true that you may see or wear — epaulets, blue jeans, man-tailored shirts, or links in your cuffs, that is not half so significant as what they are starting to wear and do. Why, it is a veritable revolution, inspired by the female of the species, for a change and at last.

Primarily, it is the preening instinct that is being reawakened in men, the desire to look desirable and to smell thus. It is an indulgence in sensuousness, the pleasing of the senses. While this seems to be an innate and timeless quality in women, it is more of a sometime thing in men.

There are generations and epochs in which this kind of masculine vanity is everywhere and paramount. It seems particularly tied up with royalty and the courtly life, from which it filtered down to the various lower strata of society, getting more and more diluted, the lower it got.

It is also tied in perhaps less closely with the power relationship between the sexes. I am sure that a good case could be made out for the gradual decrease of male preening as the female ascended in strength, power and influence, both legal and domestic. And in the United States, where women have reached perhaps their zenith of dominance in this century, the masculine urge to beauty and refinement has been submerged almost entirely.

Until recently, Europeans (both male and female, who know how to enhance themselves) decided to invade the American market and glamorize the men. They know what to sell, and we know how to sell it (how to package it, promote it and make it seem desirable "in"). So, while some Europeans are exporting flowered shirts to us, others are cosmetizing men, which is really not the same thing at all.

There is a certain class of men, to be sure, who have always equipped themselves with fragrant toilettries, emollients, salves, manicures, soaps and the like. As a matter of fact, there have been two such classes of men: a small number of upper-class men who might in other times and places be called aristocracy, and a equally limited number of any-class men whose masculinity I suspect. Only a fool or an innocent could not tell one group from the other in spite of their smell.

But that numerical limitation is no more. Today sense-gratifying products are every man's, whether older staples such as shaving scents, or new products which you have to adjust to, such as men's bubble bath.

Now if that should strike you as a less-than-masculine idea give second thoughts to your appraisal. Why should not a man wish to smell pleasant, to keep his skin as youthful as yours, to relax in a warm tub — or for that matter to have his hands clean, attractive, or his hairline intact or his gray staved off until such time as he feels old enough to accept it? Why should his values be any different from yours, when it comes to looking young and attractive? And why should you persist in equating masculinity with callouses and cracked fingertips and an abhorrence of the very things that would make him more attractive to you?

FASHION MIRROR

The waistline isn't just returning. It is returning with a vengeance, both here and abroad. And along with it is coming that old counterpart, the full skirt. It can be gone or gathered, but sure enough there it is sitting right below the fitted bodice and the belted waist — just as if it were fifteen years ago. There is much to be said for this line: it is comfortable for walking and moving about, it swings easily when you do, it has a certain carefreeness about it when short and bouncy. And of course it accentuates a delicate waistline. Also, it tends to come with a fairly fitted bodice, so while hips are obscured, the bosom is not (unlike a shift, where the hip girth may be obvious) but the loose midriff minimizes the bosom. That alone will receive applause in some quarters.

FASHION TIP

There are several products available now for women who want to impart a stiff or wrinkle-proof finish to clothes or fabric. Some claim to leave the material relatively soft, while others stiffen or villinize your material (for such uses as tote bags, full skirts children's bibs, place mats, etc.) I can think of one advantage to compensate for your having to permanent press your own clothes: you can alter or adjust them before immortalizing their condition. It is very hard to alter or in any way change any sort of a crease that has been permanently pressed into a garment at the manufacturing stage, as many of you already know.

Home Economics Honor Society Taps Fifteen

Kappa Omicron Phi recently tapped fifteen new members into the National Honor Society. To be eligible for membership the student must maintain a 2.5 average in general education and a 3.5 average in home economics subjects.

The society was first organized at North Western State Teacher's College in Maryville in 1922. The Longwood Chapter was established on April 14, 1962. The group was an outgrowth of a local honor society but it is affiliated with the national society.

The purpose is to further the best interest in Home Economics in a four-year college in the world needs women who have obtained high intellectual, spiritual, and aesthetic values.

Seniors that were initiated are: Susan Farris, Judith Hiatt, and Martha A. Smith.

ing one of the greatest shows made available to Farmville and the surrounding areas.

The line-up of groups and singers promises a very entertaining night. "The Radiants", a group currently popular in New York whose song "Feel Kind of Bad" is presently on the top 50 chart; Darrell Banks of "Open Up the Door to Your Heart" fame whose new record, "Here Comes the Tears" was released this month; Bobby Marchan, two of whose recent hits were "Shake Your Money Maker" and "Something on Your Mind"; "The Daydreams" who recorded "Part of Your Love" and "Easy Baby"; "The Sideliners Band"; and "The Satisfaction", a group recently organized from the most talented local boys.

"Satisfaction" members are: Martin Rubley, lead guitar player and son of L.C. geography instructor, Mr. Rubley; Dibb Jones, bass guitar; Billy Johnson, winner of several contests for his trumpet abilities; Terry Locklear, sax; Danny Richards, state champion drummer when he was thirteen; and Billy Carville and Jayjay Gay, both singers. All attended Prince Edward Academy with the exception of Danny Richards, who attends Victoria H. S. and Jayjay Gay who is in the service.

Advance tickets are $2.00 and can be bought in Farmville stores. Tickets at the door will sell for $2.50.

Take one last look. The new bus station may be quite different — if you ever find it.

Bus Station Relocates; Train Schedule Changes

By GWYN MUSE

The cries of horror heard recently around campus, because of the alleged removal of bus and train services, can be silenced. Longwood is not to be left stranded as some of the rumors implied. The Norfolk and Western Railway has revised its passenger train schedule; the schedule of one of the Greyhound buses has been changed, but these changes will result in no serious impairment in traveling.

Effective April 30, two trains will be discontinued: the west-bound train which departs Farmville at 8:25 a.m., and the east-bound train which departs Farmville at 10:19 p.m. Trains 15 and 16 have been combined with trains 25 and 26, but this will result in no great deviation in the arrival-departure schedule as it now stands. The schedule for these trains is effective May 1. It will be altered only very slightly, perhaps about 10 minutes for departures. When the complete revised schedule is received at the Farmville station, it will be made available to Longwood students.

The east-bound Greyhound bus which departs Farmville at 9:50 a.m. will no longer go through Cumberland. The bus will go to Richmond by way of Burkeville, where it will be possible to change buses for all points south, including Danville, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, and Chapel Hill. This same bus will also discontinue its stop at Midlothian, but will now stop at the Southside Plaza, just outside of Richmond.

The bus depot has been sold, but will probably remain at its present location until the end of the current school session. The stationmaster expects to move this summer, although the move may be made as early as June 1. The depot will probably be moved to the present site of the Taylor Manufacturing Company, located on North Main St., although this is not definite. The stationmaster says he wants to find another location which will be more convenient for the college students.

Statistics Show Sorority Girls Lead Grade-Wise

The Registrar's office and the Dean of Women's office have released the Sorority Averages for the Fall Semester of 1966. The total sorority average is 2.72 as compared with the total campus average of 2.63.

The overall sorority member average is 2.76, while the overall campus average is 2.65. The total enrollment of Longwood is 1551. The number of sorority members is 486.

Longwood College Open Rush Statistics have been released for Fall 1966 and also for Spring 1967.

The total enrollment for Fall was 1644, as compared with the total Spring enrollment of 1551. The number of sorority women, including pledges for both was 486. The number of rushers for Fall 1966 was 250, and the number who dropped out during rush was 65. The total number pledged in Fall Rush was 171; the number who declined a bid was 0; and the number not receiving a bid was 14. In Spring Rush the number of sororities rushing was 7. The number of girls bid was 22 and the same number were pledged. Four girls did not receive bids during Spring Rush.

The percentage of undergraduate women belonging to sororities in the Fall was 29.3 and the percentage belonging to sororities in the Spring was 32.2.

Sire Spectates

Get in with the swing! Don't be out of it — sign up for class and color softball today. It means 10 points toward your class cup and another 10 to Color.

Don't forget the Varsity tennis match next Wednesday at 4 p.m. The L. C. netters will be hosting Lynchburg College. Support our girls at their first home match! It's about that frog in Inez and Peggy's room last week — looks like Phyllis and Cherie are up to their old tricks again. Don't laugh! Pat and Bat, they almost put it in your room!

Thank goodness for the rain last Thursday at 10 a.m. Bet you didn't know that Brenda Holly had super-strength — all she has to do is draw her bow and the arrow just breaks in half!

The classrooms seem a little empty from 11 a.m. on — the roof seems a little more crowded.

Don't forget intramural swimming. You needn't be an expert to enter. The swimming manager reports that no Green & Whites have been attending the practices.

Get in there and help your color win color cup this year. Check the A. A. board for full information.

Mystery of the week: Why isn't there any grass under the second target from the right on the archery range? Well Jane?

Congratulations to the winner of the Song Contest! Chances are 10 to 1 that Chi will burn in the mud again this year — if they haven't already!

Check our sports equipment in the locker room on weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. There is a little practice for the tennis singles that are starting this week.

The Varsity Golf Team will attend a tournament at the University of North Carolina this week end. Accompanying them will be Dr. Shirley O'Neil, Mrs. Faye Ages, and Miss Nancy Andrews, all of the Physical Education Department. A golf clinic will be held following the tournament. Good luck team!

Archers Practice For Coming Tournaments

All those interested in participating in Varsity Archery are asked to come to practice from four to five o'clock on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

The first match will be the Intercollegiate Archery Tournament lasting from April 10 to May 19. Participants will shoot during these days and mail their best scores to the National Archery Association. Eight girls make up a team for this match and two girls to participate, and Miss "B" is very hopeful that she will have enough girls for both teams.

Other matches include a dual meet with Westhampton on May 1, and a dual meet with Hollins on May 12. There is also a meet scheduled with Randolph-Macon Women's College, but the exact date has not yet been set.

On May 6, 9, and 10, a Telegraphic meet will be sponsored by the National Collegiate Archery Coaches Association. The Virginia D.C.W.S. Intercollegiate Telegraphic Archery Tournament for Girls will be held on May 18. In both of the telegraphic meets the scores of the girls will be telegraphed to be compared with other girls' scores from different areas of Virginia.

Miss "B" urges all girls who are interested to please come and support the Varsity Archery team!

W-hampton Holds Lacrosse Clinic

Twenty girls accompanied by Miss Anne Huffman of the Physical Education Department attended a lacrosse field day at Westhampton College Saturday, April 8.

Lacrosse is a relatively new sport at Longwood and therefore Longwood does not have a team, but enough interest was shown by the girls for Longwood to accept the invitation to attend the tournament at Westhampton. The purpose of the field day was to pick the best players from the surrounding colleges to play the lacrosse team from Great Britain which is touring the United States.

The teams who took part in the field day were: Westhampton College, College of William and Mary, Longwood College, Mary Washington College, Sweet Briar College, and the Virginia Club Team. Longwood and Mary Washington combined to form a tri-team since the girls from Longwood were inexperienced.

Longwood had as many girls as possible playing in three of the six games. Miss Huffman commented that she was very pleased with the girls' playing and if enough interest is shown, lacrosse could become as popular at Longwood as field hockey. From comments made by Westhampton and William and Mary Colleges, the Longwood girls made a good showing. Longwood was invited by these two colleges to play them again and build up their experience so that later on Longwood might have a varsity lacrosse team.

Wesleyan College Hosts Intercollegiate Meeting

Thursday, April 6, marked the departure date for Longwood's student government officials, Linda Gardner and Carolyn Hingerty, President and Vice-President of Legislative Board; Elanor Walnes and Myra Boone, Chairman and Vice-Chairman of Judicial Board; and Sharon Bannon and Suzan Woltz, President and Vice-President of House Association — for Macon, Georgia. They attended a student government convention, the Southern Intercollegiate Association of Student Government, at Wesleyan College, in Macon.

Driving down naturally required a goodly amount of time, so the first night was spent in Charlotte, N. C. The next day they proceeded on to Macon, routed through Athens, Georgia, home of the University of Georgia. Upon reaching Macon, and finally finding Wesleyan, accommodations were found in their senior dormitories, with a lake and insects in back. Discussion groups and general sessions were held in the following evening and next day, and many good points were discovered by our delegates, about Longwood and about other schools, too.

Saturday afternoon, after the convention closed, the delegates decided to move on to Atlanta. So, off they went, spending Saturday night in Sherman's second home. They enjoyed the sights and accommodations — Peachtree Street, Georgia Tech, and Schowbits, Blums . . . Unfortunately, Sunday rolled around all too fast. They started the homeward journey and safely arrived back in Farmville Sunday evening.

Now, about the experiences . . .

The debate portion of the District Three Forensic Tournament was held at Buckingham Hall High School on Friday, April 14. Longwood students also served as judges at this meet.

Prince Edward Academy was host on Saturday, April 15, as ten schools competed in the Virginia Academy Athletic Conference's nine-event Forensic Tournament. Eighty-seven student contestants vied in speaking, prose and poetry, reading, spelling and debating.

The annual 4-H Club Tournament was held on Saturday morning, April 15 in Jarman Auditorium. A public address portion of the tournament was held in Grainger Building.

Mr. Robert Woodman, professor of speech at Longwood, has been responsible for securing judges for all these competitive tournaments.

Why Worry?

Editor's note: The following poem was forwarded to "The Rotunda" by Dr. Alan Rhodes of the Chemistry department of Cleveland State University. The staff feels that it is an eloquent expression of the sentiment of the war.

Why should you worry or give a damn
About what happens in Viet Nam?
Why is it any of your concern
If men and women and children burn?

Only a pacifist, saint or fool
Believes in stuff like the Golden Rule.
You know the answer — you know it well —

"This is a war and war is hell!"
Your war is hell for the men that fight.

Pawns on a chessboard, brown and white:
War is death in a sea of mud
To the sound of bullets and stench of blood:

War is madness told as truth,
Torturing women and crippling youth.
But you know the answer — you know it well —

"This is a war and war is hell!"
Try to project what your thoughts would be

If you left your home as a refugee:
Try to imagine the sense of fear
When the napalm scatters and flames appear . . .

What kind of feelings would it inspire
If you watched a child with his flesh on fire?
Could you find words for the pilots above

Who boast about morals and Christian love?
War is a gamble played with Fate
Where the stakes are high and the hour is late:

War is the writing seen on the wall
Which threatens to come and engulf us all . . .
It's time to worry and time to care,
It's time to pity and time to share;
It's time to consider the Human Race
And see ourselves in the other man's place.

New Senior Class Officers: Ginny Daugherty, Margaret Bridges, Sarah Wright, Eloise Jacobs.

Rising Seniors Elect New Class Officers

By CAROL JOHNSON

The month of April marked a conclusion for the Class of 1968; for the last time in their college years, they chose their class officers. The four girls chosen will be responsible for leading the members of the rising Senior Class through their final year at Longwood.

Selected for the office of Presidency was Eloise Jacobs, who also filled the position for the class as Juniors. Eloise is from Richmond, and has served as a

Also from Richmond is Margaret Bridges, who will assist Eloise as Vice-President of the Class of 1968. Margaret served as Treasurer of the class in her freshman and sophomore years and as Vice-President in her Junior year. She was Chairman of the Collegues in 1965 and is now a member of Kappa Delta social sorority.

The job of keeping the records of the Senior Class was given to Ginny Daugherty of Chesapeake. Ginny has served on Freshman Commission, House Council, and also the May Day Court. She is a member of Sigma Kappa social sorority.

The financial status of the class will be determined by Sarah Wright, who will serve as Treasurer. Sarah is from Norfolk and served as Assistant Treasurer of the class in her sophomore year. She was also a member of the Freshman Commission and is now a member of Sigma Kappa social sorority.

The selection of the four girls has created a milestone for the Class of 1968. They have chosen the girls they feel the most capable to lead them through their greatest and most rewarding year at Longwood. We wish the very best of luck to the Class of 1968 and to their new officers.

and the competition will begin at 10:15 a.m. Judges, who are member voice teachers, will judge the students on qualities of vocal presentation. In the first auditions in 1966 at Mary Washington College, all three division awards went to Longwood voice students of James McCombs. These students were Ann Fleishman in the Preparatory Division, Linda Pritchard in the Intermediate Division, and Judy Hessler in the Advanced Division. James McCombs of Longwood is the Vice-President and Program Chairman of the Association.

EACH NUMBER WILL BE REGISTERED AGAINST THE NAME OF THE STUDENT AS DRAWN.

THERE WILL BE NO TRADING OF NUMBERS AT ANY TIME.

ONLY THOSE WHO HAVE PAID THE $50 ROOM DEPOSIT MAY DRAW.

If a current student is unable to be present for the drawing, she may authorize by written note another student to draw for her. No new student (not currently on the campus) may have a number, but such a new or returning student whose $50 has been paid may be put down as a roommate or a substitute when the blanks for this purpose are being filled out the following week.

ACTUAL ASSIGNMENT TO ROOMS WILL TAKE PLACE AS FOLLOWS:

Rising Seniors — Monday, May 8
7:00-9:00 p.m., Wheeler Rec.
Rising Juniors — Wednesday, May 10
7:00-9:00 p.m., Cox Rec.
Rising Sophomores — Thursday, May 11

FOR THOSE WHO WILL BE STUDENT TEACHING, ALL FOUR BLOCKS FOR THE YEAR MUST BE FILLED IN.

Students who will be living in Stubs and in the language units do not participate in the general number drawing on May 4 nor in the room assigning the following week. Stubs and language units must be completely settled for the whole year before May 4.

Rising Seniors:

Remember that most of you will have to triple November-January and some of you also April-June. Get this all worked out before May 8 and down in black and white on the blanks you bring that night.

Rising Sophomores:

Since you may have to do some tripling, I shall be glad to have any groups of five of you who wish to be together sign up for five-girl suites. Juniors may do this, too, if they wish.

All Classes:

- If your suite is composed of girls from different classes, the highest in rank carries the lower classmen in her number.
- As soon as rising seniors are placed, I will post on the current sophomore bulletin board floor plans indicating what places are available for rising juniors.
- As soon as rising juniors are placed, I will post on the current freshman bulletin board floor plans indicating what places are available for rising sophomores.
- Rooms will be assigned by the lowest number in the suite regardless of how many are in the suite. Rooms will be assigned in numerical order from low on up; therefore, the person signing for the suite must be there when the suite's number is called.

Dr. Lane Attends Two Educational Meetings

During the past week, Dr. Charles Lane, Chairman of the Social Science Department, attended two conferences; one concentrated on the teaching of history, government, and geography, and the other was concerned with resource use education.

On April 14 and 15, the Ingleside Motor Inn, Staunton, Virginia was the site of the Second Annual Conference on the Teaching of History, Government, and Geography. "Teaching World Cultures through History and Geography" comprised the theme of the convention. Several prominent men in the field of social science delivered addresses to the delegation. Dr. Preston E. James, Professor of Geography at Syracuse University, spoke on "The Teaching of World Cultures: A Geographer's Point of View;" an address approaching the same subject from an historian's point of view was delivered by Dr. Joseph R. Strayer, Professor of History at Princeton University. A representative of NASA, James V. Bernard, director of the educational procedures division, also spoke at the convention; his talk was entitled "Implications of the Space Age for the Humanities." In addition to the general sessions, at which time the addresses were delivered, the delegates to the convention, including some of Virginia's leading educators in the field of social science, participated in group discussions on pertinent topics.

The Virginia Resource Use Education Council sponsored a conference at the Virginia Institute of Marine Science, Gloucester Point, on April 17 and 18. The convention consisted of a field trip, and a tour of the Marine Institute, including visits to selected laboratories where researchers explained their projects. Following the tour, there was a seine haul in nearby waters and a discussion of shallow water organisms in the Bay.

The Virginia Resource Use Education Council sponsors general conservation workshops and programs each year and assists in education television. Several years ago, the council sponsored the governor's conference on conservation of resources. The council is presently thinking of revising its publication, "Natural Resources in Virginia;" this was also discussed at the convention.

Annual Orchestis Concert Combines Eastern, Western Cultures In Dance

Modern dance students and Orchestis will unite with approximately over 100 students in a concert at Jarman Auditorium on May 16 at 1 p.m. Orchestis members, apprentices, advanced class students, intermediate class and three freshmen beginning dance groups will perform. Betty Patterson, president of Orchestis has appointed members of the organization into committees behind the scenes.

The first work titled "Arche-tonics: Reflections of the Times" relate to symbols in dance form for understanding the feelings and sensations of people in a world of tension, and which clarifies western civilization as compared to the calm of Eastern cultures.

This five part work involves the freshmen groups. Structured into architectural forms or a mass of people on stage, various aspects of tension reflect the changes and the times.

Group I clarifies "Group Tension". Group II as "Group Focus" introduces those searching meaning beyond selves. Both groups - I and II unite the symbolic circle of all cultures as form for ritual.

Group III breaks the circle as the "Individual Enigma of the Self" reflects angular lines or patterns of movement as another force disturbing the human elements in a changing world.

In Group IV, the spectator envisions himself as "Depersonal-

izing Selves" who are caught within a vise that represents an angry mass of stealthily, frightened and belligerent humans who have lost their faith in fellow man, self and the light beyond all selves. The song of life is lost through the harsh tones of electronic music into a modified St. Vitus Dance of the medieval period.

Group V titled "The Search and Meaning" unites the symbols of the broken circle. Frustrated human elements form groups to search beyond reality. Patterns of agony, fear and apathy lead to awe of the cross within the symbol of the circle of mankind. Symbols of the cross hanging high overhead re-unite groups who find peace, love, and faith.

The second work entitled "Pentatonics" reflect aspects of Eastern civilization. Three studies relate basic ballet as a form not only in Western civilization but originally from Eastern cultures. The first attempt of understanding combines the "pile" of ballet and the "hand" as a choice for human gestures as a delightful pattern of two forms. Using sculptural forms as the base, the development of movement patterns merge into set positions, then unbalancing positions or patterns reflecting the asymmetry of movement in space, and medieval aspects of the Orient that more or less parallel that of European cultures. Moving forming in space leads to forming sets or positions of the body as cultures develop. In another sense, one may visualize human sculptural forms as arrested or frozen movement.

In the second study of Pentatonics, one sees "Buddha Figures" move from symbolical position to movement patterns. From positioning the body the

VATE Sponsors Memorial Fund; Honors Simonini

Many of the friends of Dr. Simonini in several departments of the college remember him with admiration and affection, appreciative of his services to Longwood over a period of fifteen years.

It is the wish of the English Department to inform the faculty and other friends that the Virginia Association of Teachers of English, which he served so faithfully for many years, is undertaking to raise a memorial fund in his name. The next issue of the "Virginia English Bulletin" will carry further information on the subject along with an article of appreciation.

It seems appropriate to suggest that the faculty and alumnae friends who grieve over Dr. Simonini's untimely death take some part in assisting in this memorial already in the plans of VATE. Those who wish to make a contribution may send their check to Mrs. J. C. Bristow, Treasurer, Virginia Association of Teachers of English, Saluda, Virginia. Make checks payable to Virginia Association of Teachers of English and indicate "Simonini Memorial Fund."

If preferred, the checks may be placed in the faculty mail boxes of Mary P. Nichols, Mildred D. Davis or Foster B. Gresham.

"May Day Around The World" Features Dell Program, Dance

"May Day Around The World," students are being asked to buy them early. The crowning of the May Queen, Linda Carr, and presentation of her court will begin at 2:30 at the Dell at Longwood Estate. The "Around the World" program will be presented at this time. Following the program, a reception will be held on the lawn of the Estate.

From 4:00 until 6:00, Open House will be held in each dormitory. A semiformal dance, to begin at 8:00 and last until 12:00, will be held in the Senior Dining Hall. "The Soul Masters" from Danville will be featured. Tickets for the dance are now on sale in the Rotunda. The price is $2.00 per couple.

Preparations for the last play of this school year to be presented May 11, 12, and 13 have been in progress for several months. This particular play is quite different from those formerly produced by the Longwood Players.

Drama Groups Prepare "Stop The World"

Last spring the executive council of the Players and Jongleurs chose to produce the famous Broadway musical, STOP THE WORLD I WANT TO GET OFF. Under the direction of Mr. Dale Melsness and assisted by Shirley Timberlake, the play features Ed Baker, a law student at the University of Richmond and Nancy Parsons, a freshman music major. Also featured are Scott Pugh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sumner Pugh of Farmville, and Maria and Miraxa Silveira, twin daughters of Mr. Silveira, engineer in charge of the educational T.V. and Dr. Silveira, professor of Spanish. A chorus supports these leading roles. Members of the chorus are: Pat Armentrout, Cam Beckwith, Sharon Bourne, Diane Bowling, Martha Drummond, Courtney Fox, Lynn Gardner, Judy Hedrich, Liz Keffler, Margie Lantz, Pat Linamen, Marian Mowbray, Beth Rothge, and Marci Woodall.

The chorus has been hard at work under the direction of Judy Lang and they are assisted by the choreographer, Carol Croxton. They are accompanied by an orchestra composed of students from Longwood and Prince Edward Academy under the direction of Pixie Owen.

"Stop The World I Want To Get Off," famous Broadway musical, will be Longwood's last production this year.

Summer School Session For 1967 Begins June 18

May Day: 1967 Style

Traditions are charming but with the passing of time they lose their appeal.

Such is the case with our annual May Day at Longwood. There was once an era when Longwood Ladies anxiously awaited that first Saturday in May when they could romp and cavort around the maypole, bedecked in festive costumes. Much anticipation preceded this special day when all cords could frolic in the Dell.

That era has ended. Longwood girls of the 1960's have shied away from such antics, and in several cases, have suggested that Longwood revamp its May Day festivities.

This year we will still have "Around the World" in the Dell, but the May Day committee has heeded your advice and added some new attractions to this May celebration. A special luncheon has been planned, a reception will follow the festivities in the Dell, an Open House will be held in all dormitories, and a semi-formal dance will climax this May of 1967.

The May Day committee has asserted much effort to include these attractions in this year's program to please you, the students. Your interest and participation in these activities can best express your appreciation.

The Aim Of Education . .

(Ed. Note: The following is a guest editorial from "The Keystone," the student newspaper at Kutztown State College in Kutztown, Pennsylvania.)

The aim of education is to mold men, not to produce knowledge. The aim of a college student is to learn how to live, to learn how to think, to become civilized, not to become a scholar. But the aim of today's education must be to make the student a scholar.

The aim of today's college student, after not being fulfilled in four years of undergraduate school, remains the same. The student still wants to learn how to live and how to think. In hopes of fulfilling this aim, the student with the bachelor's degree goes on to graduate school where he undergoes processing the end result of which is the production of a professor whose aim is to know rather than to be.

The college student who yearned to live and to think is now one of those who in undergraduate school did not help him fulfill his aim. With such a cyclical progression, how can the aim of education, to mold men, be accomplished?

Take note of today's college professors. How many are there who know any tidbit of factual information and who yield this information from their learned lips in response to any questions? And how many of these some professors, when asked an opinionated question, become a machine that ticks off everybody else's opinion — every critic's opinion, every writer's opinion, every philosopher's opinion — everybody else's opinion but their own? Do they not have their own opinions? Have they nothing to say for themselves? Are they not allowed to say what they think? What has become of the free-thinking, free-living, free-speaking undergraduate who, after graduate school, was going to teach on the undergraduate level and was going to mold men, not process scholars.

Many have become the victims of the process of education. Many now have nothing to say. They can say only what others have said or what others have taught them to say. Many are now satisfied with the obvious and irrelevant. They are afraid to dig into the less obvious and, perhaps, relevant.

They now yield the typical trivial discoveries which are usually of a laborious nature. Many have just become conservatives, traditionalists and are afraid to be different, no, not radicals — just a little different from what they used to regard as "the educator."

But education should be proud for it has succeeded in squelching the free-living, free-thinking minds into the "educated" person willing to impart his knowledge unto free-living, free-thinking young people. This will provide for the best of all possible means of processing a student into an "educated person."

This is the last issue of THE ROTUNDA this year. Good luck on exams, have a pleasant summer, and we'll see you in September.

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

Once upon a time, at a state teachers college trying to toe the mark with the "In" schools — or at least trying to catch up so as to be only five years behind — the annual spring celebration was marked with an innovation: Open House in the dormitories.

"Great idea," purred a wide-eyed teacher-to-be, "I won't really know what to do with myself at first," she cooed, "but we'll think of something." Well, of course.

"Ghastly!" cried Maudie Frump. "Men! In my dorm? Well, they're not coming in my room. I don't clean up for anybody." Obviously.

The days passed, and with Maudie's coaching, the school split into two factions: those who wanted men, and those who did not. Clever enough. The breach widened, and before anyone realized how serious the situation had become, the Dean of Prudence made a major decision — maybe Maudie had a point. Perhaps men shouldn't be allowed in the rooms. After all, one couldn't just ignore Maudie. She WAS rather sloppy (also ugly), but she was a member of several influential campus organizations. That made Maudie a campus leader, even if no one was sure of the exact functions of those organizations. Maudie was a politico not to be ignored.

But the time for action had come. Open House was the next day! In a secret midnight session, the Future Teachers' Morals Committee (or was it Teachers Future Morals Committee?) met and began a discussion that lasted well into the next day. They weighed all the pros and Maudie's cons, but the more they talked, the more involved the discussion became.

It was the morning of the big day, and the situation seemed quite hopeless for the eager young ladies who had invited dates to come for the weekend. The festive activities began not so festively. The committee was still shut away in their den of debate. What was going to happen? Faces were still wearing question marks when the appointed time for Open House arrived. Just then a savvy student rebel leader jumped a recently planted thorn bush, and sprinted across the lawn. At the door of her dorm she turned and motioned for her date, who, on cue, took two rows of thorns at once. Stares of amazement turned into smiles and nodding heads. At once the crowd dispersed; in two minutes flat (a P. E. major timed it with a stop-watch she just happened to be carrying) Open House had begun — officially or unofficially.

The day was a tremendous success. Everyone had a grand time, and not one rule was broken — well, not many rules.

But what happened to Maudie and the committee? No one knows. They were never seen again. Most people think they just forgot to come out. Perished in their own thoughts, you might say. Don't cry now. A stick-in-the-mud never dies; she just fades away.

The Dean of Prudence was so grieved at the loss of all her supporters that she resigned. According to legend, she left the U. S. to establish a normal school in Uganda.

And what happened to the others? They lived happily ever after, of course, having Open House and other radical social events more often.

And the moral of this story is: when progress marches forward at a state teachers college, it has to sprint across a row of thorns.

The Courage To Be

Harsh, hard-glaring light spills a ring
In my dark world.

Shrill, loud-piercing plaintive music
Cries for late loves.

I am bound to life by narrow wires
And to love by nothing.

Because living is to know emptiness and
Close-reaching pain.

But Life remains still close, so near;
And hope of love yet leads me on.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

As a waitress of three years standing, I would like to make a reply to the student who feels the food that will go on tables that will not have people at them, then I'm sure something can be arranged.

Apparently, there are some "students?" At Longwood who think that they are guests at a resort or something. The main reason tables in the dining hall are closed are:

1. people do not come to meals—
- a. they don't like the food
- b. they are on the roof, sunning
- c. they are studying
- d. they are away from school
2. they have been excused early—for Longwood Players, Circus, Varsity teams
3. another reason your table may be closed is that it has been reserved for guests.

If the student who wants all the tables to remain open all the time will pay for the extra food that will have to be thrown out, I'm sure the dining hall people will try to arrange this. Of course, if every student who is living in the dorms will attend every meal and eat all the food at that meal (NO PEANUT BUTTER AND JELLY), then the food waste at Longwood would be cut down greatly and all the tables would have to be opened. If this can't be arranged, then if those who would like the tables to remain open all the time will pay an extra $100 to $200 for the food that will go on tables that will not have people at them, then I'm sure something can be arranged.

As for substitutes, they cost money. Waitresses get paid by the block, and if they get substitutes for some meals they must pay for them out of their own pocket.

The student stated that she hardly had the energy to drag herself to the dining hall. How would she like to work in the dining hall for two meals a day and breakfast every other day? How often does she get up at 6:00?

Would the student like for Longwood to have cafeteria style? Can you picture 1600 girls going through two lines for every meal? Remember the lines at breakfast during exams?

Finally, I want only to say that most girls here probably realize that this is a college and one can't have everything as one would like it. And to those who want everything their own way, I think it's time they take a good look at themselves and see whether they are mature college students or spoiled children who must have everything they want.

Eva Tinsman
Tables #3 and #6

Dear Editor:

This is in reply to the letter in last week's Rotunda concerning the closing of tables. It is quite apparent from the letter that the authors have never worked in the dining hall and have no understanding of the system under which the dining hall operates. This, however, seems to be the cause of the mistaken impression which the majority of the student body is under. So we will try to explain briefly the system.

For each meal the manager gives a count of the number of tables to be opened to the supervisor. She in turn takes this number and subtracts it from the total number of tables in the dining hall, thereby ascertaining the number of tables to be closed. The supervisor then, for example, starts with table 1 and closes in succession the number of tables to be closed.

For the next meal she goes through the same process and closes the tables starting where she has left off the previous meal. Therefore, all tables are closed in succession and not at random. However, the student body must realize at times it is necessary to reserve tables for special groups. Most of you have probably at one time or another been a member of one of these groups. Also, occasionally a waitress may become ill at the last minute and the supervisor, having not been notified, is unable to obtain a substitute.

Dear Editor:

Since the letter to the editor about closing tables in the dining hall in last week's paper seemed to represent somewhat the feelings of many L.C. students, I believe several of the misconceived comments should be clarified. For one, the waitresses have nothing to do with what tables are opened or are closed. When they do have off it has no relationship to their salary. Waitresses are paid by semester or blocks and are allowed so many "offs" during the time they work. Substitutes are hired for a fee whenever a waitress needs additional time off. This fee is paid by the waitress herself.

Why are tables closed, you ask. For many reasons: because guests of the school need to be accommodated; because groups or committees need to eat early and the tables are used then; because students go on picnics and trips; because at almost every meal a certain number of girls don't come, particularly on warm, sunny days. Tables are not closed to discourage students tute. These additional things may account for the tables being closed to the regular occupants.

The majority of the student body does not realize that if the entire dining hall was open for every meal, there would be a tremendous waste of food, thereby increasing costs. Neither do we think that the most of us would enjoy the cafeteria style under conditions similar to those which we experience every Sunday night.

Another misunderstanding seems to be the substitute system. If a waitress desires, or needs a meal or weekend off, she is responsible for obtaining her own substitute and paying her. However, if the substitute should fail to work for the girl for the meal or meals she has agreed to work, the waitress is held responsible and is required to make up the meal. Tables are by no means closed to accommodate the waitresses!

It is our hope that this letter will clear up some of the gross misunderstanding on the part of the majority of the students concerning the operation of the dining hall.

from coming to meals. They are closed to prevent food from needless waste. Everything taken off the tables, obviously, can never be used again. I realize it is an inconvenience to students to search for a seat, but believe me it's not all that of an ordeal. No one yet has been turned away from a meal because there wasn't a seat or enough food for the school. If tables were left open the huge amount of additional food used would be wasted and quite assuredly L.C. students could note a rather large increase in their meal charges. The present system in the dining hall is partially what enables the school to keep college fees so low.

I feel students should think the matter over and appreciate a few of the advantages they have: plenty of good food, lower fees, and family style service. Please be patient; it's quite a bit of time to figure how many girls will attend each meal, but our Slater Service is doing the best job they possibly can under the circumstances.

Longwood Social Scientists Attend Meeting

On April 29, five members of the Social Science Department attended the Fortieth Annual Meeting of the Virginia Social Science Association, which convened at Madison College, Harrisonburg, Virginia. The delegation from Longwood consisted of Dr. Lane, Dr. Benkins, Dr. Moss, Miss Ehrhardt, and Mr. Hubley. The convention included a general session, followed by sectional sessions dealing with Economics, History, Political Science, and Sociology. The topic for the symposium was "Megapolis and Implications: A Determination to Win, but also Stamina."

Tennis Team Scores Win Over Ferrum

The Longwood Varsity Tennis team hosted the Ferrum Junior College team on Monday, April 24. The afternoon proved to be a successful outing for the Longwood team as they won four out of the seven matches by taking two doubles and two singles.

Dee Dee Holdren's match proved to be the determining factor in which college would win, since the score was tied with three matches apiece until Dee De won her match. Going three full sets, with a total of forty games, Dee Dee not only showed a determination to win, but also stamina.

With almost every match going for three sets, winning the other singles match for Longwood was Anna Pettis who played in second position.

In the doubles matches, Suzanne Turner and Debbie Haller won in the number one doubles, and Betty Layne and Judy Turner took the number three doubles. Marcia Franklin played number one position for singles and went three sets before being defeated by the number one singles player from Ferrum. Gay Rice played number four singles, and Jane Tibbs and Linda Driver played number two doubles.

Orchesis Concert Combines Cultures

In the third study titled "Ethnic Dance Patterns" one visualizes more than one culture as the students of the intermediate class are representing the native or traditional characteristics of the specific ethnic group as one merges into the next as movement and position. These ethnic dance forms may be viewed as a cumulative racial art expression through traditional style (or styles), a technical vocabulary of movement, and an academy (or its equivalent) for the schooling of the dancer. The cyclical nature of the processes of infusion and diffusion are apparent in cultural patterns. One may also title the study as a "Story of Infusion to Diffusion through Cultures."

The third division of the spring concert includes members and apprentices of Orchesis and those students in the Advanced Modern Class, "Shapes" as an abstraction of the human body become free-forming sculptural visualizations rather than the physical body. The linear designs in space are more important than the sensations and feelings of the spectator. Since this is the first attempt of abstracting the human, a humorous moment brings one back to normalcy.

"A Visual Trip" as a group work is a study of actions and reactions of LSD. Strange creatures - human and otherwise.

It's time to tee off Class golf! Plus! It will be starting on May 8 with Barbara Matthews as manager. You don't have to be a great player to enter this competition, just come out and participate; it's a good way to get in some practice for your golf class, too. This is the first time we've had class golf offered at L.C., so let's make it really go over big. Check the A.A. Board for announcements and rules!

The bicycle keys can now be obtained in the Home Office. Students are held responsible for the keys and bicycles and for reporting any damages to the bikes. The bicycles may be checked out for only 2 hours at a time and may not be checked out after 5 p.m.

It seems that last week Betty Patterson, President of Orchesis, was demonstrating and teaching some modern dance techniques to a Freshman class when she caught her toenail in a crack in the floor and ripped the toenail off - Coordination on the tennis courts!

Don't forget that class archery begins this week. Each class must have at least 2 representatives - let's see some true L.C. spirit.

Remember class and color softball games will be coming up soon. The race for the class and color points is very close this year, so come out and support your class and sister class with a few yells and cheers.

Congratulations to the Varsity tennis team on their two wins last week. Best of Luck in the tournament at Mary Baldwin this week end! Their next home match will be on May 10 at 3:30 p.m.; L.C. will host Westhampton College.

Please remember to observe the weekend Tennis Court Regulations printed in the last issue of the paper. They're for your benefit.

I hear that Mrs. Harris was a little worried last week - she's been finding too many arrows up on the tennis courts!

Longwood Downs L-burg; Second Tennis Victory

In their third match of the season against Lynchburg College, the Longwood College Tennis team captured their second victory by winning two singles and two doubles out of the seven matches that were played.

Marcia Franklin playing number one position on the tennis team, went for three sets with her Lynchburg Opponent before winning the final two sets. Anna Pettis won the number two singles for Longwood, and played an outstanding game. Dee Dee Holdren and Judy Turner, who were playing number three and four singles, respectively, lost their matches, though both girls played good tennis.

Winning in the doubles matches were Debbie Haller and Suzanne Turner who played number two doubles, and Jane Tibbs and Chris McDonald winning number three doubles. Jean Hendricks and Pat Ingram gave their opponents a good match, but were defeated in the final set.

Committee Commends Mr. Warren O. Eyster

With a colorful and varied background, Mr. Warren O. Eyster, instructor of English, is also a novelist, and a jack-of-all-trades. After receiving his B.A. degree from Gettysburg College in Pennsylvania, he served in the Navy four years, worked in steel mills, with the Army Air Corps at Langley Air Force Base, served as managing editor for a New York publishing firm, and even sold life insurance and Fuller brushes trying to gather enough material and time for his writing.

He has published three books and one short story. His first novel, "Far From Customary Skies," was published in 1953 in the United States, England, Denmark, and Sweden, and deals with life on a naval destroyer. His second book, about life in a steel mill town, is entitled "No Country for Old Men." For his third work, Mr. Eyster drew upon his experience in Mexico where he spent five years. While there he worked for a time with the American Friends Society in the reconstruction of villages. "The Goblin of Eros" deals with the primitive conditions of Western Mexico while developing the theme of the impossibility of a successful revolution there. In 1964 he published a short story in "The Saturday Evening Post." "The Homecoming of the Children."

Next to his greatest love, writing, Mr. Eyster enjoys teaching. He taught for five years with the public school system, mostly in Bath County. Besides teaching classes at Longwood, Mr. Eyster is the sponsor of the "Rounda." He has done graduate work at the University of Virginia, and is now working toward his Master's degree here at Longwood.

Mortimer Plans Advanced NDEA Geography Study

Mr. Frederick C. Mortimer, Professor of Geography, has been appointed to the Institute for Advanced Study in Geography at the University of Minnesota from June 19 to August 4, 1967. The Institute for Advanced Study in Geography is sponsored by the National Defense Education Association of the Health, Education, and Welfare Department of the United States. It is under the auspices of the Department of Geography of the University of Minnesota. The Institute is held for college professors who teach students to be future teachers. The Institute is of a seminar nature. There will be several field trips around the Minneapolis area and approximately ten prominent visiting lecturers in geography plus the geography staff of the University of Minnesota will participate in the Institute.

Just one institute of its kind in geography is being held this summer. The Institute accepted only 25 professors from the United States and Mr. Mortimer is one of them.

Both Bird and Law are teaching Chemistry in the Department of Natural Sciences. Bird has published several research papers in Infrared Spectroscopy and Chromatography and Law is experienced in Thermal Analysis and Kinetics research. They are members of the American Chemical Society, American Association for the Advancement of Science, American Association of University Professors and Virginia Academy of Science. The latter is also a member of the American Nuclear Society, a senior member of the Chemical Institute of Canada and a fellow of the Chemical Society of England.

Federal Income Tax Bill Passes Senate Approval

The United States Senate has approved by a 53-26 vote a plan to provide a federal income tax credit of up to $325 for tuition, books and fees paid by students in colleges, universities and other post-high school institutions. Final enactment of the plan probably will depend on the decisions made by a Senate-House Of Representatives conference committee.

The tax credit plan was offered Friday, April 14, 1967, by Senator Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., as an amendment to a House-passed bill which would restore the investment tax credit to businessmen.

Under the amendment offered by Ribicoff and accepted by the Senate, the tuition and fee credit is 75 per cent of the first $200 paid, 25 per cent of the next $300 and 10 per cent of the next $1,000. The credit is subtracted from the income tax owed the government.

The credit is available to any person who pays the tuition. Thus, it would be available to working students and wives as well as to parents and other relatives. Parents with more than one child in college or graduate school may get a separate credit for each.

Capitol observers said an important part in the final decision on the tuition tax credit plan will be played by Congressman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. So far, he has taken no public stand on the measure which long has been opposed by the national Administration.

In offering the tuition tax credit amendment, Senator Ribicoff said there is an urgent need for tax relief for persons faced with the increasing costs of higher education. "In the long run," he said, "any amendment would serve all America. For our strength lies not just in the richness of our soil, not just in the wealth of the factories of our vast, complex physical technology — but in our minds, in our skills, in our ability to use these wisely and well."

Greek Gab

Longwood sororities will celebrate Greek Week, May 1 to May 5. This is the first time that the Panhellenic Association has had a week devoted to the sororities.

On Monday, May 1, at 5:15, the sororities will compete in three-legged races on Stubbs lawn. On Tuesday, May 2 there will be a Panhellenic banquet. Dr. Rice, Dean of Men at Madison College, will speak on "The Role of Sororities in Our Lives." At this time there will be installation of Panhellenic officers: President, Pam Stear; Vice-President, Marilyn Taylor; Secretary, Maureen Luby; Treasurer, Kathy Luneford; Rush Chairman, Kay Hall. On Wednesday, May 3, at 6:45 on Stubbs lawn there will be a powerpuff football game. The sorority girls will be divided into teams and will have their own cheerleaders, Mr. Wu and Mr. Gusset will be referees and Mr. Hall and Mr. Rubley will act as coaches. On Thursday, May 4, at 6:45 there will be an inter-sorority sing. Each sorority will sing a serious song and a ruse song. A professor from the music department will judge the best singers. On Friday, May 5, the student body will be invited to hear the Nobles, a combo from Richmond, in the Senior Dining Hall. This will take place from 7 to 9 p.m. and the admission is free.

Alpha Sigma Alpha sisters are getting ready for their annual picnic in honor of graduating seniors. Everyone is looking forward to Monday afternoon, May 8 for boating, outdoor games, and roasting hot dogs. At this time, gifts will be given to our senior sisters, just as a reminder of how much their membership has meant to our sisterhood and how much they will be missed.

With growing excitement, the ASA sisters are preparing for the terrific Greek Week which the Panhellenic Council is sponsoring. With entertaining competition to be held each evening, a banquet Tuesday night at which time Dr. Rice, Dean of Men at Madison College, will be speaking, and a concluding combo party Friday night, we all wish this big event would occur more than once a year.

Cross Campus Reveals Protest Everywhere

By PHYLLIS HUMMER
Protest, protest everywhere . . . Maybe it is the time of year that is causing students to rebel against, well, you name it.

At Old Dominion College in Norfolk, nearly one thousand students participated in a rally to register protest against the existence of non-hour classes. Students marched to the Administration Building where student petitions were presented requesting the elimination of classes at noon. Sponsored by the Student Government Association, in conjunction with the other student organizations, the rally featured a series of remarks by student leaders. The remarks of all speakers centered around the detrimantal effects of noon hour classes to extracurricular activities and intramurals. It was charged in the speeches that a liberal education was not possible at Old Dominion as long as noon hour classes hampered the activities of student clubs and organizations, and that classes should be eliminated. The students won; at the end of the current academic year all noon classes will be eliminated.

At Louisiana College, in Louisiana, N.C., about 150 students protested the decision of the Women's Judicial Board to suspend two women students for coming on campus "under the influence" of alcohol. The crowd was dispelled when the Dean arrived and agreed to meet with two student representatives the following morning. The Judicial Board decided not to retry the cases, however, the action resulted in starting a widespread drive to get the interpretation of the drinking rule clarified and reinterpreted.

At Duke University in Durham, N.C., students are protesting searches by the Student Government, which is attempting to rid all students of electrical appliances in their dormitory rooms. Oh, those popcorn poppers are causing more grief!

Geist Recognizes Junior Leaders

Eleven members of the Junior Class were recognized by Geist, the honorary leadership society, in an afternoon assembly Tuesday, April 25. The following girls were tapped in the special candle-light ceremony for their outstanding leadership in various campus organizations, otherwise to their college community and of intellectual integrity in all of their activities:

Donna Allison Daly, Norfolk, Virginia, a sociology major; Carolyn E. Hengerty, Suffolk, Virginia, an elementary major; Nancy Morton King, Orange, Virginia, a mathematics major; Mary Tyler Meade, Petersburg, Virginia, a mathematics major; Margaret Louise Wilkins, McLean, Virginia, a History and Social Science major; Eloise Jacobs, Richmond, Virginia, an elementary major; Susan Wolf, Falls Church, Virginia, an English major; Carolyn Ann Somma, Richmond, Virginia, a mathematics major; June Diehl Lancaster, Farmville, Virginia, a mathematics major; Jean Frances Via, Falls Church, Virginia, a business education major; Betty Louise Thomasson, Clarksville, Virginia, a mathematics major.

Storaska Visits Campus; Teaches Art Of Defense

A Girls' Self Defense Program will be conducted on campus on September 27, 28 and 29, by Mr. Frederic Storaska, an authority on the art of self defense for women. Participants will be divided into two sections for the coming demonstrations, some attending from 7:30-9:00, and some attending from 9:05-10:50 for the above dates.

The cost for the classes is $5.00 per student, along with parental permission for all girls under 21. Both should be sent to the Dean of Women's Office by September 27.

Mr. Storaska is a student at North Carolina State University and has had eight years training in various types of self defense. He has the coveted Black Belt in Karate, brown belts in Judo and Jiu Jitsu and has trained policemen, U. S. Treasury agents, members of SBI, FBI, Highway Patrol and armed forces as well as students.

The Art of Self Defense Lecture series has also been presented at Westhampton, Sweet Briar, Hollins, Mary Baldwin, and Roanoke Colleges, and 17 colleges in North Carolina.

Last night the initial meeting was held in Jarman Auditorium. The administration strongly urges the student body to take advantage of the rest of the course.

In his summation of the dynamics of the art of self defense, Mr. Storaska said: "Succinctly, my program is one of theme of non-violence. The girls do learn to defend themselves in a violent assault by utilization of various 'pressure' points as well as a formidable kick that a girl can utilize were she under attack by an assailant wielding a weapon. However, the purpose of my program is not to teach a girl how to fight her way out of assault situations, but instead, to teach her how to prevent nine-out-of-ten assaults from ever coming about."

College Holds Test For Tuberculosis; State Board Helps

Last week some 1000 students and faculty of Longwood College participated in one of the first mass tuberculin testing programs on the college level in Virginia.

Utilizing the Tine Test and a mobile X-ray unit, a four-man testing team was on the campus directing phase one of the new testing program. On Thursday and Friday the team did follow-up examinations to determine positive reactions to the test, and these persons whose preliminary tests did show a positive reaction were X-rayed by the mobile unit on Friday.

Sponsored jointly by the Division of TB Control of the State Health Department and the Virginia Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association, the new statewide program of tuberculin eradication is aimed at the young adult as its primary target. The testing unit's visit to Longwood was arranged by the 11-county Central Virginia TB and Health Association, of which Mrs. Emma G. Anthony, of Farmville, is executive director.

Mrs. Anthony reports that Virginia has the fourth highest tuberculosis rate in the nation, and that other intensive testing programs for the coming year are to be directed to six and 14-year old children.

New Faculty Start Fall Semester 66-67

On hand to greet Longwood students for the fall semester are 106 faculty members, of whom 34 will be teaching at the college for the first time.

New appointments to the faculty of Longwood College were announced by President James H. Newman and Dean of the College Richard B. Brooks.

Prof. Richard T. Couture joins the department of history and social sciences with the rank of assistant professor of history. He succeeds Dr. Francis B. Simkins who died last February after teaching at Longwood for 38 years.

Candidate for the Ph.D. degree at the University of Virginia, from which he received the M.A. degree, Mr. Couture has taught in the public schools of Portsmouth, St. Catherine's, and Collegiate School in Richmond, as well as the University of Virginia.

Dr. Shirley May O'Neill, a native of New Hampshire, comes to Longwood as professor of physical and health education and chairman of the department succeeding Mary A. Heintz who will resume studies leading to the Ph.D. degree at the University of Iowa.

A member of the faculty of the University of Michigan since 1958, Dr. O'Neill received her B.A. degree from the University of Tennessee. She received the Ph.D. degree from the University of Michigan.

Miss Nancy Ann Andrews, another new member of the department of physical and health education, has been appointed to an assistant professorship, filling a vacancy created by the retirement of Miss Olive T. Her.

Miss Andrews received her bachelor's degree from Longwood and the M.S. degree from the University of Tennessee where she taught for four years. She has also taught in the Virginia public schools.

Miss Elizabeth Williams Etheridge has been appointed assistant professor of history and social sciences to succeed Dr. Marvin W. Schlegel who has joined the faculty of Virginia State College in Norfolk.

A graduate of the University of Georgia, Miss Etheridge received the M.A. degree at State University of Iowa. She will soon receive the Ph.D. degree from University of Georgia. She has also studied at the University of Edinburgh.

Frederick Craig Mortimer, holder of B.S. degree from University of Rhode Island and candidate for M.A. degree from East Carolina College, has been named an instructor in geography. He will teach courses taught by Harold K. Magnuson prior to his appointment as registrar of Longwood.

Record Enrollment Marks School Year

Longwood College has a record enrollment exceeding 1600 students for the fall term. Exceeding last year's enrollment by nearly 200 students, a prospective student body of 1626 is made possible by the recent completion of Stubbs Hall, designed to house 209 girls.

New students arrived on the campus on Thursday, September 8 to begin an intensive six-day orientation period. The orientation schedule for some 635 new students included physical examinations, diagnostic reading and English tests, counseling by faculty advisers, registration, sessions with student government leaders, discussion of college regulations, Y.W.C.A. installation, Honor Code signing, athletic demonstrations, campus tours, songfest, and special dinners and entertainment by upperclassmen and the Colleagues, a sophomore and junior organization that sponsors activities in behalf of new students.

Parents of the new students met with President James H. Newman and other administrative officials on September 8 in Jarman Auditorium. In the evening President Newman welcomed the students to Longwood College, with new students on Friday morning, Sept. 9, for a discussion of curriculum choices, academic regulations, and Longwood's student guidance program. The first faculty meeting of the year was held on Sept. 9.

President and Mrs. Newman honored the new students at a tea on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 11, in the Student Lounge.

Legislative Board Changes Routine On Announcements

During the past few years with the rapid growth of Longwood, the system of announcements in the dining room has proved itself quite ineffective in solving the problem of communication on campus. Too many unnecessary announcements are having to be made, and for the most part, many students are talking while they are being made. The Legislative Board in cooperation with the Head table voted to cut down on the major bulk of announcements so that only those announcements of great importance would be given.

The following criteria has been drawn up to help the student body understand what is trying to be done concerning announcements:

- (1) There will be no announcements of meeting times or time change for any groups.
- (2) No announcements which say "Please read the wires" or its equivalent will be read. Each organization should have a folder recognized by its members for the bulletin board. Members should read it often, and it should be kept up to date.
- (3) Letters, personal notes, etc., should not be left on the Head table for distribution. The post office or dorm mail boxes should be used.
- (4) Lost and Found articles should be taken to the Home Office in Rutherford and put in the box there. Do not put objects or descriptions of them on the Head table. If something of extreme Freshman capping in the Sunken Garden by the Colleagues and entertainment of new students was on Monday evening.

Also on Monday was registration for returning juniors and seniors and those students assisting in the orientation program. Student teachers left the campus on Monday for eight-week practice teaching assignments. Sophomores registered on Tuesday, Sept. 13, and classes began for all students on Wednesday, Sept. 14.

The orientation program was directed by Dr. Ruth B. Wilson, dean of women, and student leaders, Miss Ann Kay, senior from Waynesboro, was student orientation chairman. Student Body President Nancy Brown, senior from Richmond, took an active part in orientation activities.

Chris Dixon Wins Writing Contest In "Seventeen"

Christine Dixon, a junior here at Longwood College, has recently been awarded a second place prize in "Seventeen" magazine's 21st annual short story contest.

Christine's story, "The Clover Ring," was one of 2,700 manuscripts entered in the international contest.

Christine is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Dixon, Jr., of Richmond and a 1964 graduate of Douglas Freeman High School. She is majoring in English and minoring in Math. Last year "The Clover Ring" won first place in Longwood's short story contest. Christine is a member of the Longwood Players and treasurer of the SEA.

Natural Science Places Physics In Dept. Majors

Beginning this fall it will be possible for Longwood students to plan a major in Physics. The development of a new academic program leading to a major in Physics reflects the growing interest in this discipline as one that challenges the scientifically oriented mind and offers attractive employment opportunities.

Longwood students will be interested to know that on a national scale only a small number of graduating Physics majors go into high school teaching. For this reason the demand for teachers of Physics is relatively high in many geographic locations. Especially is there a need for physicists in research and industry throughout the country.

The Physics curriculum, as developed and sponsored by the Department of Natural Sciences at Longwood, offers programs leading to both the Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science degrees. Special academic requirements for a major in Physics include a total of thirty-two semester hours of General Physics, Electronics, Mechanics, Electricity and Magnetism, and Atomic and Nuclear Physics.

Students are invited to contact Mr. L. R. Fawcett, Jr., Assistant Professor of Physics, for additional information about this new program.

McCombs Presents Recital In Jarman

On Sunday, September 25, 1966, at 4:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium, the Music Department of Longwood College will present Mr. James McCombs, assistant professor of music, in a faculty recital. Mr. McCombs will be accompanied by Mr. Robert Blasi, assistant professor of music.

Mr. McCombs' program begins with a group of five English songs - Arla from "Semele" by Handel, "Phyllis has such charming graces" by Young, "My Lovely Clara" by Moore, "The Sally Gardens" arranged by Brit-tan, and "Preach not me your musty rules" by Arne. These numbers are followed by four songs by Robert Schumann - "Du bist wie eine Blume," "Schöne Wiege," "Ich Grolle Nicht," and "Widmung" - and the aria "Il lacerato spirito" from Verdi's opera "Simon Boccanegra." After the intermission, he will sing a group of three songs called the "Poeme d'un Jour" by Faure. The final group on the program includes five "Songs of Travel" of Robert Louis Stevenson, set to music by the late composer Ralph Vaughan Williams. These songs are "The Vagabond," "Let Beauty Awake," "The Infinite Shining Heavens," "Whither must I wander?", and "Bright is the ring of words."

Mr. McCombs is a graduate of the University of Southern Mississippi, Columbia University, and attended the Eastman School of Music where he was a pupil of the former Metropolitan Opera Company star, Anna Kaska. He has also studied with Viola Peters, coach at the Metropolitan Opera Company and opera coach at the Juilliard School of Music. While in New York, he was an artist pupil of Bernard Taylor. Before coming to Longwood in 1956, he was a member of the faculty of the State University of New York.

Mr. Blasi graduated from Hofstra University, University of Michigan, University of Illinois, and presently is working on a Doctor of Musical Arts Degree under Dr. Stanley Fletcher at the University of Illinois.

The Challenge Of '70

Well Class of 1970, you have received many, many welcomes since you arrived at Longwood about two weeks ago, but we of The Rotunda are not issuing a welcome. Or, you might say, that we are issuing a welcome of a very special sort. We are offering you a challenge, the challenge of Longwood College, the challenge of yourself, the challenge of the future.

So far every class at Longwood has accepted this challenge, and met it, and conquered it. It is up to you to do the same. You must discover all that Longwood can give you for yourself, and you must give it some of yourself, too. You see, for all you take away from here, you leave just as much behind. The many students who have wandered these grounds and buildings are still here somewhere, and if you look closely you will find them. They are still here in what we call the traditions of Longwood. You must find them, and embark on your own journey, and set your own traditions.

If you feel that college is simply a place for an academic education you are extremely wrong. Books play only one role in the life of this campus. Longwood offers practically unlimited opportunities in the field of extracurricular activities. You can discover yourself for more easily in places other than the classroom or dorm room.

It is not necessary that you be successful in everything you endeavor — the important thing is that you try, and keep trying, to broaden yourself. College is quite often the last chance a girl has to enjoy outside activities to the fullest before she puts a bit of herself away in the interests of marriage and a family. Quite often college is the last opportunity to engage in certain types of attainment and, while we never stop "living," we must stop some phases of our lives to begin others. Longwood will grow and prosper as long as classes like you, Class of 1970, come along. The question is whether you will grow and prosper through Longwood. Remember, you must give something of yourself, but you will receive that many times over in return.

So, Class of 1970, we issue our challenge once again. Will you make college all it should be, through yourself? Or will you merely get a one-sided education here? We hope it will be the former. We cannot survive ourselves without it, and, truly, neither can you. Will you accept this challenge, your role in Longwood College?

Brooks Addresses Class

Dr. Richard B. Brooks, dean of Longwood College, delivered the summer commencement address at the College of William and Mary on Saturday, August 27.

Dean Brooks' graduation audience, gathered in Phi Beta Kappa Memorial Hall, included some 170 students, candidates for the bachelor's and master's degrees in the largest summer graduation in the history of the college.

A member of the faculty of William and Mary for 10 years, Dr. Brooks came to Longwood College in 1957 as associate professor of education. In the summer of 1964 he was appointed dean of Longwood.

He received his bachelor's degree from Springfield College and the master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania. He obtained the doctor of education degree from the University of Virginia.

Oleg Cassini Says

By OLEG CASSINI

Have you looked at fall's fashion preview and wondered what happened to Pop fashion — that non-fashion fad for the juvenile at heart? Have you a specimen lurking in your closet that you're suddenly a little timid about wearing? By now the answer to both should be an unwavering yes, because Pop is — thank Heaven — passe.

Its decline was, of course, inevitable — because anything that is more fad than fashion is ultimately doomed to history and hopelessly, oblivion. The difference between fashion and fad is simple: clothes that aim to flatter you and improve upon your femininity are the former, while clothes that aim to garner attention are the latter.

One didn't have to be a seer to know that Pop's appeal would be limited. It was too hokey, too conspicuous, too strident, gimmicky and "cute" to make a permanent mark for itself. And if you'd listened to me, you never would have bought any of it in the first place (although if you had a little fun with it — and didn't spend too much — it was probably worth it). I remember almost a year and a half ago writing an article for a national magazine about the acute limitations of Pop, when it was at its height. Because of my way of thinking, Pop's limitations always overpowered its few attributes (which can be summed up as freedom from restraint, whether in line, fabric, color or coverage).

Many of its claims simply weren't true. It pretended to be young and ended up being juvenile; it tried to be brash and ended up merely crass. And I am glad to announce that my predictions have more or less been fulfilled; if Pop is not dead, it is at least moribund, and the end is in sight.

Thank goodness, is all I can say. I can long live without clear vinyl dresses, cyclops eyes, gargantuan zippers and the like. I can do without all the devices that distract from your personality and lithe, detract and deny your femininity. As far as I'm concerned, Pop fashion was another movement in the underground neutralizing campaign that seems a permanent part of our way of life. It surely was not devised by men who really like looking at women, but rather by men who might rather not look at women — and by women who don't care if they appeal to men. Pop fashion is also, equally distasteful a symptom of the bandwagon kind of fashion that usually produces aberrations of a short-lived but noisy variety. The more extreme and hysterical the style, the more press attention it will get — and usually the less it deserves.

Pop was for women who wanted to be noticed, not as women but as objects. It exalted what was sodaball, not what was beautiful, and usually with a heavy, humorless hand. And in summary, I am glad that Pop is going. I wish it were gone, and I pity those of you who mourn its demise.

A Purdah Against Winter's Winds

FASHION MIRROR

Hats are big news this fall, with many different and far-ranging styles sharing the headlines. They're also far-ranging of foot, as designers take their hints from lands near, far, and downright obscure. The range in size is from little collapsible pom-pom types to swatches of rich, sumptuous material draped in neo-Arabian ways.

One style which may hit the jackpot is the updated and Americanized purdah, native to Persia, India, and other Hindu-populated lands. It is obviously warm (good for skiing, baby-carriage walking in the snow, or a windy day in town), covers a disheveled hairdo, and can be as elegant as the fabric it employs (usually jersey). Suggestion: make sure your eye makeup is on well — it's about the only part of you that is sure to show.

FASHION TIP

For those of you who have a block about buying lingerie, throw your inhibitions to the winds and buy some new slips. Not only are they colorful, dainty and/or silky, but they're absolutely indispensable under short skirts. I don't mean just mini-skirts, but even under what passes for ordinary lengths today, yesterday's slips are all too visible. Rolling a half slip at the waist, or pulling it up to the bosom solves the problem only for the first hour that you're out. After that, the slip is apt to be more noticeable than the outfit you may have gone to considerable trouble to put together. So, if you have a machine, sew your slips down to a proper length. If not, take the plunge and buy some real shorties. You'll stand a lot easier afterward.

Blind Date Types Varied;

Co-eds Become Victims

By PHYLLIS HUMMER
VICTIMS — Beware Blind Dates; Specimens include 'Movers'

They come in assorted shapes, sizes and intellects, but they are always "good looking, sweet and considerate, good dancers, great athletes, honor students, have new cars," and are oddly enough the ones whose pictures never seem to appear in the annual, BEWARE... for they are the "blind date."

Year after year for some strange reason, coed after coed becomes the victim of the blind date "fix-up." The one to blame is usually your best friend who wears all your clothes, eats all your cookies, pierces your ears, cleans your room, borrows your hairdryer, and listens to your incessant problems, or the boy at the local "men's college" whom you have a crush on but who has never asked you out because you are such "good friends" or just the girl down the hall who needs a girl for the boy with the car so she and her date will have a ride for the night.

In any event girls, I repeat my warning, offering these trite excuses to avoid the situation: "I'm allergic to night air," "I just contracted mono this afternoon,"

"Just washed my hair and the dryer is broken,"

"My parents are stopping by tonight,"

"I get carsick,"

"I'm getting my ears pierced and hair streaked tonight,"

"I have the sleeping sickness,"

When approached with the offer of a blind date, the coed is sure to ask her friend what he is like. Your reply might sound like any one of these:

"He's on the football team."

"His parents are up in the social world."

"He doesn't expect a goodnight kiss on the first date."

"He's an officer in his fraternity — Second Assistant Vice Mug-Washer."

If all your excuses are to no avail, and you feel washed up, dejected, queasy, or petrified, cheer up. If you are really hard up for a date for the week end, grin and bear it, and BE PREPARED. You may find yourself spending an unforgettable evening with any of the following standard b.d.'s:

The "mover," alias "BMOC," alias "Snowman." This guy is sure that his seductive baby blue eyes are the brightest and that he is constantly scintillating with sexiness. He is the only boy in the dorm with a full length mirror on the front and the back of his door. He spends an hour every day doing his body-building exercises and devotes ten minutes each day to basking under the sunlamp. He even bleaches the hair on the ankles for his Wee-juns-with-no-socks routine. He reeks with the latest brand of after-shave lotion.

This boy is probably also the "Big Boozer," whose frat brothers bring you back to the dorm at 8 p.m. and return to tuck him in.

Or you may find yourself facing a most enjoyable evening with the "jock." He is a monstrous critter with a sweet baby-faced character. Obviously he's still tied to the "apron strings" and confuses the maternal instinct with social behavior.

He will take you anywhere you want to go, agree with anything you say, or with anything anybody else says. He hasn't a brain to his name, but he's always ready with the latest football scores and racetrack records. Remember not to elevate your conversation with him above Cassius Clay or Yogi Berra, or you'll scare him off.

The last category is the "intellectual" or reject from "Operation Match." He has not yet become socially oriented, since he locks up himself and his books when the sun goes down, not reappearing until the sun comes up. In fact, he hates girls, parties, dancing, and drinking. He's completely anti-social. This boy tells you his whole life history, along with all his philosophies on death, civil rights, politics, and free love in the course of the evening. He hates school, any kind of restriction, thinks he's an individual, and hates people. He's really hurtin' for certain.

So the next time you overhear that classic line — "he's a doll, he has a new car, and loves dogs and children," you know that some misguided coed is about to experience a crucial moment in her college career, the infamous, incalculable, unpredictable, unforgettable "blind date."

"Hockeyettes" Recall Aches, Bumps, Fun

"Everyone out on the pitch" was a familiar phrase heard twice daily by 18 Longwood girls who attended Camp Tegawilla near Mount Pocono, Pennsylvania from August 31 to September 7. It was the 17th attendance of L.C. at the camp. The camp's purpose was to teach the techniques and skills of hockey, and to stimulate interest in this fast-moving game which is rising in popularity in America. The coaching staff consisted of experts who at some time or another held positions on the U. S. Hockey Team or the All-England Hockey Team.

The girls worked hard to attend this camp. They sold calendars and/or worked in the camp's dining hall to alleviate much of the expense. The Athletic Association helped by supplying the transportation. Those girls who attended are Connie Spradlin, Judy Bateman, Pat Ingram, Donna Tribby, Holly Forman, Peggy Wilkins, Carol Blythe, Virginia Sire, Kathy Hass, Lynn Rachel, Leslie Sedgwick, Anna Pettis, Sally Heilman, Jane Curle, Jane Erdman, Barbara Stone, Virginia Washington, and Kathy Wolfstrom.

When the bell rang, out of the multitude of cabins, hundreds of girls dressed in tunics rushed onto the playing field for an hour of stickwork and an hour of coached games. In the afternoon, two hours of matched games took place. Nightly sessions were held as the coaches discussed attack, defense, and general suggestions for better teamwork. If during the day, one found herself with nothing to do (Chuckle) the coaches acquainted with Lacrosse would hold sessions for team and individual practice for the schools.

After the nightly sessions the girls managed to have parties, sing and sojourn into town. They formed many new friendships, not only with teams from Virginia, like Westhampton, William and Mary, and Madison, but also with college and high school teams from the Northern States. The Southern Connecticut team taught the girls a new song, "Have Fun," which they brought back to L. C.

Back at Longwood, the girls could recall all the bruises and stretched muscles they suffered. But they could acclimate all the new ideas and methods they learned. They can remember all the jokes about their Southern accents and hospitality, along with the names they were called, such as "Tinkle-toes" and "Little fox terriers." They can remember the coaches' subtle way of correcting a mistake. All can admit that the bruises and time running around selling calendars were well worth it. The girls wish to extend a thanks not only to those coaches but to their own coach, Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt, who sacrificed her time to accompany them there as their chaperone.

Rose Mary Street Named "Miss F. B. T."

Miss Rose Mary Street, a senior Business major here at Longwood, has been named "Miss Future Business Teacher" for the coming year. The national contest took place this summer in New Orleans, Louisiana, with "Mr. Future Business Executive," and third place in "Mr. Future Business Teacher." Rose Mary felt it a wonderful experience because "I was able to meet so many different people." As a part of her prize, she will attend the NEA convention in New Orleans in November.

Qualification for "Miss Future Business Teacher" is judged on the following: a general knowledge test, including spelling, math and grammar, certification as a Business Manager for "The Rotation from the head of your department," membership in Pi Delta (department of your marketable Epsilon), and a member of the skills; and personal data and Publications Board.

Senior Spotlight Stars Active Campus Coed

By GINNY SIRC

Each week "The Rotunda" will spotlight a Senior Physical Education Major who has shown through leadership, participation, skill, and teamwork, the true spirit of Longwood College.

Pat Brown, this week the sports spotlight shines on you! Pat, who transferred to L. C. in her sophomore year, has always been active in the Athletic Association and is currently serving as President of the organization. She played Varsity basketball in her sophomore year, and this year's hockey season will make Pat's third year on the Varsity team.

The Class of '67 is well acquainted with this Senior, as Pat has been a clown in circus, secretary of her class last year, a "Flamin' Mamie," and a Green & White Picker. She has also played class and color basketball, volleyball, and softball. "Yupey" and "Nopey" are usually Pat's answers to any question you may ask her, and she has even been known to say "Alrighty" to Dean Wilson! Her girlfriends say that she was also Dally Queen of Culpeper, her hometown. How about that, Pat?

As a member of Alpha Gamma Delta social fraternity, Pat holds the position of Guard. In her Junior year, she was tapped for membership into Alpha Kappa Gamma, Honorary Leadership Society, in which she now holds the office of Treasurer.

Pat's senior year will hold many honors and experiences as well as a student teaching assignment in Danville, Virginia. We of "The Rotunda" extend to Pat our Best Wishes, and know that her friendliness, spirit, and leadership will long be remembered on the L. C. campus.

President Holds Faculty Meeting To Begin Year

By GWYN MUSE

President James H. Newman presided over the first meeting of the Longwood College faculty last Friday, September 9, in the Student Lounge.

Main features of the organizational session were the election of committee members, introduction of 42 new faculty and staff members, and the announcement of plans for opening of the fall term.

Dr. Patton Lockwood, assistant professor of speech and drama, was elected to the President's Advisory Council, succeeding Dr. Charles F. Lane, professor of geography and geology, whose three-year term expired. Dr. Elizabeth Jackson, professor of natural sciences, has become chairman of the three-man council that also includes Dr. Charles H. Patterson, professor of education and chairman of the department of education, psychology, and philosophy.

Four faculty members were elected to Longwood's National Alumnae Council. They are: Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt, assistant professor of physical education, and Miss Kate Trent, associate professor of education and psychology, as alumnae representatives; M. Henry Bittinger, associate professor of history and social sciences, and Dr. Charles F. Lane, as non-alumnae representatives.

A. A. Demonstration

Promotes L. C. Sports

By LESLIE SEDGWICK

The student body is invited to attend the Athletic Association's Demonstration, prepared under the direction of Connie Spradlin, its vice-president. The purpose of this demonstration is to stimulate the interest of the students in the intercollegiate, intramural and recreational facilities available on campus.

On September 22, 1966, at 4:30 p.m. all those interested should amass on Barlow Field, just below the tennis courts. Printed programs will be handed out and participants will be separated into three groups: Virginia Padgett, Carol Blythe and Deedee Holdren will act as guides. The demonstration will consist of three stations each with fifteen minute programs explaining the different resources of Longwood.

The program constitutes explanations and/or exhibitions of Lacrosse, Hockey, Softball, Golf, Archery, Tennis, Swimming, Basketball, Volleyball, Badminton, Bowling, Table Tennis, Modern Dance, and usage of the A. A. bicycles. All groups will then return to the hockey field for the finale. At this time, all sophomores and freshmen are invited to take part in a Tag-of-War which will decide whether the freshmen will wear their caps for another week.

Following this, everyone is cordially invited to attend the A. A. Banquet and the presentation of the white and blue Blazers to those deserving Seniors for their participation in the College's athletic program. Steak will head up the specially prepared menu for this annual event. Permission has been obtained for all students to wear Bermudas to dinner.

SEE YOU THERE!

Faculty Meeting

Dean Richard B. Brooks stated that the faculty meeting, a procedural guide and statement of academic policies, has been drastically revised and would soon be ready for distribution.

Special reports were made as follows: registration plans, Harold K. Magnusson; orientation, Dean Ruth B. Wilson; enrollment, Mrs. Mary W. Watkins; artist series, Charles E. Butler; and Institute of Southern Culture, Virginia Bedford.

Nichole Thomas is from Toulouse in southern France. She is 23 years old and has attended the University of Toulouse. While at Longwood on a Fulbright Scholarship she will be working on a Master's degree in English, as well as assisting in the Foreign Language Lab.

Also from France is Marie Claire Charon. She is from Lyons, where she attended the University of Lyons. Marie Claire is also interested in English, currently working on her Licence d'Anglais.

The third exchange student, Christina Torre, from Mexico City, introduced herself to the student body at the Red and White Party. Christi, attired in Mexican folk dress, performed a dance done at festivals and special occasions.

Christi is the fourth child in a family of three girls and three boys. When asked how this affected her dating, she replies that it actually was a help. The custom for dating in Mexico City is that the dates be chaperoned, but the third party may be someone near their age, preferably a brother or sister. Christi had no trouble in solving her problem.

The transfer student has attended Queen Mary's School in Mexico where she was enrolled in a three year program designed for primary school teachers. She is presently studying English and Math at Longwood where she will complete her undergraduate study.

Miss Marguerite Seidell will succeed Dr. Dorothy B. Schlegel in the department of English, speech, and drama. Appointed an instructor in English, Miss Seidell holds the B.S. and M.S. degrees from Central Connecticut State College.

Legislative Board To Change Method On Communications

value is lost, the chairman of the Judicial Board will decide if it should be announced.

(5) It is very confusing to page people who have phone calls or callers during meals. Only in the event of an emergency will this practice be used.

The following type of announcements will be given:

- (1) Notice from the Administration.
- (2) Notices from the faculty.
- (3) Student Government announcements that pertain to all students.
- (4) Announcements which pertain to the major bulk of students such as these:
  - (a) Mass circus practices
  - (b) General Rush information but not meeting times of individual parties
  - (c) Certain Athletic Events
  - (d) Club speakers when meeting is open to all students
  - (e) Class meetings

When you do have such an announcement, please use these suggestions:

- (1) Sign and date all announcements.
- (2) Put them in the basket by the Head table by lunch. Few announcements, if any, will be made at supper. At supper, a daily news broadcast Monday through Thursday will be given and music played.
- (3) If you wish to make an announcement yourself, please see someone at the Head table before the other announcements are completed.

At first, this may be hard on many groups but there are many effective methods of publicizing meetings. The new Activities Calendar in the new Smoker and the bulletin board outside the dining room can be very helpful. Church groups, Student Government, YWCA, Honors Council, and soon, sororities have individual bulletin boards for announcements. Secretarial notices sent out to members of small groups may prove effective as well as posters and stories in 'The Rotunda' concerning speakers. Please give Student Government any suggestions you have concerning announcements.

Patricia Perego Shows Paintings, One-Man Exhibit

A Longwood College art major has been discovered by the Discovery Shop at Miller and Rhoads in Richmond.

The shop is currently presenting a one-man show of 15 watercolors by Patricia Perego, a talented senior from Richmond. Representing Miss Perego's first independent show, the varied exhibit of still life, seascapes, and landscapes ranges in size from 8x10 to 22x28 inches, all matted and framed.

The exhibit also marks the first showing of paintings in the gift shop since it opened less than a year ago. Previous exhibits have consisted of crafts, hand-painted jewelry, and dried arrangements.

The shop manager expressed the hope that the current exhibit will be the first of many shows of this type by artists whose careers are still in the making.

At Longwood Miss Perego has been active in organizing a new art club, Philakalia, of which she is current president. She plans to do her student teaching in January and hopes to begin regular teaching in March.

Seniors 1. to r. Gail Derivishian, Debra Smith, and Sharon Williams try on caps and gowns anticipating convocation.

Meetze Spends Summer With Family In Sweden

By CHRIS DIXON
Ellen Meetze, a senior at Longwood majoring in educational sociology, spent her summer months in Sweden and several other parts of Europe. Traveling under the Experiment in International Living Program, she left New York City June 23 with a group of 80 college students from universities across the United States.

Landing in Malmo, on the southern tip of Sweden, she had her orientation prior to joining a Swedish "family" in Umea, a town on the northern coast of Sweden. Her "family" was a young couple who both taught English in a junior high school. Living in a Swedish home, Ellen became acquainted with the customs and culture of the people. The graciousness of the Swedes, the abundance of modern conveniences such as television, and the beaches along the coast made Sweden an ideal vacation spot. Ellen soon stopped looking for the stereotyped blue-eyed, fair, blond Swede. Her Swedish "mother" had red hair, a typically American appearance, and spoke perfect English.

While in Sweden, Ellen visited Hallen to go mountain climbing (unfortunately it rained), Siguna, the oldest town in Sweden, Uppsala, the oldest university in Sweden, and Stockholm.

Crossing the border, she journeyed into Copenhagen, Denmark, Finland, and Norway. The

New Drama Prof. Comes To Longwood

By KAREN MAHER
There are very few men who understand the mechanics of sewing. However, Mr. Dale Melsen, new assistant to Dr. Patton Lockwood in the drama department, is an exception. Sewing costumes is just one of his many duties in his present job.

Mr. Melsen, a native of Canada, attended Phoenix College. He graduated from California Lutheran College and received his Master's Degree in drama from the University of South Dakota. For two summers,

Mr. Melsen worked in summer stock associated with the University of South Dakota. With new people come new ideas, and Mr. Melsen has activated some of his in the drama department. The Players will use pancake make-up instead of conventional grease paint. According to Mr. Melsen, pancake make-up is easier to apply and is not as messy as grease paint. The department is also acquiring a new set of costumes and cabinets of old costumes that

LC Executive Takes Georgia State Post

Jacob H. Wamsley, business manager and treasurer at Longwood College, has resigned effective October 15 to accept the post of Associate Director for Business Affairs with the state board of regents which directs a 24-institution university system in the State of Georgia.

He will begin his new duties on October 24 with offices and residence at Atlanta, Ga., headquarters for the board of regents which administers the Peach state's huge educational system.

His immediate office will be in that of the system's Director of Business and Plant Affairs. There are two associates to this director, one for university plant affairs and one for system business affairs. Wamsley will hold the latter post.

From Atlanta, he will travel throughout Georgia supervising and advising institutions on dormitory, school laundry and dining hall operations, student health services and school budgets to support the educational process, among other areas.

Plans Changed
Acceptance of the new post has altered the college business manager's plans to enter private business at Farmville announced recently. "This offer was entirely unrelated to my recently announced resignation," Wamsley explains. "It was just too rewarding, promising and challenging to be turned down," he states.

J. H. Wamsley

Wamsley came to Longwood College in July 1953 after obtaining a B.S. degree in chemistry at VMI and a two-year Army stint. Starting as superintendent of building and grounds, he became business manager and treasurer in 1955 upon the retirements of S. L. Graham and Miss Winnie V. Hiner. At that time, Graham's post of business manager and Miss Hiner's duties as treasurer were consolidated in one office and one executive.

Miss Nichols Conducts European Alumni Tour

By CAROL JOHNSON
Miss Mary Nichols, instructor in English, had the experience this past summer of conducting the first, of what she hopes to be many, summer Alumni Tours of Europe. The group of sixteen left the United States on July 25 and returned on August 15. Included in this group were Miss Nichols, her twelve-year-old niece, Claudia Nichols, Mrs. Wayne Dawson with her son, Wayne, and Mrs. Sarah Yancey with her daughter, Eric. Also touring Europe were Mrs. Puchler, Mrs. Farrier, Mrs. Combs, Mrs. Woolfolk, Miss Kafer, Miss Trent, Miss Minkel, Miss Dodson, Miss West and Miss Brown. Various cities, such as Paris, Madrid, Rome, Zurich, Lucerne, Munich, Amsterdam, Stratford, London, and Shannon were visited by the Alumni. But not all of their time was spent in such well-known places. During the tour, they found time to take side-trips to Toledo, Spain, into the Bavarian Alps to Oberammergau, to Naples and the Isle of Capri, and by cable car to the top of Mt. Pelatus, the highest peak in the Swiss Alps. One of the most interesting of these side-trips included a tour of medieval Ireland. Transportation to these various cities was by air, which presented somewhat of a problem, since the tour was taken during the airline strike. In Madrid, the TWA flight of the group was canceled and reservations had to be made on another company. In Shannon, where the group was to catch their return flight to New York, the airline company tried to split the party into smaller groups, but Miss Nichols fought, and won, to keep the Alumni together.

LC Alumnae Start As Head Residents In North, Stubbs

By IDA MAYE SIMMONS
Mrs. Martha Rock and Mrs. Hatch, Longwood's new head residents, are both alumnae of Longwood returning to experience, for the first time, the pleasures and hardships of being a head resident.

Mrs. Hatch, head resident for North Cunningham, was initiated by a four-week substitution as head resident in Summer School. As a former student at this college, Mrs. Hatch observed that the school is "quite different" now in size, faculty, and in additional buildings. "But the old spirit is still here; that's the one thing we cannot allow to change," she said. "For the most outstanding change has been in rules. "When I was a girl here, there were more don'ts than do's." Students were not allowed to take on weekdays or to frequently leave campus for weekends.

Because Mrs. Hatch "came back to familiar grounds," life here was not hard to adjust to.

When asked what effect the trip had on her and the other alumnae, Miss Nichols replied, "It's really up to the individual, but it gave me an appetite to go again next year."

Musical Recital Slated At Jarman Sun. Afternoon

The Longwood College Department of Music presents a recital of music by Rosemarie Walker and Ruth Morehead, pupils of Mr. Robert Blasch, in a piano recital to be given in Jarman Auditorium on Sunday, October 2, at 4:00 p.m. The program will include Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G Major, Beethoven's Sonata in D Major, and Debussy's Valse Romantique, played by Miss Ruth Morehead.

Miss Rosemarie Walker will present Sonata in E Flat Major, Op. 10, No. 3, Minuetto I, Minuetto II, and Allegro, Miss Walker will play several of Brahms' raltzes.

To Blazes With Humor

Something we are always joking about, and think is terrifically funny, is a fire drill. Whenever we have one, especially one at night, it occupies everyone's conversation for several days after its occurrence. And the bunt of all jokes is the towel, and scarf, and book etc., that must be carried out when leaving the building for a fire drill.

But stop and think for a moment. Is the idea of a fire at Longwood really so funny? Where is there humor in perhaps losing a fought-for dormitory, or needed classroom space, or an expensive library, or auditorium, or necessary facilities used and enjoyed by everybody, like the gymnasium, or the dining hall, or numerous other buildings around the campus? What would we, as a student body, do if we lost part of our academic surroundings through fire?

And, really, this book, towel, scarf idea is not so ridiculous at all. Each would be a very useful item to have if an escape would have to be made through flames, and perhaps someone would be saved through the protection these objects would offer in the event of a real fire. Where is there humor in saving a life?

Smoke the Bear, Sparky the "Fire-Prevention" Dog, all of those are just studied little drawings at which to scoff. After all, nothing could ever really happen when we smoke, or go camping, or smoke, or use our irons, or smoke, or overload that outlet, or smoke, or use that hair dryer with the frayed cord, or smoke, or cook, or smoke. Nothing could ever happen. . . then why has Longwood had several fires in the past few years? And a "Little Fire" can very, very easily become a real blaze, a real destroyer, both of property, buildings, and lives. Where is there humor in not being cautious?

We would rather not be put in a position where we must try to function minus a building, or supplies, or few members of our class. Of course we would rather not be put upon with the bother of fire drills either or maybe even reading an article such as this one. But maybe, if just once, that fire drill, or this article, would make us step back and think we would realize that the benefits of a little bit of trouble for outweigh the time and effort it took us to be cautious. Is it so difficult to run outside during that fire drill, is it to hard to move away from the curtain when we light our cigarettes or is it too time consuming to crush that cigarette instead of throwing it into that trash can?

Silly, isn't it, all the dumb things we do, and also all the things we think are so dumb? But maybe it's just lack of insight on our part. Maybe some of these dumb things are not dumb at all. . . maybe we're the dumb things. Why not think about it? Where is there humor in not being cautious?

Hampden-Sydney Writers Describe Virginia Co-eds

By PHYLLIS HUMMER

Alas! A bit of the Ivy League has turned up in the good old South.

The college dating guide which originated 'tween Ivy-covered walls has been brought to Virginia by two Hampden-Sydney students, Steve Martin and Steve Jewett.

It all began way back in '65 when some Princeton undergrads published "Where the Girls Are" - a guide to dating at Eastern women's colleges. They got back a stiletto of witicism called "Where the Boys Are," researched by girls at Smith and Mount Holyoke, and written by two Amherst students.

The Virginia edition was the result of extensive research by questionnaire (funny how we never managed to see an overabundance of them) and the "inspired editorship" of the Young Authors, Martin and Jewett.

We are told these two devoted their summer to this "literary masterpiece" which began last spring with a survey involving over 400 representative college students in Virginia. This survey included fraternity and sorority presidents, class officers, athletes, and other campus leaders. (No mention of the "typical college student," we'd like to note.) The questions asked ranged from "Where do students at your school most like to date?" to "Is premarital sex generally accepted at your school?"

Cozing uncanny concern for the plight of dateless boys, the finished product was the "Boy's Scouting Manual," a guide to the delights of dating at Virginia women's colleges.

Oddly enough, they have also published the "Girl's Scouting Manual," a guide for dateless girls. We are inclined to believe this version might have been written more appropriately by a coed. Funny how things look different through feminine eyes. These dating guides will supposedly help the student just entering college to learn where to go, what to expect, and who and what is "in" on other campuses. The "seasoned veteran" will find the light humor and satire and much self-information of the books amusing. Cartoons, pictures and categories supplement articles which provide general and specific information on events for various colleges is also included in the "guide." An extensive glossary of collegiate terms and expressions completes each guide.

"Concerning that Virginia gentleman you've heard so much about," advises the guide - "We're unhappy to report that the only place this can be found in quality is the ABC store! . . . I guess they would know."

Speaking of Hampden-Sydney, a small "Christian" college, the manual urges all passing through Farmville to "notice the Longwood girls peering only through the bars." (Probably gazing very apprehensively at the "choice" dates they will encounter on the approaching weekend.)

This very aptly cautions coeds to BE PREPARED when visiting H-S. . . take camping equipment because you may spend the better part of the night "Boondocking" - taking beer, bread, and blanket to the woods or field.

And of course the "Good Greeks" are all a matter of personal opinion. . .

The "Boy's Scouting Manual" is even more humorous - Gals, they've got us all typed to a T: (Continued on Page 3)

Letter To The Editor

Conduct Of LC Girls Impresses Performers

Dear Editor:

Comments by Chad, Jeremy, and their manager after their recent performance should give emphasis to the title "Longwood Ladies." Despite the temporary loss of harpsichord pedals and a few other problems, the performers expressed much satisfaction with their trip to Longwood. Gary Ebbs, the manager, said, after returning to Richmond, that they were seldom treated so well other places and all of the troupe indicated that coming back to Longwood would be a pleasure.

What was so different about Longwood? In the first place, every arrangement which could be made in advance for the performers' convenience was attended to. Secondly, both backstage crew and audience showed consideration and responsiveness. No one tried to mob the performers, snatch souvenirs from their clothing or equipment, or intrude for autographs while they took a few minutes rest after nearly 48 hours with little sleep. An appreciative audience listened instead of squealing as adolescents or heckling, as some unsophisticated audiences do. To us, conduct of that kind is unthinkable, so much so that we take our own good manners for granted. And so it should be.

The reaction of Chad and Jeremy to Longwood conduct is in keeping with what other performers have experienced. Even Dionne Warwick, who is noted for having difficulties with the crowds, left Longwood well-pleased by courteous treatment and a warm audience.

We frequently have a tendency to think ourselves a little provincial because of our geographical isolation, but performers coming to Jarman have left with memories of our adult and considerate conduct which does us far more credit than the conduct of the supposedly urbane and cosmopolitan audiences from the large cities.

To Miss Wells, Dean Brown, Colleagues and Associates, technical crew, and all others who played a part in bringing us such a fine performance, I offer my hearty thanks. To the freshmen, I would ask that the tradition of the Longwood Lady so much in evidence at the performance be kept in the future as fine as it has been in the past.

Oleg Cassini Says

It does not surprise me when I see a woman being discourteous to another woman. It doesn't surprise me because I've come to expect it, so instead it just makes me ponder once again the nature of the beast. For instance:

Why will young, energetic women rarely give their seats to another woman who is very pregnant? Why will they elbow each other with relish at a bargain counter in a manner that would appall the crudest man? Why will they imitate each other fiercely yet steadfastly maintain that they are originals? Why will they blatantly knock a woman to get the attention of a man they don't even care about?

For one good reason, courtesy as a value is on the decline - so naturally its sometimes-opposite, self-expression-becomes a paramount value. The exaltation of the self-whether through individualistic clothing or through contemplative yoga - has been on the rise for a number of years. The degree to which it is carried, and the motivations behind it determine whether it is wholesome self-expression or obsessive self-indulgence.

Now one of the simple facts of life is that men work for a living and usually hard enough to leave them little time for such frivolities as inner-directed contemplation. So while they might actually come to the same conclusions as the women (a statement which I doubt), they just don't have the time to bother. Women, on the other hand, have time for just precisely that kind of time-consuming indulgence. They have the time to tell themselves they're merely expressing themselves and their inner needs, when in fact they are throwing normal, civil rules to the winds in favor of wayward personal license.

Civility, of course, is a prominent value in a civilization, as any etymologist can easily explain. Almost by definition, civility involves you in a relationship with another, no matter how superficial or transient. It obliges you to consider their feelings when expressing yours. It sounds simple, and in ages past it was not only simple but second nature, an absolute part of one's upbringing and outlook on life.

But not these days. The mothers may be teaching it, but the gals aren't with it. On the contrary, they are perfectly willing and delighted to write off everyone who isn't in their group. The group, naturally, tends to live by its own rules and codes (which usually share precious little with what generally passes as courteous behavior). And while we may not have a generation of vipers on our hands, we have a bunch of kids to whom courtesy sounds like niggardly, fawning cowardice.

It's a long way indeed from the Monday morning bargain basement crowd to courtly drawing room society, and the latter may be just as alien to our life as the former was to theirs - but somewhere there is room for courtesy, for the gentle art of pleasant accommodation, for mild interest in another's feelings and well-being, for some modicum of consideration or thought for someone else. It's a pretty big part of being human, no less of being female.

Mink, ever coveted and long reigning, is taking on a new and jaunty look. The dressmaker-type of tailoring made a bang in the fur world last year as many varieties showed up in tailored dresses or skirts, or intricately seamed coat-dresses. That much having been accomplished, it remained only for the fur itself to throw off its shackles, and that it now has done. You can positively expect to see minks patterned in black and white or beige chevrons, diamonds, zigzags - virtually any patterns into which differently colored skins may be sewn. So, while mink is not getting any cheaper, it surely is getting younger, sportier and more versatile. After all, if rabbit can shape up it was only a matter of time before the staid world of mink succumbed too. Next frontier: chinchilla?

Red & White, Green & White Classes Rally In AA Color Cup Contention

"Another season, another color cup!" is a saying the Green & Whites hope to keep, but the Red & Whites are out to stop them. On Monday, September 26,

Eller Field was filled with girls in varied colored gym suits, each girl dribbling a hockey ball, warming up for the tough competition ahead.

Mrs. Brockenbrough of the Physical Education Department will be this year's Faculty Advisor, and Judy Bateman is the Fall Sports Chairman. Tommi Stone and Jane Erdman, class managers, have announced this year's rules:

1. Each player must have eight 45 minute practices.
2. Six of these practices must be general practices. The other two may be intraclass practices.
3. A class may have more than one team for the general practices.
4. No team may start a class game with fewer than eleven players.

5. In case of injury during the game, a team may play one player short.

6. Class teams will be chosen by the respective team players. This selection will take place on October 7.

7. The players representing the classes for the color games will be selected by a faculty committee.

8. All students participating in class hockey will be expected to take care of equipment, and put it away properly at the end of each practice period.

October 10 marks the day that intraclass practices begin, and class games begin on October 17. After the selection of the Color teams, games will be on October 31, November 1, and November 2.

Be sure to check your hall and class bulletin boards for the definite times, places, and dates for each practice. There's still time for you to get the required number of practices in. SUPPORT YOUR CLASS AND COLOR!!

New Housemothers Start College Life In North, Stubbs

Having an all-freshman dormitory posed no problems. The Sophomore Assistants entertaining and occupying the freshmen made the new head resident's first weeks run "like clockwork."

Mrs. Rock, head resident for Stubbs, has had no previous experience as a head resident. While she has had offers from the University of Richmond and Westhampton, Mrs. Rock chose Longwood because of the "wonderful town" in which it is located.

Like many who live in Stubbs, Mrs. Rock has had difficulty in adjusting to the long walks to the Rotunda each day. "I had to go downtown and buy some low-heeled shoes."

While the recent aid work has been more than expected, and while there are still problems with completion of the new dormitory, Mrs. Rock has only praise for the "bunch of sweet girls" in Stubbs and for Longwood.

Meetze Takes Summer Study Of Swedish Life

Norwegians, Ellen said, were most typical of our idea of Scandinavian people. Here she was able to go up on the snow capped mountains and throw snowballs in January.

During the last month of her stay in Europe, Ellen left her Swedish family to rejoin her American group. The American group traveled into Berlin, crossing into both East and West Berlin. Ellen felt that this part of her stay made the greatest impression on her. Here she experienced the rigors of entry into East Berlin as officials checked everything from gasoline tanks to personal clothing. Upon seeing the wall of Berlin and the points along the wall where many had failed in their attempt to escape, Ellen said she had a deeper realization of democracy and appreciation for freedom.

From Berlin, the group traveled to Brussels and Luxembourg. Ellen flew back to the United States from Luxembourg, arriving in New York City the day the airline strike ended.

Ellen urged everyone to take advantage of such programs as the Experiment in International Living. The opportunity to live with people of another country made her feel a greater respect for and understanding of Swedish life.

Dr. Sprague Attends Summer English Activities

By KAREN CAMPBELL
For most people, a "change of pace" unlocks the door opening the season of summer, and college professors are no exceptions. Dr. Rosemary Sprague, professor of English, took a brief vacation from teaching and spent the summer at her home in Cleveland, Ohio.

Attendance at the American Library Association Meeting in New York during the month of July constituted one of the major highlights of her summer. While at the convention, Dr. Sprague attended the Newberry Caldecott Award Dinner, the purpose of which was to give recognition to an author who had demonstrated superior ability in the composition and illustration of literature for children.

"Idea Day" comprised another aspect of the convention. At this event, various publishing companies sponsored exhibits of their most recent and prominent selections. Both the authors and editors of the works were present to answer questions posed by observers. The purpose of "Idea Day" was to acquaint librarians from all sections of the country with the latest available materials.

The Young Adults Services Division of the Library Association sponsored a round table discussion, of which Dr. Sprague was a participant, on "What Is A Young Adult Book." Many publishers have been proponents of the theory that certain groups of adult books would be suitable for teen-agers. The discussion in this seminar was concerned with finding a middle ground between the teen-age populace' rejection of many books, which were favorites in the adult world. Although the panel members did not arrive at a definite conclusion, a report on this subject will be published at a later date.

Dorm President Tries For Title Tobacco Queen

By MARION BORISEVIC
Maria Kilmartin, newly elected president of Tabb and Student Government, will compete for still another honor in the National Tobacco Festival in Richmond, October 12-15.

A resident of Waverly, Virginia, Maria won the title of Miss Summer County, 1966, on Labor Day. Her prizes included a cash award and the opportunity to compete for the title of Queen of TobaccoLand in the Tobacco Festival.

She will begin her activities on Wednesday, October 12 with a luncheon and reception. On Thursday she will compete in the talent show, playing Beethoven's "Midnight Sonata" on the piano. She will ride in the grand parade on Friday, and on Saturday, at half-time of the football game between V.P.I. and Vanderbilt University, the Queen of TobaccoLand will be chosen.

In their September 15 issue, the Sussex - Surry Dispatch, gave Maria a most complimentary front-page review: "Her beauty is natural, her poise is really, her talent very promising if she should choose a career in music, and her scholarship record is outstanding..." The article concluded with "the whole county wishes her well..."

A sample of the type of discussion engaged in may be derived from the group's analysis of "The Spy Who Came in From the Cold," John LeCarre's novel captivated the adult segment of the population, but teen-agers failed to share in their elders' enthusiasm from the work. Panel members suggested that the young adults' attitude towards the book might be explained by the fact that the story occurred in a remote place, and the hero was a middle-aged man rather than the dashing "James Bond" stereotype, which has captivated the admiration of the teenage group.

Perhaps the most exciting feature of Dr. Sprague's summer concerned her biography of Robert Browning, which was published on September 15, 1965. Prior to her departure for the Library Association Meeting, Dr. Sprague received notification from her publisher, Chilton Press of Philadelphia, that they had released a second edition of "Forever in Joy" in May, Dr. Sprague is also the author of another book which is currently "in the works." An official announcement concerning her latest work will be made in November.

Organ Major Studies Europe During Summer

By BONNIE LANHAM
Sandra Curry, a junior majoring in organ, was one of three Virginians who visited the International School for Organists at Haarlem, Holland this summer. Also attending this school were Joanne Curmatt, a former organ professor at Longwood, and Sara Brunt, a senior at Randolph-Macon Women's College in Lynchburg.

Sandy was in Europe for eight weeks, three of which were spent in Haarlem. There she studied French music under Marie-Claire Alain, a world renowned organist from Paris, France. Sandy attended class two hours each day. The town churches were open for practice and many practices were held in St. Bavo Cathedral, a twelfth century Gothic cathedral which houses one of the finest organs in The Netherlands. Each night the professors gave organ recitals. The purpose of the school was to learn how to teach French music correctly.

The next five weeks, Sandy and her group visited Denmark, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, and France. On September 4, they left from Brussels, Belgium to return to the United States. Sandy's summation of her trip was, "It was great!"

Badger Starts Science Visits To High Schools

Directed by S. M. Heflin of Virginia Military Institute, the program is organized by the National Science Foundation. Lecturers are chosen only by invitation.

Virginia high schools are invited to request consultants from the roster for visits to their schools. Rosters are compiled from which teachers in high schools may also obtain consultants to assist in their class for a day.

U. Of France Study Enchants L. C. Frosh

By LIBBA BALL
For Barbara Dunham, studying overseas an all-year pastime. Barbara, a Longwood freshman, spent five weeks this summer studying French at the renowned University of France.

"My mother read an article in the local paper about a group of students sponsored by the American Institute of Foreign Study who were planning a voyage to Europe. I was really excited and sent in my application right away."

Barbara, a senior at a Fairfax High School at the time, told all her teachers of her interest. "When I found out I made it in February, I called up all my teachers, friends, and relatives. I couldn't believe I would really be going to Europe!" "Actually the course lasted four weeks, and the remaining week we toured France. Paris was just about the most startling because even though it's the French capital, very few of the people speak French. Actually it's too commercialized to really be representative of the true French culture."

During her stay at the University, Barbara made many acquaintances. "I'm corresponding with two French boys now, and I can't wait to go back again."

Mealtimes, too, offered rich adventures. "One morning," she began, "our group went to breakfast and found our bowls turned over. It wasn't until we realized that we were being served cafe-au-lait that we figured out why the table was set so differently."

"French dates are so different from American ones," she added, "because at the end of the evening, the boy shakes hands with the girl. I was totally overwhelmed at this practice, but I guess it's so different from American customs that I had to get used to it," she smiled.

President James H. Newman and Dr. Richard B. Brooks, college dean, announced the leaves of absence and appointment of new professors who will fill the vacancies during the 1966-67 academic year.

Miss Gail Y. Okawa, B.A. degree from University of Hawaii and candidate for M.A. degree in September from Duke University, will fill the position in department of English, speech and drama held by Dr. William J. Sowder who has been selected a humanist.

weren't so dumb way back then - and some of you aren't so dumb today either. Each year I see a few well-fashioned muffs on some of our students, and I wonder why it's only a few.

The trick of course, is to use good fur and have it well made. Today you can choose from attention-patterned furs whose origin you need know, or you can rely on old muffs standbys such as lamb or mink. Any fur will do so long as it's new looking. It's all right to look like Ninotchka, but don't let your muffs look like Ninotchka's muffs.

New Professor Hughes Vacations In England

By JUDY LEACH
Mr. Paul F. Hughes, a new professor in the English Department, spent the last two weeks of his summer in southern England. Of special interest to Mr. Hughes was the London area because of the various English dialects which can be heard there, and the numerous literary figures who lived there. London also acted as his home-base, for from there he traveled in a cross-country pattern throughout southern England and west into Wales and then east into France.

London was covered as thoroughly as time would allow. In addition to the usual tourist sights such as Piccadilly Circus, the Tower of London, Buckingham Palace, Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, and the National Gallery, Mr. Hughes saw practically all the sections of the city either by bus or on foot.

The Bloomsbury area of London where Mr. Hughes stayed was once frequented by Virginia Woolf and George Bernard Shaw. While in London, Mr. Hughes saw a production of Shaw's "You Never Can Tell." Located near this section is the British Museum. Mr. Hughes said the Museum contains an excellent collection of literary autographs, in addition to numerous other manuscripts and classical collections.

Another place of interest which he visited was Tabard Inn, the starting point for Chaucer's Pilgrims. Unfortunately the British are not as restoration minded as Americans for the Tabard is now a tailor shop. Mr. Hughes remarked that the British are constantly looking for new artifacts, yet tend to leave those they do have much the way they were found. Near the Tabard is The George Inn, a gallery in which where Shakespeare used to present some of his plays. London is a good city in which

Players, Jongleurs Give Fall Production

Rehearsals for the three plays to be presented first semester began last week after a series of four try-outs, the last of which was held in Johns Auditorium at Hampton-Sydney.

The season's first play begins October 13, 14, and 15 with Edward Albee's brief play, "The Sandbox." The cast, chosen by the executive council of the Longwood Players, includes Sharon Bourne as Mommy; Pat Holmes as Grandma; Sandra Curry as the Musician; Tim Vease as Daddy; Randy Hallman as the Young Man; and Pat Quinn and Kathy Goodwyn as Stage Hands.

Immediately succeeding this fourteen minute curtain-raiser is the play, "Menachmi." Hampton-Sydney has provided the men for the many male roles in this play. The cast is headed by Frank Faust as Menachmus and Neil Aird as Sossicles, and supported by John Adams as Peniculus; Mayling Simpson as Erotium; Jim Rhodes as Mes-senio; Cheryl Rose as Cylindrus; Mary Polifka as the Maid; Tom Bradley as the Prologue; Lynn Gardner as the Wife; Frank Johns as the Father; Dick Bell as the Doctor; Simmon Armstrong and Topper Cook as two Sailors; and Wayne Armstrong, Tom Bradley, and Bruce Eskew as the Slaves.

The set, designed by Mr. Melanes, is well underway. The play production class and the technical crews are responsible for the construction of the set. Costumes from the fifteenth century are being made by an enthusiastic costume crew. With the first performance less than two weeks away, both cast and crews are awaiting anxiously the premiere, Thursday night, October 13.

Business Organization Active At Convention

The Virginia Chapter of Phi Beta Lambda, a campus organization for students majoring in business, will again be remembered for its active participation at the national convention held last summer in New Orleans, Louisiana. The more than twenty-five Virginia delegates actively campaigned and participated in many of the competitive categories. Delegates from Virginia proudly walked away with top honors in three of the national events. Needless to say, all of the members are eagerly looking forward to next year's convention to be held in San Francisco, California.

The Longwood Chapter of Phi Beta Lambda is planning a welcome party for all freshmen and transfer business majors. The Phi Beta Lambda Coke Party will be held at 4 p.m. on Thursday, October 6, in Ruffner 121. At this gathering the new students will be introduced to the faculty members of the business department and the PBL officers for the coming year. Also at the meeting the prospective members will be oriented in the purposes of Phi Beta Lambda and will be given the opportunity to see examples of chapter activities and recent honors that have been awarded to members of the Longwood Chapter.

Mr. Lawhorne Takes Administrative Job

By MARION BORISEVIC
Ronald G. Lawhorne, presently assistant Business Manager, will become the new Business Manager and Treasurer for Longwood College on October 15, when Mr. Jacob H. Wamsley's resignation will become effective. When asked if this transition would be difficult, he replied that there wouldn't actually be a transition of duties. By working with Mr. Wamsley for three years, he is already familiar with many of the duties he will soon officially assume. An example would be the Bi-annual Budget with which he is well acquainted, because of helping Mr. Wamsley during the previous years.

The new assistant business manager has not as yet been chosen, but Mr. Lawhorne said the office is looking for someone to fill that position. He will have to train the new assistant business manager, while he assumes his duties and obligations also.

Mr. Lawhorne's final messages were that he was very pleased over his appointment and that he invites all Longwood students to come to his office about any financial problems they might have.

On Monday, the 10th of October, the "Gyre," student literary magazine, will hold an introductory meeting for freshmen and interested upperclassmen. Freshmen will be allowed to join the "Gyre" staff since the literary magazine is classified as a departmentally-related organization. Due to student teaching vacancies, the "Gyre" will need many new staff members to put out the fall issue. Members for the short story staff, the essay staff and the art staff are needed.

All interested students should attend the "Gyre" meeting at 5:00 Monday, October 10, in the "Gyre" Room in the Student Building, or see Freda Richards, Stubbs 213, or Mr. Blackwell.

Sheep Of The Pasture...

College is wonderful in many ways, but perhaps the most wonderful is that it offers to all of us the opportunity to meet and get to know many different types of people. We, as students, and people, should get to know the different varieties of this human species placed here on earth. It is our privilege, and it is also our duty.

Being an individual is something most of us know little about, because, quite frankly, the majority of today's college students are just like little sheep. . . we follow each other in every way and manner possible. It is indeed a rare quality to find someone who is true to himself; no matter what his peers may judge him to be. How often have we heard the expression "But everyone's doing it" or "everyone's got one," or how often have we followed the crowd simply because we did not want to be thought of as being different, or queer, or weird, or socially unacceptable? How often have we done things we really did not want or desire to do, but went ahead and did anyway simply because we did not have the backbone to stand up and say no?

We find the campus of 1966 to be in a sad state of affairs. We do not mean not to follow each other in say, for instance, style, but why must everyone adopt the same thing, especially if you know that a certain mode is entirely wrong for you? Trends are fine, but just because one campus finds that Humphrey Bogart is great, why does every other campus follow along and play Bogie to the hilt? Originality is great, but pseudo-originality is beyond belief.

Is everyone on campus afraid of being ostracized because he does not agree with the current modes of thought? If you do not like the way something is being organized, why sit back and complain about it . . . you may be just the person to change the course taken in an activity, either extracurricular or academic. The pseudo-leader is worse off than even the timid follower.

Do not be afraid to stand out by yourself, even if everyone else appears to be against you. Quite often if one person can find the courage to admit that he is different, or feels differently regarding some matter, before long others learn that their freedom of dissent is not buried too far from the reaches of their own consciousness. Perhaps all along you felt that you were a follower, and that if ever you spoke out against some idea you would be laughed out of your "standing." Not so . . . many, many people may feel exactly as you do, only they have never gathered their courage to say so either. Many are probably looking for just such a voice as yours. This world is so big that everyone has a place to expand himself. And it is either self-expansion or be trampled under by that mass of people that call themselves individuals . . . cookie-cutter personalities.

If there was only one quality that we would be allowed to have, and all others were to be taken away, individuality would, and should, be the one that is kept. Individuality means truth and loyalty to oneself, and respect, both by yourself and by others. It is really so frightening to say and do what we actually mean, even at the risk of being questioned by others? What is more important, feeling clear on your own inside, or gaining false peer acceptance, which can lead to the loss of your own personality?

Please, please be yourself; this world just won't work if we cannot find and follow our own consciences. Individuality — the trait to find, conquer and, eventually lead.

Musical Tastes Vary; Variety Still Reigns

By GWYN MUSE

So you want to add a new dimension to your record collection? This is the year to do it. A hasty check of the local Ye Oldie Record Shoppe reveals a practically unlimited selection for all musical tastes, and if you're lucky enough to own a stereo tape recorder, you'll find many of your favorite recording artists on the tape cartridge.

Several years ago when folk music was the unchallenged king of the campus, folk groups such as Peter, Paul, and Mary and Ian and Sylvia rode high. Though they still rate, these and other folk groups have had to make way not only for other folk groups, but the hippies, the Liverpool groups, and the soul singers, to mention a few. The result is that where folk once reigned supreme, variety has proven to be the trite, but true, spice of life.

This year look ahead to the explosion of the Soul Scene, once considered stomping grounds for diddybops (as in high school, USA), but which has now found an eager audience in colleges from coast to coast. Here the Genius, Ray Charles, is big news, both for his comeback despite blindness and drug addiction, and for the unique Charles sound. In the Midwest (of all places), an R.C. cut is springing up, and there the thing to do is listen to Ray Charles' "Trotter Again." Also high in popularity is our friend, Mr. Otis (Redding), whose "Otis Blue" is doing big things. On the scene catch the Righteous Brothers for some "blue-eyed soul," and that once-in-a-lifetime product of the Apollo Theatre, James Brown. Chuck Jackson is another James Brown-type fellow to watch, and Jimmy Reed is still doing big things with his old but ever-popular "Jimmy Reed At Carnegie Hall." Everybody's going soul this year, and no exception is Junior Walker and the All-Stars, well-known for their swinging instrumentals. They've grooved their latest, "Soul Session." And that is it.

For the big-city set, there is jazz — cool, in the manner of Dave Brubeck, and hot, hot, hot, with the sensational comeback of a ten-years-ago favorite, Earl "Fatha" Hines. If the crowded, smoke-filled club with the blaring sax is your scene, hold on to your seat. Introducing Eric "Grease" does just that. He is a 16-year-old blind boy whose tenor and alto saxophones reveal a genuine jazz talent that would normally be expected from a person many years his senior — both in age and experience. Paul Desmond, considered by many to be the greatest on alto sax, is still swinging, as are his cohorts in the Brubeck Quartet. For dyed-in-the-wool fans, only "Ella At Duke's Place," featuring the combined talents of two jazz greats, Ella Fitzgerald and Duke Ellington.

Several years ago, Liverpool was handed to us on a broken disc by the Beatles. Since then a steady stream of the English beat has been flowing to our Yankee shores, and it seems there's no sign of it subsiding. The Beatles are back, as they have been again and again, but this time, in remarkably good taste. Their latest album, "Revolver," is quite a change from the usual Beatle-lure, and is actually enjoyable. The true-blue Mod will, of course, cling to the Rolling Stones, Animals, Kinks, etc., for her jollies.

You say you've run out of things to do at LCC? Let a very funny man, Bill Cosby, supply your grins. In any of his five albums, he'll entertain you with tidbits of everyday life turned inside out. Whether relating his experiences in the Temple-Hofstra football game, or giving some highly improbable thoughts on the Neanderthal man, Cosby will keep you in stitches.

Instrumentals are unlimited. From the smooth sound of the Henry Mancini orchestra as the master conducts his 148692 . . . hits to the south of the border offerings by Herb Albert and the Tijuana Brass, instrumentals come in all styles, and buyers never seem to play favorites. If you have no favorites, let me suggest the Brass in "What Now My Love?"

All right, Roy Drusky fans, you win. It's true. According to national polls of record sales, country and western music is on the rise again. Many feel this is due to the recent combining of "pop" and country by such artists as Roger Miller and B. J. Thomas. Miller, in the past three years has given a steady stream of rather off-beat tunes to which the public readily responded. If you must indulge, Roger Miller is your best bet, but no Flatt and Scruggs, please!

If free love, free speech, and free LSD is your style, then by all means catch your hero, Bob Dylan, in his two latest albums, "Rainy Day Women, 12 & 35," which contains the highly controversial song by the same name, and "Blonde on Blonde." If you dig protests, pot, and passion, this is Utopia — Dylan at his best. If you don't get the hairy life, may I suggest tripping down to the record store to read the back of the album jackets. Written by the Man Himself, these few paragraphs will give you some idea of just what Dylan is all about, though it may take you a while to figure him out. Though it rarely shows through, Bob Dylan does have a sensitive side; one cut from "Rainy Day Women," "Just Like A Woman" is unusually tender, and noted by the absence of the usual folk-rock back-up, Dylan fans, for the most part, the twangy harmonica is still there.

Oleg Cassini Says

By OLEG CASSINI

Well, chubbies, if seems that by resisting all temptations to lose weight, you may actually have scored a point or two. For one thing, fashion this fall is less cute, less knacky, less juvenile, and therefore of a kind more suited to the full form. You can probably fit yourself — all of yourself — into a cage dress or a tent or a little pyramid (does that sound like I'm describing you instead of the dress? Take off pounds!). And falling that, you will find other current styles available in the half-sizes, to make you less loathe to enter that department and ultimately to admit to yourself that that is the size you do or should wear.

The problem with half-sizes has been their frequent inability to keep up with the latest looks, and there are two good (or bad) reasons for this. First, it is after all a small (numerically) market, and therefore not a particularly attractive investment for businessmen who seek volume (their money, not your girls). The last one in the world to take pity on your plump is the American businessman.

But, from your point of view, an even more vital factor is the difficult nature of the clothes that are usually current. If, seeing through dresses with two or three sequin bands are the rage, if skin-tight little black shirts are in, if stretch pants and poor-boy sweaters are the look, there is little hope for lots of you — the you with lots. Those are just some of the many styles of clothes that simply cannot translate to half-sizes. And I realize that translating in any kind of lady-like way is not important. After all, they aren't lady-like when they are fashioned in size 8 either. But on the other hand you don't want to look repulsive — and that is the result of a fatty in the kind of body-displaying clothes that caught the public fancy so recently.

So you're in luck now, for fall has a goodly number of designs to actually enhance the largely undernewed lady. But the other side of that coin is that if you're happy in your new albeit large clothes, you will have less incentive to get out of that size range altogether. You will keep on eating the pasta and telling yourself that under a tent dress you all look the same. And that may be more or less true, but think of the pang of anguish you feel every time a skinny girl returns, or every time you have to go swimming, or you stand in front of a dressing-room mirror, or a saleslady says "What size, madam?" Or every time your male friend looks at someone else's pretty figure.

And then never mind that this particular season you can squeak by in clothes that at least you can survive in. Think ahead to that inevitable day when harsh reality supercedes comfortable inertia. Start thinking of yourself as fat. Throw away your euphemisms and call it a budge, a bulge. Facing up to it makes it easier to change to something else. And while you may never be lithe, a 14 sounds much better than a 48 — not to mention what it looks like.

So you see, as I started out saying, you're lucky this year, chubbies. You have the best possible alternatives facing you: shed those pounds or find a syle in your current size that actually flatters you. Not often does the clothing industry so bless you.

FASHION TIP

As skirts stay short, underpinnings continue to be a subject of major concern to women, and finally, to manufacturers. So while you may just now be finding a full selection of pantyhose, you are also finding some more audacious inspirations that are not only meant to be beneath your outfit, but perhaps also below. For instance, consider fancy pants — fancy petti-pants, that is. They are usually made of crepe, and the bottom part of the leg — the part most apt to show — is now decorated with ingenious and/or costly trim such as white mink cuff or black sequin bands. Surely there is no end to the possibilities.

Now when you climb out of a cab it really doesn't matter how high up your skirt has ridden. In fact, when no one is looking you might even encourage it a little. It's getting harder to remember when it was a little embarrassing and tacky for something white to be poking out from your skirt.

FASHION TIP

Do yourself a favor and try on those long bangle earrings before you buy them. There are countless pairs of pretty earrings decorating jewelry departments from coast to coast — and you cannot be sure which will look good on you until you wear them. The long bangle earring is not necessarily a good purchase for you, it has to be one whose color, length and shape flatter your face's color, length and shape. And if you should find, alas, that none of the big new earrings look terrific on you, forswear them. It isn't worth looking up-to-date if you also look less than your best. In fact, I would even say stick to your pearl button earrings if that makes you prettier. You're always wise to remember that cardinal Cassini rule of dress: look pretty rather than immediate.

While at Marshall University the first summer, Mr. Woodburn had the lead role in the play, "The American Dream" by Edward Albee.

His courses included such speech areas as radio, T. V., drama, public address, and speech correction in conjunction with play direction.

Mr. Woodburn commented, "This further work in the field of speech which involved twelve courses proved to be quite beneficial in may capacity as an instructor in speech at Longwood."

"Since the beginning of my graduate work in speech, it has become increasingly evident that the speech field itself is rapidly growing and is gaining greater recognition in the college curriculum."

Disease Causes 'Back-To-School Slump'; Researchers Developing Mono Cure

As millions of students return to classes, school and college physicians and nurses soon will be faced with long lines of young men and women complaining of feeling tired and listless and having other difficult-to-pin-down symptoms.

Some students will simply be suffering from laziness. But many others will have a legitimate reason for "back-to-school slump"—infectious mononucleosis—a common back-to-school disease which in the past has been more difficult to diagnose than to treat.

A theory that "mono" is transmitted by close personal contact has led college students to romantically call it the "kissing disease." Yet, when it strikes, infectious mononucleosis can be one of the most miserable experiences in a student's life. Recovery can be slow and every day lost from school can endanger marks and play havoc with education plans.

Now, experts have found that it can be an indicator of emotional stress. Recent studies conducted by the Tulane University School of Social Work in New Orleans revealed that high school and college students who were being treated for mono were momentarily depressed at the time they became ill. Thus, mono becomes a trigger for "slump-outs," an excuse for failing to repeat a year, a last straw for requesting medical excuses for postponement of examinations.

Mono Mimics Other Ailments
In addition, mono is also a serious problem because of its ability to mimic other ailments including appendicitis and hepatitis. One authority, in fact, reports that no fewer than 29 separate maladies can be mistaken for mono if diagnostic procedures are imprecise. These ailments may call for exploratory surgery to verify or potent drugs to treat, while the usual treatment of mono is three to six weeks' bed rest, aspirin and gargles.

Therefore, because of the possibility of a mono patient being subjected to the risk of being diagnosed and treated incorrectly, physicians have been searching for a quick and accurate test to confirm or rule out the disease. The Tulane study further indicates the need for early detection of the disease since postponement of needed bed rest adds to the stress and makes for emotional as well as physical complications.

This year, however, it will be less difficult for school health officials to tell whether a listless student is discouraged about his exams, malingering, seriously ill, or another victim of mono. Pharmaceutical research has come up with an important new development—the "Mono-Test"—a simple, inexpensive diagnostic test which quickly, and happily for the patient, reveals the presence of mono in only two minutes. Using the new test, physicians can now immediately order bed rest and spare the patient further diagnostic procedures and delay in treatment.

"Mono-Test" Uses Blood Test
With the new "Mono-Test" diagnostic blood-testing for mono becomes readily accessible.

"Mono-Test" is distributed by Wampole Laboratories of Stamford, Connecticut to individual medical groups and school and campus health centers as well as to hospital and laboratories.

"Mono-Test" is so simple that any medical technician can report immediate results in two minutes. It can be performed by a doctor in his office using only a glass slide, a blood sample from the patient and the control samples provided in the kit.

In addition, this new diagnostic test is inexpensive. To screen an entire school or university class costs only about one dollar per student. Before the introduction of the quick screening method it would have been almost unheard of to test a large number of students because conventional diagnostic techniques were too expensive and too time consuming.

U. Of Rhode Island Starts Grant Program For Undergraduates

A program to encourage research by undergraduate students is being established at the University of Rhode Island. As proposed by the Student Senate, 10 grants, worth $75 each, will be allocated from a student tax during the 1966-67 academic year.

Dr. Francis Horn, URI president, is a enthusiast about the program and has appointed four faculty members and four students to serve as the Undergraduate Research Committee and to implement the program.

Awards, in general, will be made for equipment, supplies, and transportation costs for two consecutive semesters. Renewals may be sought beyond this time. The research undertaking may or may not be for academic credit. To obtain assistance for a research project students will be required to submit a written proposal, including a budget. Every proposal must be endorsed by a faculty member and reviewed by the committee. At the completion of a project, the student will be obliged to submit a written report.

For the completely unorthodox album collector, here is a record which you can't afford to pass by. "An Historic Return/P.D.G. Bach at Carnegie Hall" is the second offering of Professor Schucke and his recently unearthed works of the "father of Johann Sebastian Bach's twenty-odd children." Of interest here is an oratorio, "The Seasonings," featuring the Okay Chorale and two duets, "Bide thy thyme," and "Summer is a cummin seed."

The serious types who snub P.D.G. will really go for this one: Senator Everett Dirksen, reading "Selected Passages from Historical Documents of the United States."

Upperclassmen Lack Class Hockey Spirit

What has happened to the Green and White and Red and White spirit? As of last Friday, only the Freshman Class had enough players out for their Class Hockey team. It will be impossible to have Class and Color Hockey if more people will not participate.

Due to loss of practices caused by rain, double practices are being held from 4 to 6 p.m. each day. Only eight general practices (two of which may be intraclass practices) are required. There is enough time to get these practices in, if you come out and support your Class now!

Come on Sophomores, Juniors and Seniors—don't let the Freshmen show you up. Get out on the hockey field tomorrow! Your class needs you!

Bonnie Jones, '66 Represents LC In Harvest Bowl

On September 23, 24 and 25, Miss Bonnie Jones, a Senior here, represented Longwood at the Harvest Festival, as Longwood's Harvest Festival princess. The 9th Annual Festival was held in Roanoke, with princesses from eight women's colleges in the state of Virginia participating. Those colleges are: Hollins, Sweet Briar, Mary Baldwin, Mary Washington, Randolph-Macon Women's, Madison, Radford and Longwood.

All the princesses arrived in Roanoke on Friday, and met their escorts for the week end, all of whom were seniors from Virginia Military Institute. Activities on Saturday included an honor brunch at Miller and Rhoads, at which time each princess was presented with a gold charm bracelet. Then came rehearsal for the presentation of the Harvest Bowl, in which VMI played the University of Georgia.

A parade, with Barry Sadler as Marshal, started at 6:00 p.m., and ended up at the Stadium. Here the girls, in white gowns, red capes and carrying red carnations, were presented. About 15,000 people were in attendance. A breakfast at the Roanoke Country Club, followed by a party, concluded the festivities.

Bonnie feels that the Harvest Festival was a wonderful experience, and something she will always look back on with fondness. "I really enjoyed meeting the people, and getting to know Roanoke," Bonnie will be student teaching there in her major, elementary education, during the second block.

Young Republicans Aid In Ould Campaign Rally

On Wednesday, October 5, at 8:00 p.m., James P. Ould, Jr., Republican candidate for the United States Senate, will speak at the Farmville Court House. The rally is sponsored by the Prince Edward County Republican Party with the assistance of the Young Republicans of Longwood College. Everyone is invited to come and hear Mr. Ould speak on his political positions and plans for a more effective representation of the people of Virginia in the national government. There will be a question and answer period following the speech at which time Mr. Ould will be happy to answer any questions the audience might have.

Born in Lynchburg, Virginia, Mr. Ould was educated in its public schools. In 1944 he was graduated, cum laude, from the University of Miami in Florida. After attending night law classes he passed the Virginia Bar in 1950. He is married and has three children ages 6, 8 and 10 years. Mr. Ould has been very active in the Republican Party, especially in the 1964 Goldwater campaign, and in various civic activities including the Lions Club, Jaycees and United Fund.

As a candidate for the Senate Mr. Ould is well qualified to take care of the interests of the people of Virginia. Young and experienced in matters of business management and budgeting he was elected to the Lynchburg City Council in 1962 and became its Mayor in 1964. He was the first Republican to hold these offices in over 100 years. His record of achievements in the guidance and administration of the city of Lynchburg shows his excellent ability to work with and for the people and to protect their interests. He is a member of the Virginia Bar although he does not practice law. For 22 years he has been a certified public accountant. As a CPA he is required to be very familiar with taxes, finance, accounting, budgeting, business management and administration.

Hughes, English Prof. Visits Europe On Trip

Hughes replied that they are still very proper and formal, leaning heavily on tradition, yet they are a gay, friendly people. From the conversations he held with them in the pubs, Mr. Hughes received the impression that they feel inferior to us because they are dependent on us. Britain no longer occupies the position of importance it once held, so the British are embittered about their state of affairs, yet gay because they do not have the responsibility which power requires. The greatest difference between the British and us is in their pace of life. It is more relaxed than ours; they live life the way they think it ought to be lived.

Mr. Hughes found the image of the "American tourist" a low one. The British do not particularly care for the tourist who runs through places they consider sacred, popping his flashbulbs haphazardly.

Mr. Hughes was also impressed by the lack of space there in Britain. He found many people wish to go elsewhere so they can have more room. London, he thought, was an extremely crowded city, but the British do provide numerous and beautiful parks and squares.

The French differed from the British. Paris itself was brighter and gayer than London and the city was planned far better. Mr. Hughes believes that the French often seem to merely tolerate us. They "give the impression of not liking us all the time simply because they respect our independent power and want to rival us." On the whole, Mr. Hughes believes that "the British and the Europeans do respect us," although they may not always give that impression.

Mr. Hughes plans to return to England and continue his travels where this trip stopped. On the next trip he hopes to visit the northern England, and cross into Scotland and Ireland, visiting other literary points of interest and listening to more dialect,

Two Senior Art Majors Spend Summer In Europe

By DOTTIE THURSTON

This past summer Diana Johnson and Debbie Hedley, two senior art majors from Longwood College, had the opportunity to tour Europe. They spent a total of ten weeks visiting the different European countries and world famous art museums. The girls began their trip with an Icelandic flight chartered through the National Student Association with about fifteen other Longwood girls. After an eighteen hour flight, the plane landed in Amsterdam where the girls spent the night at the student hotel. The next morning Diana and Debbie left the group to tour Europe on their own. Some of the places they visited included: Copenhagen, Denmark; West and East Berlin; Rome and Florence, Italy; Madrid, Spain; and London, England, just to name a few.

The girls had many interesting experiences while on their tour. While traveling in Scotland, they attended an art festival in one of the cities there. They also spent a few days on the Spanish Rivera, a favorite vacation spot of Europeans. While in London, the girls saw six top plays which ranged in price from 42 cents to one-dollar per performance. Also in England, the girls met two other Longwood girls and all four of them rented a car to visit Stonehenge and the gorgeous English countryside. As for lodging, throughout the tour the girls stayed in small towns in typically English homes who rented overnight to tourists.

According to Diana and Debbie, they had a very interesting and enjoyable summer tour of Europe. The food was delicious (especially the Italian), the scenery beautiful and most important, the people were very friendly to two traveling American girls.

Trip To Europe Marks Summer For LC Frosh

By LIBBA BALL

For some people, a once-in-a-lifetime trip to Europe is perhaps the greatest event in their lives; but for Joanna Newby, a freshman from Richmond, this summer marked the fourth time she has visited overseas.

"Our family left from New York on June 28, and returned September 7. While there, we stayed with my grandparents in Florence, Italy and returned Luxembourg, Paris, France; Rome, and Switzerland."

Joanna's uncle is a florentine jeweler, and she has many exquisite jewels from his shop, located on Ponte Vecchio, the world's oldest bridge.

"The jewellers in Florence, Italy are famous for their craftsmanship with silver and other malleable metals. This summer I was given a brooch pin and ring set in gold. It's one of my favorites."

"The people of Italy live in lovely marble homes with high ceilings. The rugs are chiefly oriental and the furniture is generally antique. Perhaps the most unusual thing about life in Florence is the fact that at every meal, wine is served. We had home-made cheeses, spaghetti, meats and vegetables with coffee and Italian bread at nearly all the meals except at breakfast. Italian people don't eat large breakfasts like we do, rather they eat lightly with cream or raisin bread."

"While in Florence, we saw the festival of St. John the Baptist, Florence's patron Saint. In the middle of the town square, there was a championship soccer game and souvenir shops surrounded the play-off. All the townspeople take part in this ceremony, and it's really a colorful event."

In France, Joanna went to the Riviera. "The boys there have just learned about surfing from the U. S. I never did go with any of them, but from what I observed, they need a lot more practice with their boards! The water in the Adriatic Sea is clear and deep blue. The waves are nearly nonexistent, and it's so salty it's bitter. The Mediterranean, on the other hand, is more suited for swimming except for the fact that the beaches are dangerous cliffs. On the Riviera, however, the teen agers get together and have beach parties at night, just like in Virginia.

"Paris never ceases to amaze me with its beauty and romantic elegance, but Luxembourg is next to Switzerland for local color and custom. The homes are castles, just as if from fairy book tales. The children speak German, French and Italian in grade school — which fits in to make this quaint country even more unique."

"Rome, on the other hand, is a huge metropolis. The drivers don't observe the traffic signals and are always impatiently beeping horns. They even cross over white and double lines! It's just too hectic to enjoy."

Venice is one of the most historic sites she saw. Her family had the opportunity to ride in a gondola. The city has no streets, just water-ways for traveling. Most of the native people prefer small motor boats, but tourists really enjoy gliding along on such a peaceful ride. While in Venice, Joanna's family visited St. Mark's Cathedral. As they approached the steps she noticed some pigeons. Well, as she states, "I had to buy some food, and before I realized what was happening — I was being followed by at least 50 hungry beasts. I wouldn't have been so upset except they started to perch on my shoulder and peek at me... and at church, too!"

"Aside from all the hectic experiences abroad, I did encounter one particularly humorous day while in Rome. There are some young men who idly stand on street corners and search out American tourists. These men are called 'pappagallos' and to draw the young girls' attention, they pinch them. One day I was walking along in Rome and I noticed this boy staring at me. Naturally I avoided him, but before I knew what was happening, I had been pinched and began to mutter, 'I am married' in Italian. This problem is so severe in Rome that many young touring girls buy gold bands and learn to say 'I'm engaged' in Italian!"

Judicial Board Releases Procedure For All Cases

1. An infraction is reported to a member of the board.
2. Informal investigation is held to determine if action should be taken by the board.
3. The girl is informed of her suspected offense and advised to seek counsel from within the student body.
4. There is a formal investigation during which all witnesses testify before the board.
5. The girl is given all of the evidence. Both she and her counsel are in the board room and they leave without making any statement.
6. Counsel and girl are given time to discuss the evidence and prepare the girl's testimony.
7. The girl and her counsel return to the board room at which time the girl gives her testimony. The board may then question the girl. Witnesses also may be questioned at this time.
8. The board discusses the evidence and decides whether or not to charge the girl. The chairman and vice-chairman then inform the girl and her counsel of the charge or of the dismissal of the case.
9. The girl and her counsel are brought back into the room. She is formally charged and answers guilty or not guilty.
10. The board talks to any witnesses that the girl has requested. If necessary the girl returns to the room for more questioning.
11. The board confers and makes its decision.
12. All decisions of suspension or expulsion must be approved by the administrative committee.

Sex as viewed from a predominantly woman's point of view has been presented by the YWCA. If you failed to attend the meeting today, this article is for you. Do you have definitely formulated ideas concerning premarital relations, illegitimate children and frank talks about sex with boys? If your attitudes are susceptible to discussion you should have made it a point to attend the YWCA meeting today. Sex from an entirely new approach has been discussed by the wife of a doctor.

Tobacco Festival Includes Two Longwood Princesses

Longwood will be well represented at the Tobacco Festival in Richmond this year, as Drama Wright, Miss Chesterfield, and Bette McKinney, Miss Charlotte County, take part in the festivities October 8-15.

Drama was crowned Miss Chesterfield last April 23, winning over fourteen other contestants. As her talent she played the piano, using "The Song Is You" by Jerome Kern, rearranged by Don Warner, Sr. Her prizes consisted of a trophy, and a $100 check. Prior to this title, Drama was first runner-up in the Miss Flame Contest, sponsored by the Bon Air-Southampton Volunteer Fire Department. Drama said that she was looking forward to the Tobacco Festival. "It will be a wonderful experience, and I am glad to have the opportunity." She added, "It will be a wonderful memory to have."

Bette received her title of Miss Charlotte County last April. She competed with nine other contestants. Bette played the guitar and sang folk songs for her talent. She was awarded $50 from the Randolph-Henry Parent-Teachers Association and a silver bowl. This was the first time that Bette had ever participated in such a contest. The only reason she entered was to get other girls interested in the contest. She expressed the hope that she will represent her county well. "It is so much to think about, to plan for."

The girls must be registered at the John Marshall Hotel by 10:00 A. M. Wednesday, October 12. That same day they will attend a Lions Club Luncheon and later go to the President's Reception. They will present their talents at this reception.

Thursday, there will be another luncheon, followed that night by the Mosque Show. Preceding a concert by the New Christy Minstrels, the princesses will be presented in formal attire. Friday night the princesses will take part in the Festival parade, with Edie Adams as Grand Marshall. Saturday afternoon there will be a football game in which V.P.I. will play Vanderbilt University. The climax of the Festival will come at half-time when the queen of the Tobacco Festival will be crowned.

The Tobacco Ball will take place Saturday night. The girls will be escorted by cadets from the V.P.I. Corps. Drama said she was looking forward to this, while Bette said she could not wait for it! The winner of the "Queen of Tobacco" title will receive a $1500 scholarship.

Fashion Switches '66 Mean Varied Changes In Lengths, Colors

The year has arrived when short skirts and tall spirits are not enough. That's boring — there is a need for new eye-catchers. Need for a big switch: The look is clean-cut, luxurious simplicity, unmistakably American. Inspiration: the American woman who was born to slide in and out of cars, switch her brand of soap or cigarette at an instant. This season the big eye-treats are polished, sleek, and quirky. Webster's Unabridged defines a "quirk" as "an individual knack," and it's not to be confused with a "hook." The kooky girl is decked out in her uniform and feels safe, but the time for uniforms has long passed. It's now time to think "quirky." Cuddly fur coats that have more going for them than merely being fur — wild, slick striped coats, skirts, anything — long, pale-pale legs (especially with short short skirts) — animal prints — G-r-r-r — Geo abstract designs scattered over the simplest, snazziest shapes. Pop art fashions are definitely on the Out.

Kinda like the year's take-over fashion. But they've got to be skimp and snazzy to be in. And hippies are really in — skinny, slithy, and buggy. The mini-skirts, no more than a wink, are fashion news this year.

The new looks are hopping with color and whoopingly patterned.

Of course Carnaby Street styles have managed to sneak upon the college scene — as everywhere else. That's where all the "dandies" get their "gear" — the striped, flowered, nouveau Edwardian shirts. And invariably a cool will turn up somewhere with a tie.

On campuses where fashions are supercool (that's like in degrees), that's where the Wild Things are — bunny, tripe, pseudo-graffie and even hamster furs are turning up.

It's a quirky year for fashions, so let your individuality and imagination run wild!

Geist Festival To Run October 28, 29; Offers Variety As Key To Weekend

On Friday, October 28, and Saturday, October 29, Geist presents the Geist Festival, a weekend of spirit and imagination. The Festival will include a variety of activities including sports events, art exhibits, booths, the color skits, and open house at the Panhellenic Dormitory.

Preceding the weekend highlights will be the announcement of the Barker on Wednesday, October 19. Usherettes will be presented in the Geist Festival assembly on Tuesday, October 25, and the 1966 Ringmaster will be revealed in "The Rotunda" on Wednesday, October 26. The Festival banquet will be on Thursday, October 27. The banquet, prepared by the Slater System, will be at 5:30 p.m. in the Dining Hall.

The skits by the red and green sister classes will be presented on Friday and Saturday, October 28 and 29, at 7:30 p.m. Outstanding class participants will be recognized on Friday and judges' ratings of each skit will be given at the end of Saturday's performance. The Ringmaster will preside at the productions. The Usherettes led by the Barker will entertain, and between the skits the Clowns will perform acrobatic feats.

On the 29th the Festival's activities will begin at 1:30 p.m. Entertainment and refreshment booths, sponsored by various organizations on the campus, will be set up in the back parking lot of the college for the afternoon. Each type of booth will be judged for decoration and originality. The winners will be announced at the skit performance on Saturday night.

Philakalia will present an art show for the afternoon on the circle behind Tabb Dormitory. Participation in the show will not be limited to Philakalia members only, and some of the art work will be for sale. Also at this time will be other art exhibits in the Library Exhibition Room and in Granger Building on the art hall.

The H2O Club's contribution to the Geist Festival will be a swimming exhibition. The performance will be held twice starting at 1:30.

Students will race for the privilege of hanging their class colors over particular dormitories. After the Rush the Varsity Hockey Second Team will play the Longwood College Alumni game.

During the afternoon Stubbs Dormitory will have open house. Everyone is invited to see Longwood's newest addition.

Support Coming Major-Minor Elections

In April of 1966 an important step was taken - one that would prove vital to the future of Longwood College. At that time the members of the Joan Circle of Alpha Kappa Gamma voted to dis-affiliate with National AKG and to petition to Mortar Board for membership. To be eligible for membership in Mortar Board, the only national society for senior women, a college must meet the following requirements:

1. There must be no other senior women's honor society on the petitioning campus; 2. The college must be accredited by the American Association of University Women; 3. There have been in the senior class of the petitioning institution an average of fifty (50) women over the past five (5) years; 4. A local honor society must have been organized for at least five (5) years with the consent of the administration in order to be considered for the granting of a charter of Mortar Board. With reference to this last requirement, Longwood College has been granted a special one year waiting period instead of the usual five years, and will be eligible for membership in Mortar Board in May of 1967. This shorter waiting period was a result of the invaluable service rendered by Alpha Kappa Gamma since its founding at Longwood in 1928 and its recognition of leadership and service in all phases of campus life.

The purposes of Mortar Board are much like those of Alpha Kappa Gamma, placing however a greater emphasis on scholarship, as membership in Mortar Board requires a grade average not below the over-all campus average plus ten per cent (10%) of the highest grade on the grade scale. Its purposes are: 1. To promote college loyalty; 2. To advance the spirit of service and fellowship among university women; 3. To promote and maintain a high standard of scholarship; 4. To recognize and encourage leadership; and 5. To stimulate a finer type of college woman. Located on campuses rated as first class by the American Association of University Women, there are one hundred seventeen chapters throughout the United States, with over forty thousand members. Mortar Board is located on three college campuses in Virginia - Mary Washington College, the College of William and Mary, and Westhampton College.

Longwood will not be eligible to affiliate with national Mortar Board until May of 1967 when a one year waiting period has expired. Those girls who were tapped into membership in Alpha Kappa Gamma last spring, with the help of Dean of Women, Miss Ruth B. Wilson, Assistant Dean of Women, Frances Brown and Dr. Carolyn Wells, have founded a local honor organization whose purpose shall be to recognize and encourage leadership and to foster high ideals of service and scholarship. This organization shall be known as "Geist," a German word signifying spirit, imagination, intelligence, and soul - those qualities which most exemplify the feelings and purposes of its members. Geist's activities will include the sponsoring of the Geist Festival on the 28th and 29th of October and sponsorship of Faculty Firesides and the Leadership Conference, with the addition of several activities in the spring. A Fall tapping ceremony will take place the evening of November 21st in Jarman Auditorium.

The members of Geist encourage your questions and comments concerning the new local organization and/or Longwood's future membership in Mortar Board. These members will be available Thursday evening, October 13th, from after dinner until 7:30 in the Student Lounge to further explain the purposes of Geist and to answer any questions. All interested students are urged to attend.

Players and Jongleurs prepare for tomorrow night's performance. "The Sandbox" and the "Menaechmi" will run October 13, 14 and 15.

L. C. - H. S. Opening Night To Present "Menaechmi"

The Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs are making the last minute preparations for their premiere performance for the first play of the season, tomorrow night, Thursday, October 13, at 7:30 p.m. The curtains will open on Edward Albee's "The Sandbox," a brief curtain raiser from the so-called theatre of the absurd.

The director, Dr. Lockwood, is being assisted by Courtney Fox - assistant director, Ellen Miller - stage manager, Loretta Prigler - technical director.

Stage crews under the direction of Mr. Meisness have completed the construction of the scenery for the Roman comedy the "Menaechmi," which will follow "The Sandbox," Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights in Jarman. The cast for this play includes a total of twelve male roles representing the largest male cast from any of the past few years. Judy Hendricks is the assistant director of this play.

Together with the excitement of the forthcoming performance, it was necessary for the director to recast the role of Menaechmi because of injuries Jim Kibbles received in an automobile accident. He was replaced by Warren Fulton.

Students are reminded to bring the tickets which were issued the day of registration; if each individual ticket is detached from the card it is void.

LC Professors Attend Various English Meetings

A Convention of the Virginia Association of Teachers of English is being held in Richmond, November 2-4. The theme of this convention is "Tomorrow Will Be Different."

On Friday, November 4, Dr. Sprague will speak before a morning assembly of teachers of reading and composition. Her topic will be "Golden Keys," taken from the poem, "Ballad of the Books," by Andrew Lang. The title of her lecture is based on the lines - "The Love of Books, the Golden Key, That Opens the Enchanted Door."

While Dr. Sprague is lecturing, Dr. Gresham will be attending an Executive Committee meeting of the VEA, holding the position of Executive Secretary.

Congratulations To Mr. Lawhorne

Earlier this week, President James H. Newman made the following statement concerning the appointment of Mr. Ronald G. Lawhorne to replace Mr. Jacob Wamsley as Business Manager and Treasurer of Longwood College:

"Longwood College is indeed fortunate to have Mr. Lawhorne succeed Mr. Wamsley as Business Manager and Treasurer. Mr. Lawhorne has been on the staff here for three years. He is thoroughly familiar with all the operations of the College, has been efficient and effective in performing his duties and responsibilities, and he has truly earned this promotion. We look forward to his continued loyal service to Longwood College."

Mr. Lawhorne, 32, joined the Longwood staff as an assistant to Mr. Wamsley in 1963 shortly after receiving a B.S. degree in business administration from Richmond Professional Institute.

We of "The Rotunda" staff want to extend our best wishes to Mr. Lawhorne in his new job here at Longwood.

Success Of Jarman Series Left To Us

Recently the administration and the student government embarked on a program here of Longwood that could possibly be one of the best innovations ever to hit our campus, and perhaps be just the thing to change our concepts on something here-to-fore rather disliked. The Jarman Series is coming to Longwood.

Assemblies have always created a problem here because, while some of the student body looked forward to them and thoroughly enjoyed them, others, remember looking on their approach with dread, and felt negative about them before they were even seated in the auditorium. But now we have the Jarman Series.

The Jarman Series deserves some explanation. It is a speaker program that will take place at night . . . no more "after lunch talks," when everyone is more ready to go to sleep than to listen attentively to a speaker. The Jarman Series has a more social aspect than a regular assembly. For instance, after this coming Jarman Series, on October 19, a coffee hour is planned; it is approaching the level of a lecture. The Jarman Series we find to be extremely valuable to the education of us all. Where are we actually supposed to learn about some of the more cultural aspects of this world if not from important visitors who are authorities on their subjects? Educationally, socially, and culturally the Jarman Series offers unlimited opportunities.

Attendance is optional for upperclassmen, however, if attendance is too poor, requirements will be re-set. We, the student body, by attending of our own choice will enjoy and get more out of the series, and thusly we will grow in knowledge. It is only when the requirements are set that the feeling of "rebellion" sets in, and attendance becomes a chore, not a privilege as it should be. We should understand, however, that required attendance will again be enforced if we do not take it on our own initiative to attend.

The Freshmen Class attendance will be required, as they will form a core for the audience. If the upperclassmen do not take advantage of this opportunity, and it is an opportunity, all will be required to go. It is really a shame not to go to a program that they are not required to go to are usually considerably better behaved, and more receptive, than those which feature compulsory attendance, and more can be gotten out of the speaker. Funny how we tend to be more critical if we are required to do something, and more liberal-minded when we do something because we want to do it.

So student body, we must leave the fate of the Jarman Series in your hands. A lot of time, and thought, and effort have gone into this new program, and everyone connected with it hopes it will be successful. We hope that everyone; students, faculty, and administration, will really take advantage of this program. The future really does depend on the response of us all. We can only ask that you support this program as much as possible; we will all benefit by it, but especially you, as an individual.

US College Students Discussing New Ideas

By PHYLLIS HUMMER

Between running frantically to classes, typing furiously on a typewriter, and frugging wild at a frat party, the American college student finds time to discuss some serious matters: Whether it be drugs, the Viet Nam crisis, the draft, homosexuality, or the "new morality." As we drift about in the naive world of crime and lace down South, a popular magazine, "for the smart young woman," fills us in as to what every body is talking about on campuses across the country.

Around L. C. trips are familiar to all of us — to Virginia, Tech, W&L, or wherever the road may beckon. However, at some schools, for some students, a "trip" has only one connotation: that being an LSD trip to provide a new discovery of self. Although there are laws against the use of LSD by nonscientists, the thrill-seekers and soul-searchers have no fear. There is indication that there will be increased use of newer, legal, psychedelic drugs. At the big school, in the big cities, with big names such as Berkeley, Chicago, Harvard — some students regularly and more or less openly take "trips" to expand their consciousness. On most campuses, drugs exist, but more quietly. At the University of Washington and San Diego State, students are concerned with LSD, but promote the legalized use of marijuana. Where the drug scene can escape from the campus is at some Bryn Mawr girls take "trips" to Haverford grounds. Where LSD and marijuana are hard to find, pep pills, diet pills, and other accessible drugs will suffice.

Everywhere across the country students are considering their relation to the real world. At Purdue, a flag burning protested American involvement in Viet Nam. At Stanford, where some support our Viet Nam policy, others question the criteria for student deferments of military obligation. They request that their administration refuse to provide grades and class-standing to local draft boards. Political feelings at the University of Chicago were displayed by students protesting the use of college facilities for the Selective Service exam. Fraternities at the University of Florida run candidates in the state Democratic primary races. At UCLA, students call for legalized abortions in California.

Although only eight per cent of all students involve themselves with real-world issues, specific campus problems concern students everywhere. Baylor students worry about decaying faculty-student relations.

Smith College will change from a five-course to a four-course schedule, and will eliminate all but a few departmental requirements. Sarah Lawrence girls may now get physical education credit for courses in judo and in flamenco dancing.

The current turmoil on campus is not ideological. At Purdue, women students demanded and won the abolition of all but freshman curfews, after Indiana University established the policy. There is a deep concern with moral issues and personal identity. The moral revolution on campus has extended beyond a liberalized attitude toward premarital sex, instances of student homosexuality have come increasingly under discussion. The prevailing attitude is to accept homosexuals, along with everyone else, as individuals and human beings. At most schools, the existentialist morality combines with an apparent revival of interest in religion. University of Washington students wonder if God is dead.

The word is "a-movin'" and the spoken word's current is directly beamed at current thought. In the days of the kooky, the kooky, and the kinetic, to be "straight" at Berkeley is to be square. At the University of Florida, a slow thinker is "spacy." At campuses across the country Maxwell Smart's "Would you believe?" is still around, but getting old. A "bagger" is the old Easterner's friend of a liberal. At Manhattanville College in New York, if one doesn't have time for something, it "doesn't fit the chant." If anything should "hit the fan," you know some cools have been blown.

At Smith College, "In Cold Blood" is required reading for American literature. At Vassar it is required reading for ordinary conversation. Flicks are popping up at campuses everywhere. The Bryn Mawr/Haverford film series features the experimental film, "Oh, Dem Watermelons," a film that explores all the possibilities of one watermelon. The message depends on what the watermelon means. At San Diego, student-made movies are starring on campus. San Diego's art theatre, the Unicorn, shows for its members midnight runnings of banned French films.

Stanford goes for ice cream — and good flavors like peanut butter and jelly or licorice. At Sarah Lawrence, Baskin-Robbins, the local ice-cream parlor, provides thirty-one flavors. At Reed College, the local ice-cream parlor, provides thirty-one flavors. At Reed College, the local ice-cream parlor, provides thirty-one flavors. At Reed College, the local ice-cream parlor, provides thirty-one flavors. At Reed College, the local ice-cream parlor, provides thirty-one flavors.

Oleg Cassini Says

AMERICAN TRIUMPHS

Ah, Paris, where I have spent so many happy hours and so much money. Paris, city of history and romance, of gay and gaudy glory, what has happened to your fashion industry?

The industry, of course, is still there, but where is the fashion, the inspiration, the occasional glow of genius that lighted up international horizons? Where is the confidence, the originality and the sure hand that made Paris the hauteist of coutures, the pacesetter and ideal for others of lesser skill or ego? Gone.

The signs are clear. The genius of Paris is, numerically, old. Who, for instance, will replace Balenciaga or Chanel? Who will carry on the grand traditions of extravagant and classic high fashion?

Those designers in Paris who are both young and successful are also exceedingly few. What they are succeeding at is not couture. It is a boutique kind of fashion that at its best is lively and young. But Paris is not its best — it isn't really lively and young there at all. It is actually a little stale. For while plastic discs may have originated there (a somewhat dubious distinction) on art in dresses is old hat in these American parts — and that, of all things, was to be considered a contribution from the glorious French this year. Their idea of being au courant with the young set was vinyl and cartoon art, both already seasons old in America.

And what other ideas emanated from France? Velvet and military epaulettes — hardly noteworthy no less newsworthy.

No, the fact is that fashion's foreseeable future lies on English speaking shores — and I might even go so far as to say American shores. The English may have already spent their thunder, for the Mod movement is waning and the miniskirts are coming tumbling down. And with the fast fade of Mod, the English haven't as yet come up with a new gimmick to fill the void.

Now in America there is more action than ever before, and the range is surely wide. There is couture (showing the same signs of age, decay, and declining interest as in the world over) and there is boutique — and it is in the boutique that our country is excelling. Not limited to plastic discs and well beyond comic strip art, our boutiques are popping up like gypsy tea rooms, wherever there is an empty store front and a kid who thinks he's a designer. And surprisingly, probably he is.

The beauty of boutiques is that they are virtually unlimited in their possibilities, so you can find boutiques that sell exclusively black and white clothes, or only fun furs, or only pants and culottes, or almost any other isolatable item that utilizes imagination and individualistic style. And of course there are the general types of boutiques whose goods range from really well-conceived clothes to vinyl dresses with do-it-yourself paint kits.

So as long as highly individualistic, casual, or sportswear clothes are popular, American boutiques can continue to lead the way. And perhaps, if Balenciaga's name had been Jones, and if Cardin were Conklin, the mystique of Paris holds for Americans might have worn off a little sooner. And then where would the glory that was France have gone?

FASHION MIRROR

Now that your mind is on winter and your thoughts are straying to a winter vacation (or so the cruisewear manufacturers would like to think), you might take a look at the latest of eye stoppers in swimwear, the abbreviated bikini (no, that is not a redundancy, as you will soon see). The bottom of this bikini is a mailot, but the top, ah, the top is a kind of a cross between a topless swimsuit and the top of an ordinary two-piece — a compromise, you might say. What is it? Two round circles of fabric with nothing connecting them to each other or to anything else. They're backless, shoulderless, strapless, and separated in the middle. A feat of modern science. A tribute to adhesives. Just two round circles of fabric to cover you where modesty demands.

Presumably the quest for the perfect suntan will lead you in this risky direction. Good luck.

FASHION TIP

With winter upon us, you'd better be certain you know what winter white is. To be sure, it is never easy to make pale rules about appropriateness, but the basic point about winter white is that color alone is no longer to determine a garment's usefulness. But that does not mean that any white dress is suitable in winter. When considering a white — or a pink or yellow or lime or powder blue — dress for winter, take into consideration first its fabric. Cotton can almost be ruled out entirely in the north. But wool, slubbed or textured fabrics, or any other heavy-appearing fabric would be more suitable. With silks it is almost a matter of instinct. Does the dress seem like a summer dress? If you even have to hesitate, it won't do comfortably for winter. So, be very careful when risking pastels. And watch the style too. A very flamboyant style or a very loosely casual one such as a dirndl skirt, may tend to make the dress appear summery, too.

Society Changes Name; Rules Become Rigid

By KAREN MAHER

Beorc Eh Thorn, the local honorary English society, has taken on a new face. Last Spring the society, sponsored by Mr. Herbert Blackwell, assistant professor of English, applied for admission into the International Honor Society, Lambda Iota Tau, which was founded in 1953. Beorc Eh Thorn hopes to be admitted to the International Honor Society sometime during this academic year.

Beorc Eh Thorn, formerly opened only to majors in English, will now be open to majors in other fields that relate to literature, such as French, Spanish, and other languages. Also, Beorc Th Thorn will acquire a new name. The membership requirements will be more rigid. Future members must submit a scholarly paper for admission besides having the required grade average.

The purpose of Beorc Eh Thorn, to encourage the appreciation of good literature and writing particularly by bringing speakers in the field of literature to the campus, will remain the same. The first speaker to come this year will be Russell Robbins, a Chaucerian scholar, who will speak on Friday, October 28 in the Student Lounge at 2:00 p.m.

Joining Lambda Iota Tau will have many advantages. Not only will it give the chapter on campus more importance because it is a chapter of an International organization, but it also will incorporate more people and the members will receive more privileges.

Longwood will be the first college in Virginia to have a Chapter of Lambda Iota Tau International Fraternity.

Visiting Scientist Leads Discussion At High Schools

By BONNIE KEARNEY

Dr. Carolyn Wells, a member of the Longwood Biology Department, will be a Visiting Scientist at Warwick High School in Newport News, Virginia, on Monday, October 24. Following the six discussion groups, Dr. Wells will have a discussion period with the teachers in this field.

Visiting Scientists are college professors or scientists in or near the state of Virginia who are selected by Virginia high schools to lead discussions on topics in the fields of biology, chemistry, earth sciences, mathematics, physics, or social sciences. This Visiting Scientists Program is sponsored by a grant from the National Science Foundation given to the Virginia Academy of Science for promoting this program in Virginia high schools for the 1966-67 school year. Longwood girls driving toward victory over Lynchburg College.

Varsity Hockey Team Brings Home Victories

Last Thursday, the Varsity Hockey Team boarded the Longwood bus and headed toward Lynchburg. There was much excitement and enthusiasm among the girls — they were finally going to play their first game of the 1966 season. Due to rain, the first 2 games were postponed, and if you happened to see a lot of girls with long faces walking around the campus, chances are they were the members of a very disappointed Hockey Team.

The faces brightened once again when the game with Lynchburg College started. Senior Captain, Pat Brown led L. C. to a 7 to 2 victory by scoring 4 goals. Anna Pettit drove in 2 goals and Peggy Wilkins scored another one. The second game was also won by Longwood. Jane Tibbs, alias the Hockey Queen, scored the only goal late in the second half of the game. It was an offensive game with most of it being played in the Lynchburg striking circle. The defense in both games was good, but not really up to par.

On Saturday, October 8, the team once again set out — their destination, William and Mary College. Upon arrival, the team was introduced to Yonnie Groe, left fullback of the United States 1 team, who came on the bus and wished the team "Good Luck" in their game with W & M. At 11 a.m., the U. S. 1 team played the U. S. Reserve team, with the U. S. 1 team winning 6 to 0. There was a large crowd on hand to see this excellent game of skills and stickwork. Captains from the various colleges served as ball girls for the U. S. teams. Dianne Davis represented Longwood.

At 1 p.m. the center bully between L. C. and W & M was taken, and after only a minute of play, a penalty bully was awarded to Longwood. Barbara Matthews, Freshman center forward, took the penalty bully with W & M's goalie and scored L. C.'s first point. From then on it was L. C. all the way! Barbara scored another goal, and Pat Brown drove one into the cage. The game ended with the score L. C. 3 and W & M 1. The halfbacks, Jean Hendricks, Dianne Davis, and Tommi Stone used some great stickwork, and fullbacks, Lynn Rachel and Cathy Hass (Vannie) made many beautiful tackles. Pat Lyddane also did a fine job as goalie. The rest of the front line had some great stops, passes, and drives, too.

The second game, won by L. C. with a score of 4 to 0, was also nicely played. This time Chris McDonnell and Jane Tibbs ac-

"Smiling" Major Heads Spotlight

By GINNY SIRC

"What's that?" Is the question most often asked by the girl in this week's spotlight. Does she possess curiosity? yes, and by now you're probably wondering who the spotlight is falling on. The answer is easy — senior Physical Education major Alberta Doran.

Alberta, a member of Delta Zeta social sorority, was a member of the Varsity Swim Team last year, and as a Corlette, participated in the watershow. She has also been active as a class sports manager and as a member of the class hockey, basketball, and volleyball teams. This year Alberta is one of the Senior representatives to the Athletic Association. Her student teaching will be done in Richmond during second semester. Have you decided to change your major, Alberta? Aren't you taking Data Processing? And what about that parallel reading 884 you've been doing?

ALBERTA DORAN

Some of Alberta's friends say that she is now majoring in week ends at N. C. State — isn't that where Tommy is? June is the month for graduation and weddings, and I hear that Alberta, will be doing Post Graduate work in Marriage and the Family. Alberta's winning smile will never be forgotten at L. C. We extend our Good Wishes to you, in your student teaching and in your "Post Graduate work," too!

Swimmers Meet At Westhampton; Swim Being Held

If you're interested in competitive swimming, you can still try out for the Varsity Swim Team. Another practice will be held tomorrow night from 9 to 9:45 p.m. The first varsity swim meet will be a tri meet with Westhampton and Averett at Westhampton some time in December. Try out for the team if you're interested; you can help Longwood come out on top!

Some members of the Corlettes have been chosen, but there will be a second run-off on Thursday night for one of the groups. The Corlettes is a synchronized swimming group under the direction of the H2O club. The Israel number from last year's watershow will once again be performed at the Circus midway on October 29.

Rec Swims are being held every Monday through Thursday nights from 10 to 11 p.m. If you'd just like to practice, or if you need help with a certain stroke or dive, there is always someone at the Rec Swims who can help you. Or, if you'd just like to get away from your studies and relax, come in and enjoy the water.

Slater Food System Conducts L C Survey

By IDA MAE SIMMONS

Mr. Pennock, director of the Longwood College Slater System, will conduct the Slater Food Preference Survey on Nov. 1. Slater is interested in the results of the Survey "to determine food likes and dislikes."

The Survey sheets will be distributed by hall presidents on Nov. 1. Students are asked to write comments on the backs of the surveys. While the Survey Questionnaires are sent to Philadelphia and Univac—graded, the Longwood College Dining Hall will note the comments. Slater also asks that participants in the Survey write their class and campus address on the sheets.

Computer-graded tests are common to all college students; therefore, the Survey will be easy to complete. Use a soft lead pencil, be sure to completely blacken the answer box, and erase completely any changed answers. The Survey consists of four different forms. Each student will complete one form.

Have you noticed fewer deserts of bread pudding? More entrees of veal cutlet? These changes are the result of the January, 1966 Surveys. Mr. Pennock noted that bread pudding was liked by only 46% of the student body. The Survey also pointed out inconsistencies: 88% of the students marked a liking for peach cobbler, but Mr. Pennock commented that much of the dessert is sent back to the kitchen. Other preferences were noted as follows:

- 46% liked Grits
- 44% liked Bran flakes
- 99% liked Doughnuts
- 98% liked Orange juice
- 94% liked Chicken noodle soup
- 60% liked Coltsage cheese
- 87% liked Pizzaburgers

- 98% liked Roast Turkey
- 90% liked Fried Shrimp
- 97% liked Fried chicken
- 99% liked Baked Idaho potato
- 50% liked Spinach
- 99% liked Soft rolls
- 92% liked Blueberry pie
- 94% liked Boston cream pie

Complete January 1966 Survey results will be posted on the Old Smoker bulletinboard. November results will be posted as soon as they are returned.

Below is a sample questionnaire to be distributed by the Slater System. All students are requested to fill in their responses so that the survey will be complete and accurate. The computer system makes recording and processing a relatively easy task, with results being distributed to ARA Slater School and College Services.

Historians Offer Award For Original Manuscript

Attention students of United States History! If you are interested in winning $1,500, The Organization of American Historians is offering its 1967 Frederick Turner Jackson Award for the student who submits the best manuscript on a study dealing with some part of American History. The purpose of this award is to encourage research in history, and to recognize those who are outstanding in the field.

Any United States History student is eligible to compete. The student submits a manuscript of approximately one-hundred thousand words before December 1, 1966. It will be judged for the preliminaries within six weeks and the student will receive either his manuscript or notification that it has been accepted for competition in the final round of the contest. A manuscript selected for the final round will be eligible for publication by the University of Kentucky Press. The final decision will be made by April, 1967, and winning manuscript will be published by the University of Kentucky Press.

counted for the 4 goals with 2 apiece. The defense also looked good and kept the ball nicely distributed throughout the game. The other forwards also had some nice passes in to those who scored the goals. There were many L. C. alumnae, faculty, students, and friends at W & M to cheer Longwood on to victory. Please come and support the team at its next home game. It will be with Madison on October 22 at 2 and 3 p.m.

Dr. Margaret Mead Begins Southern Lecture Series

By CAROLYN DAVIS

Lectures by The Institute of Southern Culture are coming to Longwood starting October 31 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Hall. "Pockets of Ethnic Cultures of the South" is the theme for the series.

Dr. Margaret Mead, Curator of Ethnology at the American Museum of Natural History, will begin the lectures. She will present her discussion on "World Wide Communication and Local Cultural Styles."

Programs will also be presented in February and April by other lecturers.

Established at Longwood College in 1956, the Institute of Southern Culture "promotes the study of traditional aspects of southern civilization through academic course work, special lectures, and through the publication of research in the field. The Institute is currently sponsoring a series of lectures by visiting scholars and members of the Longwood faculty. Course work on both undergraduate and graduate levels also provides a means for exchange of ideas about various aspects of Southern regionalism."

Course offerings by the College faculty will be presented both semesters. Dr. James M. Helms, associate professor of history and social sciences, will lecture the first semester on the "History of Virginia." "The South: Landscape and Folk Culture" will be the theme for the first semester lecture delivered by Mr. Harold K. Magnusson, assistant professor of geography and history.

Other lectures are scheduled for both the first and second semesters. A course in Southern history will be presented by Mr. L. Marshall Hall, Jr., assistant professor of history and social sciences. Dr. Charles F. Lane, chairman of the department of history and social sciences, will teach the course "Geography of Virginia."

Miss Virginia Bedford, head of the art department, is the chairman of the faculty committee for the Institute. Other committee members include Mr. Foster B. Crookshank, associate professor of English and acting chairman of the department; Mr. L. Marshall Hall, Jr.; and Mrs. Helen Savage, assistant professor of philosophy.

This year the Elections Committee is introducing a new way of conducting conferences. The conferences will be held in the small auditorium. Each candidate for a certain office will be presented separately, and the audience will be given a chance to question her for a specific length of time. It is hoped that this method will avoid some of the confusion of previous years and will be more convenient for all concerned.

Campaign headquarters is to be set up in the new downstairs smoker. Here will be located the petitions, the polls, and other election information. The decision to remove the polls, and the petitions from the Rotunda was prompted by consideration of the congestion now in the Rotunda and the growth of future classes at Longwood.

The Elections Committee urges each member of the student body to become acquainted with all of the candidates and to vote for the girl whom you feel can best represent your Student Government Association. Information concerning the candidates may be obtained from the petitions posted in the elections headquarters, from conferences or from the elections assembly. Any questions about elections procedures should be referred to the Elections Committee.

Art Department Proudly Hosts Various Exhibits

By CAROLYN DAVIS

"Our Neighbors Around the World" is the theme of the doll exhibit in the Lancaster Library. Mrs. Giffin's 301 art class is presenting the exhibit to represent "Peace For All." Constructed by the students, each doll represents a different country or a symbolic costume. A paper chain links the dolls together. A card is placed beside each doll telling the country's history and dress.

Granger Hall also has an art exhibit. The Junior School of the Art Institute of Chicago is presenting "Museum Impression." The work, presented by the Smithsonian Institute, is done by small children.

A famous sculptor's work is found in the Art Exhibit Room in the Lancaster Library. The sculpture exhibition is the work of Dean Carter, associate professor in the college of architecture at Virginia Polytechnical Institute.

Dean Carter, who lives in Blacksburg, Virginia, and teaches sculpture at VPI, studied at the Corcoran School of Art, American University where he received his Bachelor of Arts Degree, and Indiana University where he received his Master's Degree. In 1948 he traveled to Paris where he was a student of Zadkine.

A recent commission was a bronze screen for the Providence Building, Fairfax, Virginia. He designed and fabricated this screen in Venice, Italy.

Dean Carter can be seen at work in his studio in the color film "A World of Sculpture" which is produced by VPI. The film shows sculpture as found in nature and as man represents nature in his sculpture. It covers the five basic forms from which all sculpture is created.

Freshmen Class Elects Circus, Gov't Officers

By MARION BORISEVIC

The freshman class seems to be well represented by very capable and enthusiastic girls. These newly elected freshmen are: Jane Austin, Circus; Donna Slitrunk, Elections; Judy Turner, Athletic Association; Jeannie Kay and Rita Mathews, Legislative Board; and Betty Powell and Mary Lou Whitehead, Judicial Board.

Janice Austin was elected to represent her class for Circus on Tuesday night, September 27. Her enthusiasm for Circus, strangely enough, began on her first tour of Longwood during last year's Circus week-end. Janice explained it was then that she knew she just couldn't go anywhere else to college. The friendliness and enthusiasm of the student body there had sparked a desire in her to become a part of it. Janice was always involved in the activities at her high school, Woodrow Wilson in Portsmouth, Va. She was a member of many school organizations including the National Honor Society, the yearbook staff, the pep club and the cheerleading squad. Within a few weeks of her arrival at Longwood, Janice, aided by five other freshman enthusiasts, composed two new red and white songs: "Hey, look us over, we're red and white..." and the "F-R-E-S-H-I-M-A-N" letter song, the latter of which was sung at the red and white party. Janice stated that it takes more than a handful of people to make Circus a success; everyone must work together. She thinks that this year's freshmen have a lot of talent, and that with a little bit of hard work, they can help make this the BEST Circus ever!

Donna Slitrunk, also elected September 27, is the freshman representative to the Elections Committee. Donna, too, was extremely active in her high school, Princess Anne in Virginia Beach. Some of her many club memberships were: the newspaper staff, the student magazine, the National Honor Society, the pep club and the Tri-Hi-Y. Donna expressed her desire to work with the Election Committee in every way she can. In conclusion, Donna said that we should be aware of the importance of voting, and that she hopes everyone will participate in the upcoming elections.

Judy Turner, the new A.A. representative, graduated from Tunstall High in Danville, Va. She was the sports editor of her annual, played on an all-county basketball team, and was voted both "Outstanding Girl Athlete" and "Most Valuable Player." Judy, appropriately is a physical

Geist Names Greene As Barker For 66 Festival, October 28-29

The 1966 Barker for the Geist Festival is Miss Marilyn Greene. As Barker, Marilyn will lead the usherettes during the Color skit presentation of the Geist Festival on Friday and Saturday, October 28 and 29. She will be on hand Saturday afternoon of the Festival along with the usherettes to run the Geist Information Booth.

An enthusiastic sophomore, Green and White, Marilyn is very interested in Longwood's activities. She was on the script committee for Circus 1965, is circulation manager for the "Gyre," and participated in Freshman Production. She was on Legislative Board last year and is a member of the major-minor elections committee. She has played class basketball, badminton and volleyball. Marilyn is a member of Alpha Sigma Tau sorority.

From Colonial Heights, Marilyn is a Sociology and History major. She was speechless when told she would be the Geist Festival Barker, but she is talking excitedly now!

Young Repubs Render Support To County Party

An eager group of Young Republicans are devoting their time this week to aid the Prince Edward County Republican Party in collecting funds for the current congressional and Congressional campaigns. The girls, all students at Longwood College, will be calling on homes and businesses in the Farmville area on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, October 18-20. The con-

Scurried Activity Seeks Swingin' Junior Weekend

By CHRIS DIXON

Plans for the Junior week-end are underway. A sneak preview of the festivities finds scurried activity within the Junior class. Committee chairmen have been selected and are now forming their committees. Any Juniors interested in helping are urged to contact the following people: Alice Collier, Decorations Chairman; Susan Barwick, Favors Chairman; Joette Bailey, Publicity Chairman; Ella McDade, Flowers Chairman; Kay Boykin, Breakfast Chairman; Jeannine Overman, Ring Figure Chairman; Martha Mullins, Dance Invitations Chairman; Frances Scott, Dance Programs Chairman; Phyllis Hummer, Tickets Chairman; Kathy Kamps, Refreshment Chairman; Barbara Hooper, Gifts Chairman; Alice Rennie, Photographer Chairman; and Judy Johnston, Combo Chairman.

The week-end of February 17th and 18th has been selected by the Junior class. However, this week-end may be changed after confirmation dates have been received from a concert group. Concert groups under consideration are "The Miracles," "The Temptations," and "The Swingin' Medallions."

For the ring dance, Saturday night, the VMI Commanders, Divots, and Royal Kings are being considered.

Dr. Helms and Dr. Wells have been very helpful in writing, phoning, and contacting the various groups.

This year the Juniors are introducing a new phase to the traditional week-end. Tentative arrangements have been made for an informal dance Friday night. A dance band (perhaps "The Esports") will supply rock and roll entertainment. The old gym is a possible location for the dance. Still in the planning stages, this Friday night dance could set the mood for the Junior week-end.

The Tired American

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This week I planned to write an editorial concerning the feelings we, as Americans, should have concerning our country, and the manner and degree to which we support it. I found the following editorial all too aptly expresses my feelings on the subject. In very effective wording and phrasing. I can do no more than to re-print it, and hope that all of us reading it will sincerely digest its meaning.)

The following editorial by Alan McIntosh, which recently appeared in the Rock County Herald, Luverne, Minn., reflects the feelings that many — and perhaps most — Americans have about current conditions and attitudes.

I AM A TIRED AMERICAN. I am tired of being called the ugly American. I'm tired of having the world panhandlers use my country as a whipping boy 365 days a year.

I am a tired American — weary of having American embassies and information centers stoned, burned, and sacked by mobs operating under orders from dictators who preach peace and breed conflict.

I am a tired American — weary of being lectured by Gen. de Gaulle (who never won a battle) who poses as a second Jehovah in righteousness and wisdom.

I am a tired American — weary of Nasser and all the other blood-sucking leeches who bleed Uncle Sam white and kick him on the shins and yank his beard if he flow falters.

I am a tired American — weary of the beatniks who say they should have the right to determine what laws of the land they are willing to obey.

I am a tired American — fed up with the mobs of scabby faced, long-haired youths and short-haired girls who claim they represent the "new wave" of America and who sneer at the old-fashioned virtues of honesty, integrity, and morality on which America grew to greatness.

I am a tired American — weary unto death of having my tax dollars go to dictators who play both sides against the middle with threats of what will happen if we cut off the golden stream of dollars.

I am a tired American — who is tired of supporting families who haven't known any other source of income other than government relief checks for three generations.

I AM A TIRED AMERICAN — who is getting madder by the minute at the fifth peddlers who have launched Americans in an obscenity race — who try to tout on us the belief that filth is an integral part of culture — in the arts, the movies, literature, the stage.

I am a tired American — weary of the bearded bums who tramp the picket lines and the sit-ins — who prefer Chinese Communism to capitalism — who see no evil in Castro, but sneer at President Johnson as a threat to peace.

I am a tired American — who has lost all patience with the civil rights group which is showing propaganda movies on college campuses from coast to coast. Movies denouncing the United States. Movies made in Communist China.

I am a tired American — sickened by the slack-jawed bigots who wrap themselves in bedsheets in the dead of night and roam the countryside looking for innocent victims.

I am a tired American — who dislikes clergymen who have made a career out of integration causes, yet send their children to private schools.

I AM A TIRED AMERICAN — who resents those who try to peddle the belief in schools and colleges that capitalism is a dirty word and that free enterprise and private initiative are only synonyms for greed.

They say they hate capitalism, but they are always right at the head of the line demanding their share of the American way of life.

I am a tired American — real tired of those who are trying to sell me the belief that America is not the greatest nation in all the world — a generous-hearted nation — a nation dedicated to the policy of trying to help the "have nots" achieve some of the good things that our system of free enterprise brought about.

I am an American who gets a lump in his throat when he hears the "Star-Spangled Banner" and who holds back tears when he hears those chilling high notes of the brassy trumpets when Old Glory reaches the top of the flagpole.

I am a tired American — who thanks a merciful Lord that he was so lucky to be born an American citizen — a nation under God, truly with mercy and justice for all.

Happiness-Misery Kick Pervades LC Campus

By PHYLLIS HUMMER

"Happiness Is A Warm Puppy" was introduced a few years ago by Charles M. Schultz, creator of the "Peanuts" comic series. "Mad" magazine retorted with "Misery Is A Cold Hot Dog." Ever since then, this Happiness-Misery kick has pervaded the country. Now "The Rotunda" would like to express its feelings on the matter:

Happiness is the dining-hall mike working just once.

Misery is an ice-cold shower.

Happiness is a BIG WEEKEND (and a date).

Misery is braised liver.

Happiness is peanut-butter and jelly.

Misery is failing a P.E. course.

Happiness is being "in."

Misery is being "Out."

Happiness is a pleasant roommate.

Misery is rain, rain, rain.

Happiness is Dionne Warwick.

Misery is a phone that never rings.

Happiness is wearing "casuals" to the library.

Misery is having a lover's quarrel.

Happiness is a "pink slip" that is filled out.

Misery is no money.

Happiness is being pinned.

Misery is L. C. on the week end.

Happiness is getting an "A" on a test.

Misery is "The Rotunda" office on Sunday evenings.

Happiness is Ian Fleming, J.D. Salinger, e.e. cummings.

A Critical Look

We can swallow so much, but then no more can be taken. The time has come to take up arms and arise against what we believe is wrong, wrong. Let's take a critical look at this business called circus and/or the new sophisticated term "Geist." Changing tradition is a wonderful idea, but we feel that AKG has taken too much power into its own hands and assumed authority which it does not possess. A rehearsal of the "mickey mouse" (an overused phrase, but so fitting) proceedings of circus has long been overdue, but we wonder if the so-called "sophistication" of the Geist festival is such an improvement. "Geist" - A German word signifying spirit, imagination, intelligence, and soul! Impressive, isn't it, but rather incongruous with the scene of fellow classmates coveting in their highly outlandish costumes. Think about it — actually the word conjures up thought of Lowenbrau and German frauleins!

We feel that if a census was taken not only would circus and Geist be discredited by the students, but also that they would be expressing sentiments which were indeed not new, but continually suppressed for fear of "the group." More important, if the ENTIRE student body was consulted a solution which would please the MAJORITY could be reached.

Consult your calendar of events for the year. Do you notice any mixers? Look closely. The only week-end which offer enjoyable entertainment for dates are the Collegues concert and the junior ring dance. No wonder there is an exodus each week-end! Circus or Geist is supposed to be the week-end of the year. Why not make it that way? Do you really enjoy parading around in costumes which seem to have been dragged from your grandmother's school treasure box? We rather doubt it.

What can be done? There are many obvious solutions and undoubtedly if the student body was consulted many more would be forthcoming. Radford College is a case in point. The girls combine spirit and imagination as well as a more mature outlook for their Carnival week-end. Each dance chooses a girl to run for carnival queen. The girl whose dream raises the most money is chosen queen. The money is raised by charging callers 10c to have their dates called, 25c to arrange dates (a great way to meet people), bake sales, combo parties, midways, etc. Sounds like fun? It is! Certainly with the talent here at LC our "week-end" of the year could far surpass this. Perhaps now through the student body is thoroughly disgusted with any thoughts of such a week-end. Is it time for a complete change? What about a Christmas party, Valentine ball, southern belle dance, Easter week-end — the possibilities are endless.

We are not trying to unjustly criticize AKG. However, we feel that their undoubtedly well-meant gift of Geist is the work of a minority on campus and is not in the interest of the LC students. If they are true leaders then hopefully they will initiate the needed changes.

We rest our case.

Oleg Cassini Says

Wigs When Art and Nature Fall

I may be old-fashioned about some things—for instance I like beautiful women and even pretty girls, and at least a clue to the shape of a clothed woman. But I'm rather free-thinking about others. For instance, wigs.

In my wanderings I have heard men, and even women, complain that the artificiality of wigs bothers them, that wigs are exaggeratedly coarse or silky to the touch, that one must be too careful in order to avoid its dislocation, and that too many natural-looking mistakes can be hidden by wigs—in other words, a man doesn't really know what he's getting. And inevitably, that they cost too much.

Now I am fully prepared to debate these points — each but the last one which is, alas, often true. Good wigs are expensive when compared with, say, a bottle of liqueur. But when you consider the length of time it takes to grow wig-lengths of human hair, when you consider the sanitizing processes, the forming and blending of an excellent wig, it really isn't costly, relative to its worth. And naturally as the various synthetic wigs improve, the cost of wiggling will be decreased accordingly.

But conscience compels me to remind you, if costs are a factor to you, that the mere purchase of a wig doesn't end your cash output. Because you own a wig, you immediately have two coiffures to be responsible for: yours and its. If you usually do your own hair, then you're no doubt skilful enough to handle the wig hair as well. But if you're tired by vanity or ineptitude to a hairdresser, consider that there are now two of you in that costly and nerve-wracking state.

So much for the negative aspect. For the rest, the wig picture is downright glorious. You have to have it washed and set now and then but no woman is as carefree about social events, spontaneous or otherwise, as the woman who doesn't have to give a thought to the way her hair looks at that moment. The simple fact of a stand-by — and doubtless superior — coiffure brightens her outlook and shortens her party-dressing time, often by hours that seem like days. Imagine what it would feel like to bathe, make up, put on your clothes and then merely don your readied wig. Instant glamour! And consider the money you saved by not having had your own hair done for the occasion—the other side of the wig-expenditure coin.

Which leads to the next point. It is very hard for women with short, boyish or pixie haircuts to look suitably formal at elegant affairs. A wig, however, allows you to wear your hair short as a queen for hours. It also allows you to change your hair color safely and painlessly, if you're an intrepid and fun-loving soul.

Wigs made of human hair are no more coarse or silky than the natural hair from which they are made. He may not like your real hair either.

And as for the men who worry about what they're really getting, I have little sympathy. If a plain girl can win clever tricks by carrying a pretty girl, good hair, and who cares if she was born with straight brown hair and a bumpy nose? That is what glamour is all about.

Besides, for masculine purists, nothing will ever be so deceptive as padded bras until the ladies take to wearing real face masks.

Fashion Mirror

The jauntily gored skirt in the form of the princess dress is making the youthful scene these days — again. Youthful because if you're anything more than lithe and shapely, forget it. It is too fitted through the bodice, even if gently done, for a woman with a bulging tire or roll at the waist. But if you are slender as a reed or lithe and curvaceous, it is a lovely style. The freely swinging skirt is comfortable for walking, sitting and other normal activities that tight skirts inhibit. Yet the more fitted top is feminine and flattering because it elongates your torso due to the absence of a seamed waistline.

A word of caution: unless tailored in an unusual way, or duly adapted, the princess line is very young and should be scrutinized carefully on you before you indulge yourself. There is no room for self-delusion with a dress of this sort; it is too tight.

Fashion Tip

For those of you wearing pants suits or eyeing them desirously, don't forget that your commitment to it doesn't stop when you buy it. It must be accessorized, particularly with regard to a pocket.

LC Breakfast Decries

"Traumatic Experience"

Dear Editor,

It is 8:00 in the morning, and I have already had a very traumatic experience. I made a mistake which may change my mental health forever, however, my state of instability might be satiated if I feel my experience can help others. I ate breakfast this morning. Yes, I am sure I did — indigestion has already set in. My going this morning reassured me that my previous, too frequent visits to breakfast were not illusions. No one in the dining hall likes me, everybody hates me. I'm going out to dip worms...

This is an appeal in hopes someone will attempt to revive my few remaining pieces of severed ego. Has anyone else been forbidden to use silverware from another table, condemned for eating at a (Bless them!) closed table, or considered a hoodlum for having the audacity to take even one morsel more of food after that cursed second bell. Must I always sit through my eight o'clocks with the hiccupps! Will I condition myself to eat full course meals in 62

Longwood Defeats Westhampton; Hockeyettes Capture 3-0 Victory

By LESLIE SEDGWICK

On Saturday, October 15, L.C. traveled to Westhampton College for their fifth hockey game of the season. The sun shone brightly, and rather warmly, on the beautiful field as blue and red uniformed figures clashed sticks.

The first game started almost in a slow-motion fashion. Although most of the time was spent in the home team's striking circle, Westhampton came back with the ball and gained the advantage with a score in the last five minutes. The half ended with W.C. ahead, 1-0. But L.C. was not to be outdone. The second half was a little faster and L.C. began to cut more for the ball. The outstanding defensive player was Jean Hendricks as she kept fighting for the ball and many times carried it to the striking circle. Halfway through the second half, Barbara Matthews scored the only L.C. point. The final score was 1-1, and because a tie is neither a win nor a loss, L.C. remained undefeated.

The second game was a bit different, with a lot more hustling and cutting. Pat Ingram was having her day. She was the force behind the offense as she dodged and carried the ball to the striking circle. She dodged and passed to her wing, Judy Nevitt, who in turn, pushed the ball in to score. Westhampton occasionally visited the L.C. cage, but futility formed, the goalkeeper, kept most invaders out. Again, Pat Ingram carried the ball down the field and passed across to Jane Tibbs. As Jane hit the ball, the goalkeeper rejected it, but Jane kept her stick down and the ball went in. At halftime L.C. was ahead, 2-0.

The second half saw a change in weather as the sun was veiled by clouds and a cool breeze came over the field. W.C. was perked up. The ball was at both ends equally but neither side could score. Only until the last few minutes does L.C. score again, thanks to Judy Nevitt. The score was 3-0, with a minute to go, and W.C. dashed down the field in an attempt to get on the score board but time gave out. Three to nothing was the final score and the second team also remained undefeated.

You will surely notice that if she is carrying an ordinary handbag it looks awkward—or at least peculiar in a way that you might not have been able to put your finger on. ## LC Welcomes RPI Hockey Team Home Team Wins 11-0, 12-0

As the crowd gathered Wednesday, Oct. 12, Longwood's Hockey Team made ready to play host to R.P.I. The games were held at 4 to 5 p.m. on Barlow Field as students and faculty alike rooted Longwood on to victory.

The first game started slowly as 11 me and time again L.C. would be in their striking circle only to have it hit out. However by the end of the first half, Peggy Wilkins and Barbara Matthews had scored, 3 and 2 goals respectively.

Bang! The second half sparked up. Anna Pettis, Pat Brown and Barbara Matthews scored 2 goals each. Diane Davis, center half-back, attempted to have her name in the scoring circle but the goal was called back because of a foul. The final score was 11-0. It might have been higher if it had not been for the good defense of R.P.I. This was their first team in many years and they showed that they should be watched in the future.

The second game, however, got off to a faster start. In a matter of minutes L.C. broke through and Jane Tibbs scored and scored, six times. R.P.I. came back with spurts toward our cage but lost the ball to our fullbacks who sent it back up the field. Sally Heilman took control of the situation as well as the ball and carried it to their striking circle. Twice she scored. But time gave out for the half and the girls came to the benches for halftime huddles.

The pace had its effect on L.C. The forwards spent practically the whole time in the opposite striking circle but just could not get the ball in. But Nancy Maxey scored and the team awoke. Chris McDonnell spurred ahead and scored two more goals. With minutes to go word was passed along the sideline that the record for the most points scored in one game was 11. One more point would make a new record. Tension grew as the team was at the cage again and again with no score. With a minute to go cheers rang out as Nancy Maxey pushed the ball in for number 12. Thus the game ended.

SHARON WILLIAMS

Williams Visiting Pumpkin's Patch

By GINNY SIRC

Have you visited The Great Pumpkin's patch lately? There's evidence in Sharon Williams' room that proves she has been there recently. Did you say that you're making pumpkin pies for Thanksgiving?

Sharon, who actively participates in other things besides pumpkin collecting, is one of the Senior Class representatives to the Athletic Association. She has played class hockey,Varsity basketball and tennis, and last year was also a manager of the Varsity basketball team. At the A. Banquet, Sharon was presented with a white blazer. I understand that the blazer is kept in a air tight plastic bag, and that she won't let anyone come within 10 feet of it! Sharon will be working in the A. booth at the Circus midway. She also worked on the sports staff of "The Rotunda" during her Sophomore year.

Sharon is also enrolled in the Data Processing class and is quite enthusiastic about the textbook, "The Principles of Punched Cards." As a matter of fact, she is quite keen in the business world and is currently involved in planning a money-making project for the Thanksgiving holidays. Watch for her latest book, "Ten Easy Ways to Become a Millionaire!"

Second block will find Sharon student teaching in Henrico County. She has very definite ideas concerning the qualities a good Physical Education teacher should possess, and she is also interested in student-teacher relationships. Although she can make any situation hilariously funny, she takes her major seriously. She keeps telling everyone that she's getting a B.S. degree AND an A.P. degree!

You can always tell Sharon by her laugh. It seems to come from nowhere and then just as suddenly, it disappears, or by her hair, it doesn't curl-it just bends! She's always late for classes and is famous for not going to breakfast. Would you believe a night-owl? She also is constantly waging a battle with the "Green Pizzas!"

Sharon, we wish you the very best and know that success as a teacher of Physical Education will be yours. Good Luck!

Juniors Order Rings

Juniors are ordering class rings next week from Jowson Jeweler's Company. Mr. Charles J. Mott will be on campus next Wednesday and Thursday, October 26th and 27th. He will be taking orders in the South Cunningham Cypress Room from 9-12 and 1-5.

Juniors with last names beginning with letters A to M will order on Wednesday. On Thursday, Juniors with last names beginning with letters N to Z will order their rings.

A new "pinkie" ring has been added to the class ring selections. This ring will be scaled to fit the little finger. Mr. Mott is bringing a sample of this ring with him.

The cost of the 10 kt. class ring will be $20.25. A $10.00 deposit will be required on all orders. Additional charges will be added to 14 kt. and white gold rings.

Each Junior will have 3 initials engraved in her ring at no charge. Any additional letters or initials (such as B. S. '68) will cost an additional $.95 each.

Items are to be back before February 10th, just in time for the Junior Week-end festivities.

Corkettes Hold Tryouts; 66-67 Members Selected

"The Rotunda" extends congratulations to the following girls: Susan Tarrant, Barbara Carr, Becky Hinds, Judy Pettit, Ann Crippler, Candee Dickman, Dale Grigg, Susan Guild, Marshi Gussallias, Bonnie Laminson, Janet May, Georgia Mayo, Diane Schools, Vicki Smith, Lyn Snyder and Nita Stogdale.

Recently chosen as new members of the Corkettes, the above girls were judged on their ability to swim to music and to swim with other members of the group. They were also required to perform certain stunts specified by H2O Club members. Potential as well as present ability was considered by the judges. The new Corkettes will be participating in the water show which is scheduled for March. We will be looking forward to seeing the new members in action and also those girls who put on that fabulous show last year!

If anyone is interested in learning stunts or getting training in synchronized swimming, the H2O Club members will be happy to give any assistance they can at Rec. Swims.

Student Questions Breakfast Service

The following proposal must have many holes in it because someone has to have thought of it before now, but my frustrated appetite insists that I at least expose my idea:

1. Breakfast will last from 7:00 a.m. to 9:20 a.m. every morning except Sunday.
2. Each student will get her silverware in the same line and at the same time that she gets her food.
3. Upon finishing breakfast (in a leisurely lady-like manner) each student must take her used dishes, glasses, and utensils to the window. Trash should be put in trash cans provided for.
4. Waitresses (for whom I have sincere sympathy) should be responsible for having tables set up in time for lunch.

These propositions could solve so many petty problems for everyone. Those girls not having an eight o'clock class might seriously consider eating breakfast if the time were extended, and all of us could exercise responsibility given us in elementary school. I think we could do it.

The only fallacy I can foresee is the problem the dining hall staff may have washing the dishes in time for lunch. If this is the only problem, there has to be a solution.

Absence makes the heart grow fonder? Lack of breakfast gives me hunger!

Lancaster Library Sculpture Exhibit

The first major art presentation of the year at Longwood College features the warm and graceful sculpture of Dean Carter, an accomplished Virginia artist and sculptor whose works enjoy wide acceptance in both amateur and professional art circles.

Sponsored by the Longwood Art Department, Mr. Carter's sculpture exhibit will be shown until October 31 on a schedule of: 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. Mon. thru Fri., 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sat., and 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Sun.

The sculpture exhibit, consisting of 28 works in bronze, welded steel, and varied woods, will remain on display until October 31 in the exhibition room at the Dabney Lancaster Library.

An exhibit in which "Woman" is the dominant theme, the artist's sculpture is characterized by carefully worked surface finishes in which there is emphasis on linear quality and flowing transitions of the planes. His bronze forms vary in treatment from small sketches to subtly handled larger sculpture.

Featuring such titles as "The Bathing," "Portraits," "Woman with Dove," "Madonna," and "Floating Figure," the exhibit demonstrates in varied media Carter's distinguished craftsmanship in depicting the delicate beauty of the feminine form.

A teacher at Virginia Polytechnic Institute with the rank of associate professor in the college of architecture, the North Carolina native has exhibited widely and won numerous prizes for his works.

Young Republicans

Contributions will be shown in the campaigns of Congressman Watt Abbott and Senatorial candidate James P. Ould, Jr.

Mr. Ould, a native of Lynchburg, was elected to that city's City Council in 1962 and took office as mayor in 1964. Mr. Ould's 22 years' experience as a certified public accountant has made him familiar with taxes, budgeting, and business administration and management. Aside from his position as a CPA he is a member of the Virginia Bar, Congressman Abbott, from the Fourth District, has 18 years' experience as a House Representative, thus giving him advantageous seniority. He now has a set on two House committees and the chairmanship of a subcommittee.

Anyone wishing to contribute may send his contribution to Young Republican Club, c/o Dr. James M. Helms, Longwood College, Farmville, Virginia or give it to any member of the Longwood College Young Republican Club.

Michele Reynoud, Native Of Paris, Teaches At L. C.

By KAREN MAHER

Miss Michele Reynoud, the new French Literature instructor at Longwood, is a native of Paris, France. She is here as a participant in the Fulbright Program, which sponsors the foreign exchange of teachers. Miss Reynoud applied to the program and requested location in the southern part of the United States. She received a notice saying that there was a position open for a French literature teacher at Longwood College in Farmville, Virginia. Miss Reynoud said that she found a map of Virginia and tried to locate Farmville. As Farmville is very small, it took her some time before she was able to find it.

Miss Reynoud specialized in French and French Literature at the Sorbonne. She also took some English courses. Before coming to the United States, Miss Reynoud taught French Literature and some beginners' English courses on a high school level.

Mlle. Michele Reynoud

Miss Reynoud explained that the relationship between teachers and students in the United States is more informal than the relationship between teacher and students in France. She also said that in France no one would ever dream of classes with only six students. She added that American students seemed more disciplined and more willing, but she would be better able to tell if this is true at the end of the year.

As for Longwood, Miss Reynoud thinks that a small college is nice. The people are friendly, and it makes adjustments easier because everyone knows everybody else. At her high school in France, it would be more difficult for a foreigner to adjust as the school is bigger and more formal. In fact, she said that the friendliness and socialness seems to be a prevalent trait of the people in the United States. It is the one thing that most French people notice first.

This is not Miss Reynoud's first visit to the United States. She was in California last year for two months. She stated that she came back because she liked the United States, and that so far she has not been disappointed.

Would you believe that Miss Bush is only 13 years old???

How 'bout those wonderful, gullible transfer students that we all love so much... they want to know how much it costs to rent a study room in the Lib!

Have y'all noticed a definite absence of H-S faces around the camp lately? Love those road trips!

WANTED: Painters urgently needed at Wheeler Dormitory. Only members of Chi need apply.

Suggestion to Cultural and Social Exchange Committee: To promote cooperation and interaction between the Science Departments of Hampden-Sydney and Longwood in planning future sky-watches ("Love On The Rooftop," maybe?) (Or how could you go for "Star-Gazing On The Field?")

MISSING: Two Eds from the staff; in vicinity of Philadelphia, Pa. No reward offered.

COMING ATTRACTIONS: Homecoming at Hampden-Sydney; watch for large quantities of "Imported Goods" and sneer.

Therapy of the Week! Take in a relaxing Sunday afternoon flick like "Lilith."

It's about that new group organization on 2nd floor Wheeler... Oh well, it's really "nothing."

Mr. Gussett has included all his mathematical theories into the new science called "Plogomatics." Look out, Euclid!

Hope the quarterback in the Science Department no longer has a stiff neck.

Wilkins To Serve As Geist Ringmaster

Versatility Typifies Geist Art Exhibit

The art exhibit at the Geist Festival will be held Saturday, October 29, from 1:00 to 3:30 p.m. in the circle behind Tabb Hall in connection with the Midway. Versatility characterizes the exhibit, for its main purpose is to acquaint both the student body and the community with current art trends prevalent on campus and throughout the nation. Included in the display will be crafts, sculpture, oils, water colors, prints, and drawings. In addition, a special attraction in the form of a "Pop" Art Exhibit will also be presented. Although this event is primarily an exhibition, viewers will have the option of buying many of the works on review. All students are encouraged to enter their art works, as it is not necessary to be an art major to be eligible for participation. There is no entry fee; however, 10% of the sales will go to the sponsor. This activity is a supplement to the larger art show and sale in April.

All entries must be submitted by Thursday, October 27, and should be brought to the kitchen, first floor Student Building during the hours 10:00-12:00 or 4:00-6:00. The event is sponsored by Philakalia, a group organized on Longwood's campus a year and a half ago. It is interesting to note that the Greek word "philakalia" means "for love of art."

LC Directory By Colleagues Goes On Sale

Beginning November 1, the Colleagues will be selling a Longwood College Student Directory, which they have titled "Where The Girls Are."

The cost will be fifty cents for each directory, and it will have listed the phone numbers of all dormitory offices and each floor in all dorms. Heads of all campus organizations and their addresses will be included, as well as hours for the "rees," Post Office, Library, Bank, Laundry, and Bookstore.

The directories will be convenient and a time-saving device, and all students are being encouraged by the Colleagues to purchase one. Orders can be given to any Colleague, and a table will be set up in the Rotunda so that students may place their orders before and after meals.

Mr. Robbins had written "The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology" and books on "Dr. Faustus" and T. S. Eliot. His degrees include BA, University of Liverpool; Dip. Ed., Liverpool; Ph.D., Emanuel College, Cambridge. The scholar has an equally impressive display of titles. Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, Ford Foundation Visiting Scholar, Harvard Visiting lecturer from Universities of Amsterdam, Berlin, Bonn, Birmingham, Chicago, Kentucky, Liverpool, London, North Carolina, Syracuse, and Toronto; Overseas Guest, British Association Advancement of Science are only a few of the speaker's many accomplishments.

Russell Hope Robbins is one of three scholars to be sponsored by Beorc Eh Thorn this year. Bernard Grebanier, Professor Emeritus of English from Brooklyn College, and Robert Downes, Professor of Literature, University of Illinois will address interested students at later dates in the year.

PEGGY WILKINS, GEIST FESTIVAL RINGMASTER

New LC English Prof Vacations In Europe

By CHRIS DIXON

Miss Fritche, one of the new English professors, toured Western Europe this past summer before coming to Longwood. After completing a summer course in the German language, she decided to vacation through Europe. At the end of July she flew to Amsterdam, Holland. Landing in the city at night she could find no hotel accommodations so she ventured a night in one of Europe's famed youth hostels. The "beat" bearded boys and her five young Finnish roommates gave quite an atmosphere to her first night abroad. In Amsterdam she visited an impressive art collection by Van Gogh and the famed home of Anne Frank.

She next crossed into Germany. Her first stop was Berlin. For Miss Fritche, the wonder of West Berlin was to be found in the night life. Since the male-female ratio was overwhelmingly in favor of the men, night clubs installed special equipment to help their guests mix and mingle. At one club, a telephone, by which guests called each other in the club, was located on each table. Miss Fritche became well-acquainted with the German telephone.

East Berlin's atmosphere was not a merry one. In comparison to West Berlin, East Berlin was a virtual wasteland. Police dogs lined the roads, Red flags hung from desolate windows and doorways, and signs critical of American action on Viet Nam were ironically posted along the wall. Even Miss Fritche's guide was detached in her observations. On pointing out the Memorial Gardens for the Soviet dead, she expressed no bitterness. Miss Fritche found the guide's discipline "admirable."

From Berlin, Miss Fritche traveled to Cologne and Munich. Near Cologne she took a local bus to Zons and discovered the walled city for herself. She frequently rode the local buses to escape the tourist traps.

In Munich she stayed with a German family. Although they were very friendly toward Miss Fritche, the husband was rather bitter toward America. He was disillusioned by American en-

Festival Usherettes Head Up '66 Activity

"Step right up, Peggy Wilkins, Ringmaster of Geist!" Peggy will flash in patent boots and top hat at the Geist Festival performances of the color skits on October 28 and 29 in Jarman.

From McLean, Virginia, Peggy is an enthusiastic history and social science major. She is secretary of the Athletic Association and plays varsity hockey. A member of the Monogram Club, Peggy was a class representative to the A. A. last year and has played intramural basketball, volleyball, and badminton. As a member of Sigma Kappa social sorority, Peggy is presently serving as Housing Chairman. She has participated in Circus and was a fine performer in the Class of 1968's Freshman Production. She is active in Gamma Delta.

Full of spirit, Peggy has a contagious enthusiasm and special love for her class. She is very excited about her duties and is looking forward to Friday and Saturday.

Geist and the students of Longwood can well be proud of this year's Festival Ringmaster. Geist has chosen eight usherettes for its 1966 fall festival based on activities, character, and spirit.

Leading off the festivities in Jarman on Friday and Saturday nights will be two representatives from each class.

Senior usherettes are Gay Rice and Rose Mary Street. A senior representative to the Legislative board, Gay was co-chairman of the junior ring dance and past treasurer of Alpha Sigma Alpha social sorority. Her hometown is Suffolk, Virginia and her major is elementary education. Rose Mary, a business education major from Richmond, Virginia holds the title of Miss Future Business Teacher of America for 1966. Other activities include membership in local business fraternities, student government, and the Baptist Student Union. Presently, she is serving as business manager to "The Rotunda."

Sharon Rannon and Linda Gardner are the junior usherettes. Another Richmond, Sharon is majoring in elementary education. A Colleague from the class of '68, Sharon is treasurer of the House Association and presently serving Delta Zeta social sorority as first vice-president. As chairman of the assembly committee under Legislative Board, Linda has become well-known around Longwood's campus. Her home is Sandston, Virginia. In addition to her many activities, Linda is a member of Alpha Gamma Delta social sorority.

The two sophomore usherettes are Stacey Dodge and Brenda Holly. From Chester, Virginia, Stacey's major is elementary education. She has been her class's representative to the Judicial Board for its two years at Longwood. Also, she is a member of Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority. Brenda participates on the B. S. U. publicity committee, Young Republican's Club, and was a sophomore assistant. Her major is history.

From the new class of 1970, Geist chose Linda Lew and Chris McDowell. Linda was an active high school student in Richmond, Virginia and has taken over the duties of the dormitory president in Ruffner. A member of the varsity hockey team, freshman Chris was also a participant in the red-and-white party. She is from Baltimore, Maryland.

Geist is proud to add these girls to the festival activities.

Kappa Delta Celebrates Sorority Founder's Day

On October 23, tribute will be paid to the founding of Kappa Delta Sorority. The 69th anniversary of the Sorority will be celebrated by its 59,000 members in 102 college chapters and 350 chartered associations in the 50 states.

Kappa Delta was founded at Longwood College on October 23, 1897. On Founder's Day, special tribute will be paid to the only surviving founder, Mrs. Arthur M. White of Norfolk, Virginia. Kappa Delta Sorority was founded by four young women, including Julia Tyler Wilson, who was the granddaughter of the tenth president of the United States, John Tyler.

The Longwood chapter will hold its annual Founder's Day Service to pay tribute to the founder the following week.

The first National Panhellenic Conference sorority to select the care and aid of crippled children as its national philanthropy, Kappa Delta gives annually toward the support of six beds at the Crippled Children's Hospital in Richmond, Virginia. In addition to the aid, the Sorority regularly makes contributions for special projects or equipment for the hospital. At the Sorority's 1965 Convention in Chicago, Kappa Delta presented a check for $10,000 to the hospital for the purchase of an emergency power system. In-

Freedom....

During October 19-22 two ROTUNDA editors had the grand privilege of attending the 43rd Annual Conference of the Associated Collegiate Press in Philadelphia. Student editors from all over the country gathered for the affair, engaging in much discussion concerning campus issues and problems. During the conference I had the opportunity of meeting the editor of the East Carolinian, the newspaper of East Carolina College. Seems that many of the same issues have been arising at campuses everywhere and that student newspapers have been criticized for some of their editorial comments concerning these campus issues. I intended to write an editorial concerning freedom of the press and unjust criticism of student opinions, but was elated to find that Nellie Lee, the E. C. editor, had recently expressed her sentiments much more eloquently and precisely than I could have done myself. With gracious thanks, we reprint the following editorial from the East Carolinian, October 11, 1966.

—P. J. H.

"Freedom of speech is the right of a man, any man and every man, to have an opinion and to express that opinion whenever and however he pleases. Although constitutionally endowed with this freedom, man is inclined not to have his own opinions but to live with the opinion of the majority or of the authority adopted as his own and to conform to be the same."

Freedom of the press often moves in the same drift as freedom of speech. Recently the EAST CAROLINIAN has been criticized for some of the comments found in its editorial page.

Too often, as with any paper, it is easy to make favorable comments on everything and become just like the man who expresses only opinions of the authority adopted as his own, thus conforming to that authority. When the press, just as an individual man, comes out and criticizes adversely, there is often dissent from the authoritative side receiving the criticism.

Constructive criticism is always in the best interests of the majority. And an editorial page that criticizes with only a constructive aim in mind should be a welcome change.

In the case of the EAST CAROLINIAN, we plan to criticize anything that is for the benefit of the entire student body. In news reporting and certain feature articles, we will be as objective as possible. The editorial page, however, will remain a page for voicing student opinions and campus issues as cited by student editors.

Editorial freedom of opinion and freedom of expression is necessary to the life of any campus newspaper. Defense of this position rests on four grounds:

First, any opinion that is forced to remain unheard may be true. For a paper to deny this opinion is to assume its infallibility.

Secondly, though the silenced opinion may be in error, it may contain some truth. Since most opinions are rarely the whole truth, only by expression of editorial viewpoints and uncovering of adverse opinions is the remainder of the truth given any chance to be discovered.

Thirdly, if the opinion is not only true, but the whole truth, and if it is not vigorously and earnestly contested, it will be held by the reader in the manner of a prejudice with little comprehension or feeling of its rational grounds.

And fourthly, if this acceptance is accomplished, the meaning of the doctrine will be in danger of being lost and deprived of its vital effect on the character of those accepting it.

Opinions should be voiced. What happens when opinions are not allowed to be expressed editorially?

Is not the reader as well as the writer deprived of one of the most treasured rights of mankind. The silencing of an opinion can deprive freedom from the individual.

If an opinion is right and it is kept silent, then students are deprived of the opportunity of exchanging error for truth. If the opinion was wrong, then the student loses what might be termed an equal benefit, for the student then gains the clearer perception and livelier impression of truth by its collision with error.

Letters To Editor

Geist Members Reply To Recent Editorial

Editor of Rotunda:

We, the members of Geist, are writing this letter in an attempt to clear up some glaring misconceptions concerning our organization and its purposes. Geist is, in a sense, a transitory organization, filling the gap between Alpha Kappa Gamma and Longwood's membership in Mortar Board. But Geist is not merely filling a gap—it must function as a strong organization, one with high standards and equally high qualifications. It must pave the way for Mortar Board, an organization which values and recognizes the highest ideals of leadership, scholarship and service in senior women. Thus it must be Geist's purpose, and eventually Mortar Board's purpose, to foster on the Longwood College campus a certain cultural and intellectual atmosphere which must and should exist at every growing college. We have chosen to begin with Alpha Kappa Gamma's idea of Circus and to incorporate ideas and changes to expand and improve this weekend to bring it up to the level of a Mortar Board sponsored activity. Recognizing the need for change, we propose the Geist Festival—an idea to encompass the entire weekend's activities. We do not profess that with the Geist Festival will come all we wish to achieve and see materialize at Longwood now and in the future, but we do believe it is a beginning. By changing the whole format of the midway and by adding a student art exhibit along with the hockey games, color rush and the B2C Club's program, and by placing emphasis on excellence rather than competition in the class skits, we hope to capture a wider range of interests on the part of the student body, alumni and guests. Perhaps in the future new ideas will be added, or things will change completely. This is a matter we will leave to Mortar Board.

Alpha Kappa Gamma was founded at Longwood and functioned effectively for thirty-eight years. But National Alpha Kappa Gamma has become a stationary organization and Longwood is moving forward. National Mortar Board is pro-

Leading Campus Issue: College Student Morals

By GWYN MUSE

Should our colleges teach morals? This question was asked, and answered in the October 23 edition of "This Week," the Sunday Supplement to the "Richmond Times-Dispatch." The article was an interview with Dr. John J. Meng of Fordham University, who stated that colleges should be concerned with morals of its students, and that they should teach a "positive moral attitude."

In considering this question, one should also consider the prevalent attitudes and actions of students on campus. According to one university professor, "college morals are in a state of turmoil."

The old idea of morals being longed in the home and Sunday school class is certainly passe. Educators realize that morals are as important in the school as in the home, and they also realize that many children receive no moral instruction in their homes. But, should COLLEGES be concerned with this question? A quick look at certain attitudes on campus should give the answer.

The time when white-throated young damsels floated about under parasols occasionally exchanging a lover's smile with the handsome young man is definitely past, but in our "brave new world," we have not yet reached the point of "Personal Contraptions" or special compartments in our purses for a syringe and an extra shot of heroine. Yet, it seems that many people would put the college student in one of these two adverse categories. Why? It is easy to answer that times change, and so do standards and viewpoints, and while this is true, there are other factors which should not be overlooked.

One of these is attitude. Mother, home, and heaven are no longer the ideals which figure most prominently in shaping the standards of youth. That is not to say that family and religious convictions are no longer necessary or desirable, but these are not as strong a force as they were when Granddad or even Dad was a young man. The young people of today are rebelling—not in the beard, "beat" sense of the word, but outright questioning and demanding answers—to some areas that have before been considered "unquestionable." The "God is Dead" controversy ushered in a new wave of thought and questions about traditional religious beliefs. Though initiated by college students, professors and other adults avidly supported the idea: the President of the University of Notre Dame publicly stated, "Not only is God dead, he never was." Serious study and thought have been given to this question, and others involving the church, its doctrines, and how they affect thought and action of members and non-members.

The student's attitudes toward sex are changing, taking on a more liberal aspect. The double standard, which has long been the villain who made little, innocent girls succumb to the big bad man, is now practically an old wives tale. For as many boys who openly live by the double standard, there are as many girls who secretly live by it. Most girls simply consider what they do, or don't do, their business, and think so do standards and viewpoints,

Oleg Cassini Says

Woman, Where Have You Been?

Glory be, the female form returns — after a long and painful absence. Specifically, the waist has reappeared. For those of you so avant as to think that archaic, give a listen, for I know of what I speak.

The waist and the waistline are two different things, performing two different esthetic functions for your clothes and your body. . . at least in my fashion lexicon. I regard the waist as the inward curve of the body—odd inches down from the base of the neck. In a well-proportioned and firm body it is a graceful, flowing line. Of course, it is best observed in the nude or in a one-piece stretch jumpsuit.

The waistline, on the other hand, is the horizontal line established between the two innermost points on the curve of the waist. It is, of course, an artificial line since none actually exists across your body.

The effect of fashions that emphasize the waist are different from those emphasizing the waistline. A dress with an actual waistline bisects your body cleanly across the middle. And while it may tend to emphasize the curve of your bosom, (a good thing) it also accentuates the size of your waist (often not a good thing). It also may make a woman look shorter since it takes the eye horizontally across the body, minimizing the vertical lines. A waistline in my opinion, looks best on top of a full skirt—say a shirtwaist dress with its dirndl skirt, or perhaps a gored skirt.

A return to waist-conscious clothes does not mean that belts and seamed waists will suddenly be appearing on everything — although some are surely being seen around. Rather, it indicates that curves are returning to light up the male horizon. It has taken a long time for sanity to overrule the nefarious influence of the deadly chemise, but reason has finally prevailed. Even those dresses obviously descended from the shift have the added and needed grace of clever seaming to shape them in animations of the female form beneath. It is a blessed day for the entire male population that those undistinguished, unshaped, unappealing sacks have been the dust — and for an exceedingly long time, it is devoutly hoped.

The gently seamed shift has been with us for a while now, but the waist is making a real bid for a comeback as princess-line dresses appear again with their distinctively fitted bodices that slide (without a seamed waist) into gracefully gored skirts. A number of suit jackets have been shown with full belts at the waist, and even several winter coats that tie, trench coat style.

Yes, the handwriting is on the wall, and the female form will soon be making its divine reappearance in the reasonable enough form of shaped clothes. But you needn't worry about that trend going too far. It should be quite a while, if ever, before we go back to dressmaker-type clothes with their intricacies of styling, seaming, fitting, hooking, buttoning and finally wearing. Especially since today's version of the shaped dress is easier to make, cheaper to produce, and so much more comfortable for you to wear. Why, some of them even feel like shifts, they tell me.

FASHION MIRROR

Corduroy is always a best-seller for autumn, and 1966 is no exception. Well, it is an exception in that the selection available to you is truly extraordinary. From pinwale on through several middling degrees to widevale, from solids to houndstooths and paisleys, the choice is yours. Colors are richer, patterns busier. And the result is that corduroy's versatility has been vastly extended. For instance consider this evening coat in a winter shade, flowing softly and regally enough to adorn you at the theatre or merely at a festivity that cloth can attend.

OLEG CASSINI

In deepest plum, midnight blue, brown, or black itself, it is as formal as can be, and interesting for being a little different.

FASHION TIP

Your friends may call you penurious when you save hem material that you cut back, but if you're handy you may have the last laugh — and certainly the satisfaction of changing a garment in a way that pleases you. Specifically, a wide band of material cut back from a hem can be made into a headband, a bow if the dress can use one, or even a half-belt for the back if you can sew well — to name a few fairly obvious uses. If you put your mind to it, I'm sure you can come up with even more ideas, most of which you will be able to implement with a little patience — and a little material. Many women find this kind of creative altering to be quite satisfying.

Toothpaste Called 'Lust' Fights 'Smooch Decay'

By ART BUCHWALD
WASHINGTON—A Florida dentist named Dr. Doran D. Zimmer has discovered after a five-year research program that cavities can be caused by kissing. The results of his studies, which were financed by a grant from the United States Public Health Service, has thrown the dental profession into a tizzy and could change the kissing habits of the country.

It is too early to know what effect the results will have on kissing in the United States, but a spot survey I made over the weekend shows that people are really worried about it.

I called my own dentist and asked him if it was okay to continue kissing now that the scientific facts had been established. He replied, "It's all right to go ahead advertising campaign next year is going to be to fight 'smooch decay.'"

I finally called someone connected with the government and asked if they were going to propose any legislation to prohibit kissing in the United States. "We can't stop Americans from kissing," he said, "but we think the government should at least warn people what they're getting into."

"Is there any truth to the rumor that the government will demand warning labels on perfume that induce kissing?" I asked him.

"It's being considered. We would prefer to find something to add to the drinking water which could protect everybody. But so far we haven't come up with anything, so we'll have to stick with an educational campaign."

We believe that people who have been kissing for years won't be able to stop. But perhaps those who are just starting out will realize the damage it can do to their teeth and will take up cigarette smoking instead."

"Well, there's a lot to be said, then, for not kissing," I told her. "The kids that didn't neck didn't have to go to the dentist and that must have saved their parents a lot of money."

"Not really. Because the kids that didn't neck had to go to psychiatrists instead."

I made another call to a toothpaste manufacturer who said that as soon as the news broke his research people got on it right away.

"We're working on a new toothpaste for people who kiss a lot but can only brush once a day. It's called 'Lust' and the minute your teeth come in contact with another person's teeth it kills all the germs in both your mouths."

"It sounds like a breakthrough," I said excitedly.

"We're very high on it. Our entire advertising campaign next year is going to be to fight 'smooch decay.'"

Longwood Plays Madison Wins 1st Game, Loses 2nd

By LESLIE SEDGWICK
The sky was radiant on Saturday, Oct. 22, as Longwood greeted Madison's Hockey Team to the campus. But the clouds rolled in as the first game was about to start. It might have been L.C.'s own field but Madison played on it like it was theirs. L.C. just could not keep up. Literally, falls were dominating the scene. Not only could L.C. not stand up but when they managed to do so they seemed to be waiting for something. It was a purely defensive game, and sometimes the defense could not hold Madison off. Pat Lyndane did a terrific job as goal-keeper as she was sometimes left alone against onrushing forwards. Again and again she kept them off and only through their inexperience did a ball manage to get in.

L.C. had the ability to beat Madison as exemplified by Barbara Matthews' well coordinated reverse stick dodge and Judy Bateman's excellent job of carrying the ball down the field and diverting the defense and then driving across the goal for someone on L.C. to pick it up and score. But nobody did. Plagued by the foul sticks, L.C. seemed to give the ball to their opponents rather than wait for the official's whistle.

Madison was first to score as the ball was carried back and forth, up and down the field. In the latter minutes of the half, Barbara Matthews scored the only L.C. point.

As the second half started, the defense woke up. They started to play offensively. Lead by Diane Davis, the halfbacks drove to get that ball into Madison's cage. Madison repelled these attempts and in two individual spots went down the field and scored. L.C. also had its spurts, but was to lose the ball within the striking circle. The game ended with Madison having the win 3-1.

L.C. Won 3-2

The second game started much faster than the first. L.C. began to cut for the ball and took it under control many times to the striking circle. However Madison's defense was effective. This was Longwood's offensive game. The entire offense was to be waiting for something. It was a purely defensive game, and sometimes the defense could not hold Madison off. ## Kay Moore Chosen For Sports Spotlight

By GINNY SIRC

As a change of pace, this week the spotlight is shining on a Longwood lady who was recently presented with a blue blazer at the A. A. Banquet. Would you believe that she's majoring in English and Spanish with certification in Speech? That's right, Kay Moore is not a Physical Education major, but she has participated in many athletic activities at L. C. She has played class basketball, volleyball, and hockey for 3 years. In her Freshman year Kay was elected captain of the class hockey team. Kay has also played Varsity tennis for 3 years and was a manager of the team last year. Didn't someone slip into a creek at the Madison tennis matches last spring? Did you play in your wet "gun boots," Kay?

Kay is a member of Kappa Delta social sorority and of Kappa Delta Pi, National Honorary Education Fraternity. She is the current president of Beore Eh Thron, Honorary English Society. Her most prized possessions are her car, her bed, her hairpiece, her books, and her Dristan. The big question is, Kay, are you really bald? She loves to read and to smoke (nothing but Parliaments) — they say she's a real fiend! She also thinks that pizza-burgers are the greatest. Can you really eat 8 of them?

A graduate of Thomas Jefferson H. S. in Richmond, Kay will be doing her student teaching in Henrico County. Combining sleep and study is one of the things Kay does best — she sleeps all day and studies all night. By the way Kay, you'd better start studying for that big test, it's only 2 1/2 weeks away! Kay is very good at singing — well, would you believe pantomiming? She's also very pleasant when she wakes up in the morning. In other words, Don't Come Within Ten Feet or she'll snap at you. One of Kay's tricks is closing doors by throwing shoes at them, but her best trick is breaking the transom above the door!

And now in all seriousness and with all sincerity Kay, we wish you the very best as you move toward student teaching and graduation. May success and happiness and Longwood spirit go with you always.

College Morals Growing Campus Question

that no one else should be concerned. One Longwood student stated, "Frankly, I see no reason why Longwood or any other school should be concerned with my sex life. I know what I'm doing, and if I should end up on the wrong side of the tracks, then it will be my problem. I'm quite sure that I won't court my college if it did not instill in me all the virtues of Joan of Arc."

On the other side of the sex question, there are as many young women who believe in the standards of sexual morality that have long been accepted. Another Longwood student, "Call me old-fashioned, but I have certain standards, and I feel that to lay them aside for an hour or a night would be lowering myself."

Action is influenced by attitude. Though the free speech and free love movements represent the radical position, they are significant because the same thought that inspired San Francisco students to form a nudist colony may cause another college student to change her attitude toward sex before marriage. The coed taking a "trip" on LSD may not be so different from the Longwood student who said, "If they want to take dope or LSD, or smoke marijuana cigarettes, then it's all right with me."

Should colleges teach morals? The college should make clear its stand on moral issues. The student is less likely to have to struggle with himself for answers to questions of morality. Take away the struggle, and perhaps much of the weakening of values will be eliminated. However, the final decision, whether College-influenced or not, is left with the individual.

T. H. E. Rat Defends LC Girls; H-S Frosh Review Date Guides

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is reprinted from the Hampden-Sydney "Tiger," and concerns the dating "Guides" recently published by Jewett and Martin. We find this article especially interesting because of the subject matter.)

By T. H. E. RAT
When one turns away from the books here at good, old Hampden-Sydney, his mind will turn to the weekend and the finer things of life like girls, booze, frat parties, girls, and more girls. Unfortunately a lowly freshman will find himself "out of it" unless he is lucky enough to know one or more of the local Longwood girls. To help all us friendly, cheerful, eager-to-learn Rats, two Kappa Sig's, Steve Martin and Bryce Jewett, have very conveniently provided a BOYS' SCOUTING GUIDE (about Virginia's girls' colleges) and a GIRLS' SCOUTING GUIDE (about Virginia's swinging (?) boys' colleges) to help us get acquainted with both. I shall try to evaluate the two, the "Boys'" this time, and the "Girls'" in a future article.

To begin with the pictures in the BOYS' SCOUTING GUIDE are just enough to start the typical Rat's mind to thinking what he'd like, but unfortunately the Rat will be lucky if his date is a reasonable approximation to these fair ladies. At least it shows us that MARTIN AND JEWETT get around in Virginia.

Five Girls Vie For Legislative President

Candidate:

Home: Suffolk, Virginia
Major: Elementary Education
Questions:

1. Do you think that Longwood College as an institution of higher learning should give its students an opportunity for self government? Why?

The primary function of the Student Government Association is to act at all times in the best interest and welfare of the student body as a whole. I feel that the students of Longwood College have shown their desire and willingness to accept the responsibility of managing their own affairs and that they should be allowed to do so. It is the students themselves who know and understand campus problems. Since they face these problems and live with them each day, they are the most capable and qualified people to suggest constructive and workable solutions. The students are also more willing to give their hearty support to rules which they have made for themselves, rather than to arbitrary administrative laws.

Student representation and participation in deciding the governmental affairs of the college is the basis upon which our Student Government is founded. As our college enrollment grows each year, inevitably the students are being held more accountable for conducting their own affairs. With each increase in student responsibility there is a concurrent growth in the maturity and judgment of the student body upon which this responsibility rests. Through active participation in student government Longwood students are becoming better prepared to meet their personal problems and public obligations in our democratic society.

2. Do you think there should be some control over grade requirements for student activities? How would you administer this control?

Longwood, along with other colleges across the nation is now experiencing an increased emphasis on academics. Grade control over student activities is a helpful and necessary outgrowth of this emphasis. In order to have a well-balanced and fruitful college career I feel that each student should strive to attain a harmonizing balance between academic pursuits and col-

Questions:

1. Do you think that Longwood College as an institution of higher learning should give its students an opportunity for self government? Why?

Longwood College as an institution of higher learning should help its students to grow in wisdom and maturity as well as in knowledge. Therefore Longwood should definitely give its students an opportunity for self government as a means of helping the student to gain this wisdom and maturity. Giving the student this opportunity for self government, the students are encouraged to take an interest in the name and image of their school and to take pride in its accomplishments. Self government also helps the school to gain the best possible and most effective form of government because of the fact that the students, who best understand the position of their own fellow students are the ones who run the school's government.

2. Do you think there should be some control over grade requirements for student activities? How would you administer this control?

A student who is going to participate in a college activity must have adequate time to devote to this activity in order to keep the various campus clubs and organizations functioning in their proper capacity. It is very important that there be some grade control over student activities, because a student who has a great deal of difficulty with grades cannot devote the necessary time to these activities.

This grade control could probably best be administered through the activities and academic affairs committees and by forming an inter-club council which could keep a check over the grade requirements of the various organizations. Each organization would be responsible for checking its members' grades and upholding its grade requirements. These organizations would in turn report this to the inter-club council which would control campus activities so that all the organizations on campus would function in the best interests of both the school and the students.

3. Recently there has been much discussion concerning academic affairs and improving the quality of teaching. What is a good teacher?

A good teacher is one who can provide the student with the best possible background and factual information on a subject and do so in a manner that creates an interest on the part of the student and challenges the student to make the most of the educational opportunities presented to him. A teacher who can make a subject interesting and challenging enough that the student actually wants to learn is truly a good teacher.

4. In what specific areas of Student Government will you place your emphasis?

The student government of Longwood College functions both

Questions:

1. Do you think that Longwood College, as an institution of higher learning, should give its students an opportunity for self government? Why?

At an institution of higher learning, students prepare themselves further for the adult world. Soon students will have the legal right to express their opinions and voices in their city, state, and national government. It is only fitting that the student should have an experience in a kind of self-government at college. The Student Government of a college offers such experience. This gives every student a chance to work with other students and the administration and create a realistic and fair set of standards and rules. I believe that Longwood is fortunate to have such a system, and should continue its government by and for the student body.

2. Do you think there should be some control over grade requirements for student activities? How would you administer this grade control?

I feel that any girl who has reached college age should be able to make most of her own decisions concerning academic and social affairs, if not directly, then through a representative body such as the Legislative Board. Even when mistakes are made, the opportunity for self-government will help a girl to mature and grow into a conscientious citizen. The adjustment from student to career woman will be much easier if the student is given a chance to prove to herself and her contemporaries that she has the self-discipline and stability to make her own decisions.

2. Do you think there should be some control over grade requirements for student activities? How would you administer this grade control?

Holding a major office is time-consuming and often takes away from hours ordinarily spent studying. Often the grades of an average student will drop when she holds an important office; when this happens, the student must sacrifice either grades or the office, and often cannot do justice to either of them. Therefore I feel that there should be set grade requirements for such offices. Rather than set these up arbitrarily, I would look into the averages of past officers, both before and after holding office, and try to establish the requirements from the results.

3. Recently, there has been much discussion concerning academic affairs and improving the quality of teaching. What is a good teacher?

A good teacher is one that is truly concerned about his or her students, and is willing to give of his own time to help the student in need. I feel that a close personal relationship between faculty and student is important, but since it is often not possible in some of the larger classes, just knowing that the teacher is concerned and available for individual consultation is some-

At Longwood, too many students become involved in extracurricular activities, only to find that they have sacrificed their education in the long run. It is unfortunate to see a girl on academic probation or even out of school because she has devoted all of her time to outside activities. For this reason, I feel that there should be certain standards and grade requirements for a girl to be a member or officer of an organization. The administration of these standards and requirements would be carried out by a standing committee of the Legislative Board. Before a girl would be eligible to be a member of any organization or run for an office, her grades would be checked by the Legislative Committee and thus her eligibility determined.

3. Recently there has been much discussion concerning academic affairs and improving the quality of teaching. What is a good teacher?

It is difficult to define what I feel to be a good teacher in absolute terms. There are, however, certain qualities or

Questions:

1. Do you think that Longwood College, as an institution of higher learning, should give its students an opportunity for self government? Why?

Self-government on any college campus is one of the most important experiences offered a student. Harold Taylor, in his essay "Human Nature and Education," made the following comment concerning the purposes of higher education: "The gap between the academic and personal must be closed by the union of counseling and learning, learning with acting, and acting with doing." This statement has much meaning when you consider the principle that higher education should train the student for citizenship as well as prepare him for a vocation. The college administration, faculty, and curriculum provides the student with opportunities for "counseling and learning." The student must then take upon himself the responsibility of combining these learning opportunities with acting. The only way that the student can do this is through self-government which offers him training for citizenship, assumption of responsibilities both personal and academic, and provisions for expression of his ideas and opinions. These experiences of self-government are the means by which the student combines the "acting with doing," because they prepare him for effective participation in both his vocational and the society in which he will live.

2. Do you think there should be some control over grade requirements for student activities? How would you administer this grade control?

In order for an institution of higher learning to train its students for citizenship in a democracy, it must enrich the student both mentally and socially. Granted, the more important objective of a college or university is to provide for the growth and development of the students' intellectual abilities. However, extra-curricular activities help the student develop into a more well-rounded individual. Participation in too many activities, however, may hamper the student

The college administration, faculty, and curriculum provides the student with opportunities for "counseling and learning." The student must then take upon himself the responsibility of combining these learning opportunities with acting. The only way that the student can do this is through self-government which offers him training for citizenship, assumption of responsibilities both personal and academic, and provisions for expression of his ideas and opinions. These experiences of self-government are the means by which the student combines the "acting with doing," because they prepare him for effective participation in both his vocational and the society in which he will live.

2. Do you think there should be some control over grade requirements for student activities? How would you administer this grade control?

In order for an institution of higher learning to train its students for citizenship in a democracy, it must enrich the student both mentally and socially. Granted, the more important objective of a college or university is to provide for the growth and development of the students' intellectual abilities. However, extra-curricular activities help the student develop into a more well-rounded individual. Participation in too many activities, however, may hamper the student

Self-government on any college campus is one of the most important experiences offered a student. Harold Taylor, in his essay "Human Nature and Education," made the following comment concerning the purposes of higher education: "The gap between the academic and personal must be closed by the union of counseling and learning, learning with acting, and acting with doing." This statement has much meaning when you consider the principle that higher education should train the student for citizenship as well as prepare him for a vocation. ## Mistake Of Indecision

Once again Longwood College places its life in jeopardy . . . once again we can all face an uncertain future . . . once again the student body is to be called upon to make several very serious decisions. It is major election time.

The Rotunda does not want to overemphasize the importance of voting, however we hope that each student will realize the necessity of turning out at the polls, and casting a well thought out ballot. So often views and feelings on elections are so overdone that the entire idea is run into the ground. We do not want to run an idea into the ground, but we feel that certain points can again be brought out beneficially. Our only wish is that you listen, for the points about to be cited are important and should be followed.

Major offices are no picnic. It takes more than just a good sense of humor, or good connections around the campus, or being able to "delegate" your way out of hard, honest labor. The presidency of one of our major organizations is truly a serious matter. The positions are so responsible that we, as the student body selecting our leaders, must consider the weight that each office carries. We must try to select the most qualified candidate to fill each office.

No set standards of qualifications for major offices or minor ones, for that reason, actually exist in an easily definable way. However, there do exist many points we should consider. Often the most capable person is the one that, for us, is the most difficult to vote for. We should not let popularity influence our decisions for voting. This task is perhaps the most difficult — to vote for someone you do not know especially well as a person, but whom you feel is the best person for the job. We implore the student body to consider all facets of a person before casting that ballot. Seek the best qualified person for every position. The people put in office will carry a great deal of influence and importance around the Longwood campus; therefore, it is absolutely necessary that we find the most competent leaders possible.

The most important part of elections is not merely coming out and voting. It is narrowing the candidates down to the most suitable one. The greatest power of all rests in the hands of the student body. We only hope you will use it wisely and well.

times helpful. A good teacher should not only possess knowledge, but should be able to impact it in a meaningful way to the students.

4. In what specific areas of Student Government will you place your emphasis?

I will place specific emphasis on communication between the Legislative Board and the student body, because I feel that the Board, in order to represent the students, must be aware of the general trends of student thought. I will announce the Legislative Board meetings more, and when certain areas of college life are being discussed, I will invite those students who are directly concerned. For instance, when May Day is discussed, those people who are currently in charge of May Day should be present.

Furthermore, I will try to give all aspects of the school rather than just a few equal opportunity for expression. There are large numbers of students involved in campus activities that never receive recognition; I feel that these organizations should be given equal time.

In addition, I will try to make sure that the students are aware of current student governmental problems, and that they are also aware of the reasons behind a specific decision. Neither side of the coin—students and student government—is able to see the other, and I feel that this lack of understanding is a problem that should be solved.

Student government should not have to be regarded as a body separate from the rest of the students, but rather should be seen as an integral part of the entire student body, working to bring the administration and the students of the college to a better understanding of one another.

Questions:
1. What would you consider the most important duty of a Judicial Board member?

The most important duty of a Judicial Board member is to remain fair and objective, putting aside personal prejudices and turning her full attention to each matter that may come before her. She must remember that she is acting on behalf of the student body and is thus responsible to them. But she has also been elected to exercise her own judgment and must do so conscientiously.

MYRA BOONE

2. What are your ideas on how Blacklist cases should be handled?

The main improvement in the handling of Blacklist cases should be the obtaining of more complete information on each case. These cases tend to be handled haphazardly because the Judicial Board often receives only second hand information on which to make a decision. Admittedly this is a difficult situation to remedy because the Board is limited to interviewing witnesses from the student body and often there are no student witnesses. A possible solution would be the appointment of one Board member to be in charge of reports of all possible Blacklist cases. This person would investigate thoroughly (especially second hand sources) and report to the Board. Any witnesses should be interviewed by the Board. The Board should hesitate (if not refuse) to act in the absence of reliable information.

3. What image should the Judicial Board have in the minds of the students at Longwood?

The Judicial Board as a body should deserve the respect of the students. It earns this respect by reliable and consistent handling of cases. It is also up to the individual member of the Judicial Board to prove herself a responsible person through her own conduct and attitudes. We are fortunate in having the privilege of living under an honor system and of having the job of upholding this system delegated to our fellow students.

Candidate: Sherry Grimes

Home: Alexandria, Virginia
Major: Elementary Education

Questions:
1. What would you consider the most important duty of a Judicial Board member?

The quality which determines the majority of the most highly respected and revered judicial personnel in our country is that of impartiality. All too often the prejudice and bias of those who have assumed the responsibility of judging the wrongs of their fellow men, regardless of severity, has resulted in unjust penal decisions. Here at Longwood College, the judicial system is, of course, on a smaller scale, but its principles should not be altered merely because of its size. Likewise, the qualities required of its members should reflect those of our recognized judicial officers, in remaining impartial to the cases brought before the Board, enabling them to render judgments which reflect no influence from outside pressure regarding the specific offender or the case being reviewed. It is the important duty of every Judicial Board member to hear each with an entirely open mind, recognizing the significance of the facts submitted, the actions and character of the individuals involved, and the gravity of the offense itself, each remembering that she embodies the well-being of the student body, acting impartially to preserve and uphold the rules it has established as those under which the majority may best function. Underlying these basic requirements, an even more important concept which should be inherent in every Judicial Board member, one which is often grossly understated, is understanding. We are not yet so automated that we lack any feeling of compassion, when justified, for those with whom we work and associate. We must realize that justice is meted out to the best degree not only by dedication to principle and knowledge of fact, but also by an appreciation of the human emotions of those to whom justice must be applied.

Four Students Seek Judicial Board Chair

Candidate: Alice Rennie

Home: Richmond, Virginia
Major: Elementary Education

Questions:
1. What should you consider the most important duty of a Judicial Board member?

Sincerity and fairness should be prevalent in the minds of all Judicial Board members to enable the Board to function in their best capacity. These two qualities should be interwoven in the duties of the Board — the important ones I feel, being secrecy and openmindedness.

There should be absolute secrecy in the result of any case heard by the Judicial Board to protect the accused whether she be guilty or innocent.

It is also essential that a Judicial Board member attend a case hearing with an open mind. Only after all evidence is presented should she make her decision stating the reason for her decision.

2. What are your ideas on how Blacklist cases should be handled?

ALICE RENNIE

Boys should not be placed on the Blacklist as the result of one incident unless the incident is such that it warrants action, this decision being left to the discretion of Judicial Board. If a boy a second time acts in a way which is detrimental to a Longwood girl, he should be placed on the Blacklist for a period designated by the Judicial Board during which time a Longwood girl may not date him. This would eliminate the rule that Longwood girls may date boys on the Blacklist provided the boy does not come on campus to pick the girl up.

3. What image should the Judicial Board have in the minds of the students at Longwood?

In the past there has always been a fear of the Judicial Board. For the future the student body should be aware of what the Judicial Board stands for. They should be made to realize that the Judicial Board is made up of students of a student body. It is not a group who walk around in black robes dying to catch someone violating a rule. Just as the Federal Government has a Judicial Branch to enforce law so does Longwood — one which enforces laws and strengthens the student government of the school.

Candidate: Eleanor Walnes

Home: Heidelberg, Germany
Major: Elementary Education

Questions:
1. What would you consider the most important duty of a Judicial Board member?

The most important duty of a Judicial Board member is to act always in the interest of the individual student. She has been elected by her class or by the student body to represent them and to act for them. She has an obligation to fulfill that must be met with understanding and knowledge.

2. What are your ideas on how Blacklist cases should be handled?

The present manner of handling Blacklist cases should be evaluated to sort out some of its strong and weak points. The present procedure involves the Judicial Board voting as to whether a person should be placed on the Blacklist and then voting for the length of time for the blacklisting. The person involved is then notified of the Board's decision. I feel that a few suggestions may make this procedure more effective and consistent. I would like to have some sort of framework developed as to what constitutes a Blacklist decision and the length of time for blacklisting, so that the Board can work with more consistency.

3. What image should the Judicial Board have in the minds of the students at Longwood?

The image of the Judicial Board should never be one of a "police force" that seeks to punish and condemn. This sort of image would only serve to weaken the purpose of the Judicial Board rather than strengthen it. The Judicial Board must be a means of representing and serving the student body in all aspects of college life. It must project an image of fairness and understanding in the actions and decisions that it makes. It is only by this image that the Judicial Board can be of service to the student body.

House Association, Athletic Association Bring Contenders

Candidate: Anne Smith

Home: Alexandria, Virginia
Major: English - Spanish
Questions:

1. What position do you think the House Association should play on the Longwood campus?

The purpose of House Association is to promote conditions which are conducive to studying and living here at Longwood. Since its rules and actions will affect the student body directly, House Association is probably the organization which must be closest to the students. It is up to the students to inform the House Association members of the changes they would like to see made. In this way the Association is an organization which works out the desires of the students. Its second capacity is as the intermediary between the students and the administration. Considering both of these factors, the students should realize the importance of House Association as one of the strongest organizations on the campus.

As House Council the Association was not recognized as a very important part of government, but now it is a separate and very important part of the student government. With the growth of the student, it is necessary to have a strong House Association which will coordinate the desires of the students and the administration in the best ways possible.

2. Do you think that strict study hour should be continued? If so, why? If not, what would you propose?

It is very necessary that there be a complete evaluation of strict study hour. I think this evaluation might prove that having two hours of strict study is not enough for students and does not really accomplish any purpose. If the rules are enforced, there is quiet for two hours, but at ten o'clock everything breaks loose. Usually if a student has to the classroom or to the library.

Very definitely there is a need for regulations concerning noise, but I do not think that strict study hour as it stands now meets this need. Inquiries should be made at other schools as to how they have one of the problem. Actually, a quiet hour from a certain hour in the evening to the next morning might be more effective. This time could control excessive noise, record players, and other things. With the size of Longwood, something more could be done. The strict study hour should be considered. The students should be treated as a more mature group.

3. Do you feel that House Council is effective as both a legislative and judicial body?

Now the House Association is a separate part of student government, its function as a legislative body should move at a stronger pace. There should be more evaluation of all the rules, and their efficiency considering the growing number of students. Many rules which have been around for years need to be considered in an overhauling job. Of course, nothing can be changed unless the students realize their own responsibilities. The changes that many students want can come only on a cooperative basis between the students and the administration.

This is the importance of the judicial function of House Association. This function starts at the level of the hall presidents who are in direct contact with the students. If students respect their authority, this is an indication of the responsibility of the students. It is necessary for House Association to function efficiently as a judicial body, or its rules will have no effect. If students do not show a sense of responsibility now, they can not be expected to show under more liberal rules. Because it does start at the level of the students, the judicial function of the Association is most effective in giving these facts.

The Hall Presidents would not be the only people who could give call downs. If people persisted in really disturbing others then they could give them a call down. One of the points that I would like to stress here is that people will

In relation to his academic achievement. Grade control in student activities would be a very good way to prevent such a disaster. Nevertheless, it is my feeling that if we have too many restrictions on our activities on campus, we will tend to lose a part of our responsibilities of self-government. A student must learn to discipline himself concerning what is most important. I do think though that those regulations regarding students who hold positions of responsibility in student activities and those regarding students on academic probation are very necessary for the overall welfare of the student involved.

3. Recently, there has been much discussion concerning academic affairs and improving the quality of teaching. What is a good teacher?

The most obvious qualification for a good teacher is that she must be very competent in her subject area. Of equal importance is the necessity that the teacher be dedicated to teaching, very interested in and enthusiastic about her subject, and genuinely concerned about her students and their problems. If a teacher meets these requirements, she will most likely possess other characteristics which make her superior. Some of these are a pleasing personality, a good disposition, a sense of humor, patience with her students, and a keen desire to be fair and considerate.

4. In what specific areas of Student Government will you place your emphasis?

One of the main concerns of all those interested in student government on our campus is the construction of a more academically-aware environment at Longwood. The Student Government Association alone can not create such an environment. However, if the scope of Student Government, which is the representative voice of the students, were broadened, it would have a positive effect on the intellectual atmosphere of the campus. As President of Student Government, I would strive to broaden Student Government in the following ways:

I, by stimulating student participation in governmental and campus activities;

II, by providing more and varied opportunities for student cultural enrichment;

III, by expanding the purpose of Student Government from that of a delegated body which oversees student activities to include student contributions to the educational programs of the college.

ANNE SMITH

Candidate: Peggy Wilkins

Home: McLean
Major: History and Social Science
Questions:

1. Why are the Round Robin tournaments important in the intramural programs?

The Athletic Association of Longwood College is composed of you, the individual student. It is your support and enthusiasm which supports this organization and directs it in planning future recreational activities. The Round Robin tournaments sponsored by the A.A. enable each and every student to take part in such activities. Participation in these tournaments should be fun for everyone and play. Every student who is interested and has a desire to play should do so - whether she is skilled or unskilled should not and certainly is not a qualification for participation. It is the Round Robin tournaments which offer everyone who desires such, an opportunity for recreational enjoyment.

2. How could the A.A. include more people in its class and color activities?

The Athletic Association is always interested in including more people in its program. With the greater amount and variety of activities offered, more people should be encouraged and interested to participate, which also includes those who come to watch and cheer their class and/or color team to victory. There are many ways in which people can participate in the A.A., not only through the various activities offered but also by serving on the many committees operating under the A.A.

3. What would be your specific objectives for the Athletic Association next year?

With the addition of the new Student Activities Building, an even more effective program should be maintained by the Athletic Association. Suggestions could be taken for the establishment of such a program and an evaluation of past and present activities could be made for a better and more effective future program. The A.A. is a growing organization trying to keep pace with the large increase of students and available facilities. It is my desire to help in its growth - to stimulate and expand with wider range of participation and to establish a program that will interest and encourage each of you, thus maintaining an even more active and useful A.A. for the future.

Linda Gardner

for and through the students of the college. For this reason, I feel that it is essential that more emphasis be placed on the relationship between the student body and the Legislative Board. In order for the student government to do the best possible job, its members should be aware of the feelings and ideas of the rest of the student body. On the other hand, the students need to know just what their government is doing. The key point of this emphasis is for a better informed student government and student body with everyone working together for the benefit of all.

In deciding on areas for emphasis one cannot overlook the fact that Longwood is a rapidly expanding college. With this expansion, there will have to be many changes made, and among these is the need for a greater social, cultural, and academic awareness. With this expansion there will also be a need for better relations between the administration, the faculty, and the students. It is only through the combined and unified efforts of all three that Longwood College will be able to continue this growth and to meet the needs and demands of its students.

Candidate: Jean Hendricks

Questions:

1. Why are the Round Robin tournaments important in the intramural programs?

The Round Robin tournaments are very important in the intramural programs. In a Round Robin tournament, each player who has entered plays every other player in the tournament. No one is ever eliminated. The player who wins is the person who finishes with the most wins or with the best results. In this type of tournament anyone can play as many times as anyone else. Even if there is a player who is not as good as some others, she can still play many games and get as much enjoyment from each game. In other kinds of tournaments many times a player will only get to play once and then will be eliminated. In the Round Robin tournament the players will get a chance to play many times before the tournament is over. This gives players more chances to participate in the activities.

2. How could the A.A. include more people in its class and color activities?

The Athletic Association could include more people in its class and color activities by encouraging more people to participate. Everyone is a member of the Athletic Association and is thus eligible to participate for activities. This is one of the unique systems at Longwood College. This organization is not just made up of several people, but it is made up of the entire student body. I feel that if the students would be encouraged more, there would be more girls coming out for class and color activities. Although, there is a great emphasis on the competition between the classes and colors, and thus girls think they have to be very good to come out for these sports. This is not true. Everyone should participate whether they are just having fun or getting together with their friends. It is a great opportunity to do both of these things besides enjoying the competition of the color and class cups.

The Athletic Association has increased many sports and activities in the past few years. This enlargement has given more people the opportunity to choose the activities they are interested in. Since Longwood is growing larger and larger, even more sports and activities will have to be programmed into the future. From this broad field of activities students may select the sports which interest them. By having more activities more students could be included in the program.

3. What would be your specific objectives for the Athletic Association next year?

One of my objectives for the Athletic Association would be to try to get more people interested in participating in the sports and recreational activities which we have offered here at Longwood. There have been several activities added where students can participate in and enjoy. This variety gives each student a chance to pick the activities which she is interested in.

The Athletic Association is an important part of Longwood College. It promotes a great deal of spirit and competition between the classes and the colors. The students become more aware of their classes and work harder for them. It also gives more spirit and loyalty within the classes to the college itself.

There are several activities which the Athletic Association offers which may be used just for the enjoyment of the students. This gives the student a great opportunity to relax herself or to get rid of tension. These activities may be used as a social gathering or where friends get together. The Athletic Association is an important contribution to Longwood and should help each student find her needs.

lege activities. This grade control is administered for the student's own protection and serves to help each student gauge her own activities according to her individual abilities and the pressure of her academic work. An automatic effect of this control is to allow for more participation in campus activities and organizations by a larger number of interested and capable students. Major officers and representatives are free to give needed time to their duties without neglecting their class work. Persons not having the required grade averages serve their class and their school in a lesser capacity while they concentrate on their studies so that they can raise their grades.

I realize that the present system of grade control upon campus activities and office holders has placed an appreciable burden especially upon the present junior class. The juniors did not know about the change in policy far enough in advance to be prepared for the increased academic requirements; however I do feel that the present plan has great merit and should be given a fair chance to prove itself before it is discarded.

3. Recently, there has been much discussion concerning academic affairs and improving the quality of teaching. What is a good teacher?

Interest, understanding, objectivity and enthusiasm are the key traits which every good teacher possesses. This person must have a sincere desire to share with his students the knowledge that he has acquired. He must not be too far removed from student problems and school or campus conditions. He must try to challenge each member of the class to want to learn and to do the best work possible. He is not biased, but rather he welcomes students' opinions even when they differ from his own. He must possess a sense of humor when trying situations arise and have the wisdom to admit that he is sometimes wrong. Above all, a good teacher leads rather than directs his or her class along the pathway to knowledge and maturity.

4. In what specific areas of Student Government will you place your emphasis?

I plan to place the emphasis of Student Government in two major areas. First, I feel that more awareness, understanding and active participation in Student Government should be encouraged. I wish to more fully utilize the wealth of capable and willing people in each class who could make significant contributions to the college. I feel that this could be accomplished in the following ways:

a) It should be stressed that Legislative Board meetings are open and students should be encouraged to attend and observe. In the case of specific and significant student dissatisfaction a special meeting of the Legislative Board might be called to discuss with interested student new rules and changes in policy.

b) Informed Student Government Conferences should be held to discuss with interested student new rules and changes in policy.

October 24, 1902, was the founding date for Delta Zeta Sorority. The Epsilon Tau Chapter at Longwood held a special Founder's Day ceremony in honor of its six founders. Delta Zeta was originally begun at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, today Delta Zeta is the largest national sorority, having 165 chapters, plus its unchartered colonies.

Among the most noted Delta Zeta philanthropies is Gallaudet College in Washington, D. C. This is the only college in the world devoted to the teaching of the deaf. Delta Zeta also sponsors Carville, which is the only hospital in the United States where victims of Hansen's Disease are treated.

Pastoral Prints Exhibit Jeffer's Love Of Nature

An exhibit of distinctive color photographs is adding a seasonal glow to the 3rd floor art corridor of Grainger building, formerly West Wing, on the Longwood College campus.

Showing until Thanksgiving, the exhibit consists of 12 attractively mounted photographic prints made by John Jeffers, an advertising sales promotional specialist of Waynesboro, Virginia, whose works rank high in professional quality.

Mr. Jeffers' love of nature and her changing scenes are beautifully captured in his prints which include: flowers bursting into bloom in the Spring; a golden sunset on still waters; a rushing waterfall in the mountains; the golden leaves of autumn; one's vacation hideaway - a cabin in the mountains surrounded by tall bluish-green spruce; and a walk along the harbor in the stillness of the night. Some of the prints in this exhibit are purchase items.

Son of Dr. and Mrs. George W. Jeffers, of the Longwood faculty and staff, the 32-year-old Farmville native is an expert photographer who has won praise for his creative representations of nature. He has won the blue ribbon and the title of best in the show on his prints entitled "Chesapeake in Red" and "Nature's Veil" which are included in this exhibit.

In 1963 one of his color slides was used on the inside front cover of "The Hercules Mixer," a monthly magazine put out by the Hercules Powder Company.

Mr. Jeffers and his wife, Eleanor, are outdoor-camping enthusiasts and their outdoor adventures have taken them from the chilly lakes of the northeast to the high Rockies of New Mexico and Colorado to capture the beauty of nature.

The public is invited to view this exhibit during regular college hours.

Strauss Concert Held By German Club Members

Deutscher Klub-Edelweiss, better known on campus as the German Club, chartered a bus to the Mosque in Richmond Nov. 1 to attend the Vienna Johann Strauss Orchestra Concert. The Vienna Johann Strauss Orchestra is a direct descendant of the orchestras conducted by the great "Waltz Kings" themselves. Conductor Edward Strauss II is the grandson of the first Edward.

The evening's program brought the gaiety and beauty of the Austrian capital to the twenty-one German Club members who attended this performance. The talented voices of Dagmar Kohler, soprano, and Walter Krasutler, tenor, brought verse to the Strauss waltzes. The waltzes were originally written to be sung as well as played.

The Strauss Orchestra is touring forty-five cities in the United States to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the "Beautiful Blue Danube."

Alpha Sigma Tau Varies Activities; Invites Sisters

The Zeta Tau Chapter of the Alpha Sigma Tau Sorority is preparing for an exciting and profitable week-end, November 4-6. On Friday the Zeta Tau Chapter will be joined by delegates from the Psi Chapter of Madison College and the Alpha Lambda Chapter of Radford College. Friday night will be highlighted with the Annual Founder's Day Banquet in the college Tea Room. At this date 68 years ago the Alpha Chapter was founded at Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti, Michigan.

The activities will continue with State Day on Saturday. This will be an excellent opportunity for exchanging ideas in discussion groups, and for getting to know sister AST's from the other colleges. In addition, the delegates will be entertained by the Longwood Chapter with skits and rush songs. All three chapters are looking forward to the week-end and hope that State Day will become an annual activity for all Virginia Alpha Sigma Taus.

Sports Spotlight Shines; Pat Lyddane Is Spotted

By GINNY SIRC

Do you know anyone who plays left halfback for the R.P.I. hockey team? Would you believe our own L.C. goalie once played for R.P.I. against L.C.? That's one of Pat Lyddane's achievements! Pat has played varsity hockey for four years, and last year she made the All College second team. She has been active in class and color basketball, archery, softball, and volleyball. Last year Pat and Esther Royster won the badminton championship, and Pat also came in first in the L.C. bowling tournament. At the time of the presentation of blazers at the A.A. Banquet, Pat was in the infirmary, and she was very excited when she found out that she had received a white blazer.

Pat is the current president of her sorority, Alpha Sigma Tau. She has done much work for the sorority as president of her pledge class and past rush chairman. Entertainment is often provided by Pat when she tap dances for her sorority sisters to "The Good Ship Lollipop!"

Besides being the only Senior clown in Circus, she is a Green & White Picker, and an active member of Cahoots. Pat is the official song leader and joke teller of the Varsity Hockey team. Her second major should be Home Economics. Her corner of the room is always so neat, as a matter of fact, when she can't find anything on her desk, it's because she has just finished straightening it! There is also an interesting letter holder on her desk. Pat has given one of her most prized possessions as a decoration for "the john" - would you believe a stuffed coconut head with crossed eyes staring down at you? By the way Pat, how did your name get on the Camp Pickett date list? Is your idol really Julie Andrews? And, why does Mrs. Cover call you "Drawers?"

Pat is sending her wish through College. This past summer she held three jobs each day and now works for Dr. O'Neill here at L.C. Pat is interested in other people and will do anything she can to help them. Her friendliness carries with it L.C. spirit and tradition. Though her home is in Alexandria, Va., she will be a student teaching in Richmond. May you attain the happiness and success you deserve. Best Wishes, Pat!

Convention, Flight Fever Put Delegates In Whirl

had. It was quite amusing—three lost students aboard a V.I.P. businessman's flight!

No sooner were we in flight than we landed at Washington. Amidst the incredible mobs of people we somehow managed to meet up with some old acquaintances (our parents) and snatch a quick snack and conversation. We boarded once again, arriving in Philadelphia at 11 p.m. After much fun'n games — "Search for Your Suitcase" — we all managed to reunite and get a taxi to the Benjamin Franklin Hotel (Philly's largest).

Arriving at this fabulous, plush establishment we could hardly believe our eyes. Thousands of college students (Yes, gals — it was coed!) from over the country attended the convention. The three of us were roommates with some girls from New Mexico. It was thrilling just meeting so many different students from so many different places and swapping so many different ideas. We found that many had never heard of Longwood or Farmville — but most of them admitted that they had heard of Virginia once or twice! So many friends were made in such a short time. We were very delighted in finding companionship from Midwest-ers (Tulsa University), East Carolinians (ECC) and some true-blue Philadelphians (St. Joseph's). Our Philly friends took us on a tour including — Independence Hall, the Liberty Bell, Congress Hall, Old City Hall, and the First Bank of the United States. Our historical tour was completed with a shopping trip — John Wanamaker's and Saks Fifth Avenue — and a delicious dinner at an Old Philadelphia restaurant.

Meetings, workshops, conferences, panel discussions, luncheons and social gatherings comprised a busy four-day schedule. An excellent program for publications, newspapers, yearbooks, and magazines was planned for this year. Charles Kauralt, CBS News New York Correspondent, noted for his outstanding work on CBS Reports and former editor of "The Daily Tarheel," newspaper of the University of North Carolina, opened the ACP Convention.

Featured on a panel that discussed "Freedom of the Press" as related to college newspapers was Harold E. Kohn, noted libel lawyer and partner of the law firm that represents the Philadelphia Inquirer. Other newspaper seminars offered student journalists included "The College Newspaper Viewed from the Editor's Chair," "How Much Emphasis Should College Newspapers Give Student Revolution and the Press."

Highlighting the newspaper seminar was Professor Melvin Mencher of the Graduate School of Journalism at Columbia University. Mencher's chief commentary concerned "The Editorial Page as a Forum." Professor Roy Cogsworth, from the University of Southern California, who is a noted style expert, offered a course on the "Art of Craft Creative Writing."

On Saturday morning, we all bid our fond farewells in hopes of seeing each other again next year in Chicago, and wearily returned to Longwood with many wonderful memories of our visit to Philadelphia.

(Editor's note: For another version of the Madcap Adventures of college journalists, read on!!)

"Well," Phyllis was saying, "I sure hope we don't have to wait long for the runway . . ."

We were just preparing for the take-off. When all of a sudden it felt as if the tail of the plane had fallen off. I knew for sure that we were in the air. I am positive that for a few pensive moments we climbed at an angle perpendicular to that of the ground. The night of thrills was just beginning, however . . .

The plane had obviously taken in a few Arthur Murray stunts because it's "Jerk" through the evening sky was marvelous. Thanks to the inclement weather, we all got to test the nerve reflexes in certain vital areas — namely the stomach. Undaunted by the rough treatment, I watched the Virginia darkness as it fled by the window, and wistfully saw the D.C. lights mean my first landing was about to commence.

We started the descent. All I could make out was the Potomac river rising up to greet us at what appeared to be 1000 feet per second. I was not worried; perhaps this was an Aquaplane. But we landed on that brilliant strip called National Airport.

The next leg of the journey on to "Philly" (once you get to "know" the city you are permitted to take this liberty with it's name) was mild for me. . . now I had already accumulated 35 minutes of flying time. I am one-hundred per cent sold on flying, conventions, Philadelphia, and friends you can meet at conventions!

The rest of Phyllis's chronicle is pretty true to life. I just found it necessary to correct the misconception she may have created about my courageous actions of the night of October 19 . . . after all, it was pretty brave of me to go up in those gale force winds and rains. I'm sure hurricanes and tornado warnings had been posted.

Associated Collegiate Press can rightfully be proud, they really know how to work out a wonderful convention schedule. We managed to get in a bit of shopping and sightseeing, even though one of the sights we saw was an old disabled bell that had a crack up one side. It even had a nice quality about it, though, and makes one want to go back to see it again and again. That's how all of Philly affected us — we didn't want to leave, and we've all decided that we have to go back and check out the soft-pretzel city over and over.

And the moral of my little travelogue is this: If ever you have the chance for travel to a convention — take it up. They offer the best possible ways to share ideas, gain in experience, increase your working knowledge, and make many wonderful friends. We'll never forget it!

YWCA Holds Meet; LC Sends Delegates

Two delegates from the Y.W.C.A. attended the Virginia Section Conference for Y.W.C.A.'s the weekend of October 22 at "Roslyn" Episcopal Diocesan Center on River Road in Richmond. The theme for the conference was "The Y Stretches through the Campus to the Community."

Attending the conference were Phyllis Myers and Lucy Hawthorne. During the Saturday morning session Lucy led the delegates in an Experimental Worship Program, after which followed a series of discussion groups on campus problems. This through-day conference was designed to help each college association plan and provide a realistic program that is currently relevant to the needs of the individual college student, to the college community and to the nation.

For the Christmas Banquet the Commission plans the menu, writes and produces the skit, decorates the Rotunda Christmas tree, hangs greens, places Christmas candles in the windows that face front campus, and sponsors a Christmas Carol Sing in the Rotunda after the Christmas Banquet.

In March, the girls on the Commission are in charge of the Campus Community Chest Drive. They canvass the campus for funds.

Besides these activities, the girls do numerous other things, such as helping with evening vesperes, ushering at the Christmas pageant, and aiding the Cabinet when they are needed.

Twelve girls are elected to the honor of being a member of the Freshman Commission in addition to the president of the Freshman class who is an "ex officio" member.

Honors Council Offers Student Tutoring Plan

The Honors Council, made up of representatives from each honorary organization on campus, is offering again this semester a tutoring system for Longwood students. Such a system will be made available to any Longwood student desiring additional help in college work. In this pro-help in college work. In this program, qualified students will serve as tutors for those who need assistance. The Council feels that by instituting such a system at this point in the semester, students will avoid "cramming" just before examinations. It is hoped that the program will encourage conscientious study throughout the term.

The various department heads have been quite helpful in submitting lists of students qualified to tutor others in particular subject areas. Once requests for tutors have been received, these suggested students will be approached concerning their availability to serve as tutors.

Players, Jongleurs Prepare "Heiress"

Preparations for the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs' next play are underway. "The Heiress," a psychological drama by Ruth and Augustus Goetz, based upon Henry James' novel "Washington Square," is to be performed in Jarman Auditorium December 8th, 9th, and 10th at 7:30 p.m.

Such familiar faces as Shirley Timberlake, Millie Gwaltney, Tom Bradshaw, Carolyn McAdoo, and Linda Lane are joined by newcomers Bonnie Ellis, a freshman, and Neil Alder and John Adams, also freshmen. The cast, chosen by the Longwood Players,

The Academic Affairs Committee of Student Government presents this, the first in a series of articles featuring members of the Longwood College faculty. Serigraphy, summer study in France, and fourteen "one-man" exhibits are just a few of the interests and activities of Mrs. Janice Lemen, an associate professor in the Longwood College art department.

Mrs. Lemen is well known in the professional art work for her many contributions in the area of serigraphy—a type of printing done through a silk screen. Some of Mrs. Lemen's prints are at present being used for educational purposes at the Philadelphia Art Museum and at the Pratt Graphic Art Center in New York. Since her arrival at Longwood,

Reported Missing: Class And Color Spirit

What has happened to the class and color spirit that once was a part of our college life? There was such a lack of participation in class hockey that the managers had to schedule many extra practices. Even then there were not enough girls with the correct number of practices for a class team to be chosen. The Athletic Association had to amend its constitution so there would be enough players eligible for the class teams. At least 2 class games were forfeited due to a lack of players. The class hockey games were pushed back so far by the scheduling of extra practices that the color games have now run into Rush and only 1 color game has been played.

I realize that 4 and 5 o'clock classes have some influence on this situation, but in a school of 1600, the participation should be much greater than it is. The class tennis doubles also presented a problem. The Seniors and Juniors had only one team each representing their class, the Sophomores had 2 teams, and the Freshmen had 3. Now that the intraclass matches have been played, the members of the class teams simply "cannot find the time" to play their matches. The class tennis doubles manager is now wondering if these matches will ever be played.

The A. A. is doing its best to fulfill its purpose, but the lack of spirit, enthusiasm, and participation is putting a damper on what the A. A. is trying to do for the college. The purpose of the A. A. as stated in the constitution is "to promote and provide opportunities for participation in athletic and recreational activities; to recognize outstanding participation by members of the student body; and to stimulate wholesome school and class spirit."

And now a word about the spectators, or should I say Non-spectators. There were approximately 15 spectators at the first Color hockey game, and that figure may be an exaggeration. There may have been only 10. How can we expect the teams to have spirit and enthusiasm if the student body shows no interest?

The A. A. is doing its part in offering a greater variety of sports and recreational activities. The Class Cup, given last year for the first time, was started to give encouragement and to arouse more class spirit as well as color spirit. Now it's up to you the students. Do you or don't you want to keep the class and color activities which are so vital to the spirit of Longwood College?

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Student Gov't. Advisor Defends Board Decision

My dear Editor:

It has been my pleasure, and honor, to serve as faculty advisor to Student Government, now designated as Judicial Board, for a total of seven years. Five of those years were in the midst of the 1960s. Such association ought to give me a better understanding of student self-government as it actually operates in the trial of cases than can be gained by the rumors which fly wildly when a difficult case arises.

It is my considered opinion that the present Judicial Board is as able and conscientious as a group as has ever existed on our campus. That judgment is based upon knowledge spanning the forty years since 1926. No one can have the basis for a true judgment of Judicial's actions until one has sat through its sessions which frequently extend into the early hours of the morning.

I believe I have as deep a faith in the Honor System, and as sincere a regard for student self-government, as any one on this campus. Without reservation, I entrust those sacred institutions to your present Judicial Board.

Sincerely,
G. C. Gordon Moss

Student Writes To Defend Board Over Judgment

Dear Editor:

After regarding the letter to the editor regarding recent Judicial Board proceedings I feel that perhaps many students at Longwood should use greater maturity of judgment before criticizing certain aspects of Student Government about which they know very little. All too often these girls are influenced by gossip of others, based, in most cases, on inadequate and distorted information. They fail to use mature reasoning and to form logical conclusions based on intelligent thinking. Most important, in cases of questionable circum-

Smith Regulation — Three Feet On Floor

(Editor's Note: The following story is reprinted from "The Mühlenberg Weekly" paper for Mühlenberg College in Pennsylvania.)

(CPS) — Colleges and universities are granting more liberal social regulations to women, though the privileges often entail exacting qualifications.

This fall, the University of Massachusetts abolished all women's hours, and the University of Oregon did likewise for its sophomores and juniors. For several years, seniors and women over 21 have had this privilege at Oregon.

All upperclassmen at the University of Utah are now eligible for keys to the dorms, but only if they achieve a 2.5 average (out of 4.0).

The University of Illinois will experiment this fall with unlimited hours and key privileges for seniors. If the system is successful, the loosened regulations will extend to juniors and women over 21.

Telephone Signouts
Women at the University of Pennsylvania, tired of rushing back to their dormitories at two minutes to twelve because they forgot to sign out, have initiated a trial system of telephone sign-out for latecomers. Formerly girls had to sign out personally for lates which could extend to 1:30 a.m. on weekdays and 2:15 on Saturdays. Now a girl may call her dormitory and request someone to sign her out for those hours. A girl does not have to sign out any time prior to midnight.

Although women must register their destination with house protectors in case of emergency, sign out cards are placed in an envelope and not opened unless necessary.

Last year, the Penn administration allowed senior women to set their own weekend curfews. Seniors do not have keys, but ask a friend to wait for their return.

Vote For Curfews
At the University of Rochester every class votes on its own curfews.

After a long battle to allow men in the rooms, women at Smith College can now entertain their male friends from two to five on Sunday afternoons. Doors have to be open six inches, and three feet must be on the floor.

And at the University of Georgia, administrators are just now allowing women to visit men's apartments. The university does not consider one room an apartment, however. Bathrooms don't count as a room either — but a kitchen might.

Sororities Start Rush For Fall Memberships

November 8, 1966 marked the opening of fall rush for the nine social sororities on campus: Alpha Gamma Delta, Alpha Sigma Alpha, Alpha Sigma Tau, Delta Zeta, Zeta Tau Alpha, Kappa Delta, Sigma Kappa, Sigma Sigma Sigma, and Phi Mu.

A Panhellene Tea was held in the Student Lounge, followed by a meeting at which Alice Rennie, Panhellenic Rush chairman, explained the rules and procedures to be followed during the formal rush period of November 8-22.

Panhellenic is pleased to see over 300 girls participating in rush this year. A full schedule of parties began Wednesday, November 9, and will be climaxed by Theme Parties on Friday, November 18, and Inspirational Parties on Sunday, November 20. During Theme Parties, each sorority develops a basic theme to include costumes, songs, refreshments, scenery, and skit. At Inspirational parties, the rushee is introduced to the more serious aspects of sorority life. These solemn and meaningful parties mark the final event of fall rush.

On Monday, November 21, at 3 p.m. the rushees will sign preference cards. At this time the girls will list their first three choices of sororities in order of preference. Tuesday, November 22, bids may be picked up at 12:30 in Tabb Rec. Pledging will be at 5:00 p.m. on that same day in Stubbs.

Panhellenic hopes that each girl participating will find rush a satisfying and rewarding experience, and that each will form many new and lasting friendships during this time.

Oleg Cassini Says

Don't Believe Everything You Read

Just recently I read a fashion headline that went something like "Will Black Come Back?" — and I saw red. The implications of that seemingly innocuous little headline were many, and none of them pleasing to my way of thinking.

In the first place, who ever said that black was gone? A little coterie of pampered women who listen to the dictates of other pampered women and some pampered little men. A little group of women who can afford to indulge all of their whims, even the invalid ones. And the logical assumption which follows is that this same elite of cognoscent will soon deem that black is to return (or have already cast the die).

It is positively sickening. It is sickening to see the way the mass media, having nothing better to discuss in their women's sections elevate a few women into high priestesses, into oracles whose wisdom suddenly is profound and judgment inviolate. It is sickening to see these facts actually set up by the mechanisms of publicity, — to see you set up for the next trend, as if once these women wear it, that's it — alternatives flee and another fashion imperative has been legislated.

But back to black and will it come back. Frankly, with the exception of the glitter group I have not noticed any conspicuous absence of it in my vast wanderings. And even they have resorted to it on occasion, usually announcing that it is a whole six seasons (displaying their frailty, one may suppose).

Black has always been sexy, suggestive, mysterious. And if you're young, it is also particularly flattering — no mean feat for one single color to perform. How many colors can you think of that are flattering to every complexion, every hair color, every eye color — until fading age overtakes you. There seems to be a rather slow and subtle transformation that occurs in women somewhere after 35. Then one day you notice that black no longer flatters and gives glow to the skin but rather seems to emphasize wrinkles, dull the eye and sallow the complexion — as if in payment for all of its previous attributes.

Any woman with half a brain and open eyes knows from adolescence which colors are hers and which aren't, which she is always wearing when people tell her she looks wonderful, which her own senses enjoy. That sensitivity is part of being a woman. And any woman would be a fool to discard or even minimize any color which is good for her, no matter what the women's pages say. How much better to be out of step with the unthinking hordes and to look your most marvelous! And it takes so little sense to realize this. Yet it seems to be more than most women possess. They would rather look like everyone else than look well. Or maybe they just want to prove that they read the newspapers.

FASHION MIRROR

Winters come and winters go, and a part of every scene for a goodly number of years now are coats made of pile. Any number of synthetics can be used to make a good, fluffy long-wearing pile. Most are extremely tough and warm, and the price range varies to what the coat is trying to do. Some pile coats try to look like nothing but what they are: fuzzy bundles of warmth. Others are designed to look like leopards, giraffes, and any number of denizens of the forest. Some of these latter ones come off quite well, and others don't pretend so hard, being more for fun.

Because the pile can be treated so variously, styles are similarly diverse, ranging from evening dress coats to uncut little car coats that signify suburbia. Not bad for synthetics, eh?

FASHION TIP

On a list of favorites of the do-it-yourself gang, felt has got to rate very high on the heap. Its colors are wonderfully deep and vivid, in much the same way that construction paper has intense color, partly because there is no visible weave to felt. But that's only part of its appeal, the more important part being that it requires no hemming, in many if not most of its applications. This means, of course, that a handy girl can whip out an apron or even an at-home skirt in next to no time at all. All she needs to be able to do is cut a good straight line with a sharp pair of scissors. But if hemlines ever descend, forget felt — or at least put away your skirts until the next time the skirts start rising.

Legislative Committee Lists Cultural Affairs

Looking for something different to do, an interesting place to go? Then watch for information about nearby cultural events on the new Cultural Affairs bulletin board, located before the entrance of the language hall.

This bulletin board has been set up by the Cultural Affairs Committee of the Legislative Board to answer student complaints about lack of interesting and varied things to do. For the present, the Committee's purpose is to publicize cultural events in nearby cities and on other college campuses. The Board will function solely to bring about more cultural awareness to the student body.

Varsity Hockey Team Finishes 66-67 Season

By LESLIE SEDGWICK

Despite the late start due to foul weather, Longwood's Varsity Hockey Team proved that they did not suffer from it. Throughout the season, L. C. exemplified an excellent team with their well-executed skills and true school spirit.

The whole team deserves congratulations on a job well done as they performed competent, confident plays that were challenging to their opponents. Sometimes the games were slow-moving as defensive players were busily repelling the offense. To whoever's offense awoke first, the aggressiveness of play proved to follow. And as it was so many times, Longwood was first.

The offense bombarded the opposition in their frequent assaults upon the cage. At times their eagerness would get them in trouble but L. C. always rebounded. Quick action and alert attention to what was happening allowed L. C. to gain the advantage constantly.

If ever the offense needed that extra push to get them started, the defense was there to help out. The defense would block drives, take the ball away from the onrushing forwards, carry the ball down the field, feed the ball to the front line, and on occasion, strike for a goal on their own.

As in every team sport today, the most important factor is teamwork, or else the whole system would fall apart. Certainly L. C. did not fall apart because of this fine quality. The offense scored. The backbacks helped the offense. The fullbacks and goalkeepers acted as bulwarks against any opposing force that might manage to pass our front lines. Each player did his job and did it well. Each player worked with his other players to have a united effort, to sincerely keep the opposition out, but to get that ball in the opposite goal cage and as much as possible, keep it there.

On occasion, "The Rotunda" has had an error in their sports headings for which we are very sorry. We feel, along with the student body, that the Varsity Team did a great job, and are proud of their record.

Longwood's Hockey Record for this season stands as:
First Games W-3, L-1, T-3
Second Games W-6, L-1, T-0

Green and White Wins Color Game With Score Of 1-0

By GINNY SIRC

Ground-sticks, ground-sticks, ground-sticks. The first Color hockey game was under way! The play first went in one direction, then the other. The teams seemed evenly matched. Midway in the first half, Connie Spradlin, the Green & White right inner, pushed the ball into the cage for the first score. The Red & Whites came back with fight and a determination that the G and W's would not score again. Many times the R & W's charged the cage, but the ball just wouldn't go in. The second half proved scoreless for both sides, as the ball was first in one striking circle and then the other, but never in the cages. The low score of 1 to 0 shows that both teams played a fine defensive game.

Dr. Jackson Takes Astronomy Class To Chapel Hill To See Planetarium

That field trips can be thrilling and rewarding experiences is a statement which Dr. Jackson's Astronomy class will enthusiastically uphold. Recently, they had the opportunity to visit the Morehead Planetarium at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, which has the reputation of being the "best in the world."

The planetarium illustrates the universe by a projection of the sky on a dome which is four stories in height. The excellence of the exhibition is attained by the Zeiss Planetarium Projector—an electro-mechanical-optical device which shows the sky as it may be seen from any place on earth. In the projector, 156 separate projector systems combine to produce a realistic, man-made sky on the 68-foot diameter, stainless steel dome. The projector is 12 1/2 feet long, weighs 2 1/2 tons, and contains 29,000 different types. The benefactor of the planetarium and the person whom it is dedicated, John Motley Morehead, worked from the standpoint of both finances and research to make this planetarium the finest in existence. He gave the Director of the Planetarium $25,000.00 with which to travel and do research to see if any planetarium in the world excelled that of the University. Mr. Morehead originally brought the Zeiss instrument from Sweden to North Carolina in 1949. Before his death, Mr. Morehead donated $175,000.00 for the purchase of a new Zeiss Projector.

The Planet Room or Copernican Orrery, a 35-foot walk-in model of the solar system showing the sun and the six closest planets, constituted another high point of interest. There are only two of its kind in existence, the other being located in the Hayden Planetarium, New York City. The machinery is so arranged that a visitor, by merely pushing a button, may see the planets and their satellites in their proper relative motion.

Other facets of the tour included "push-button" exhibits il-

Dianne Davis Shines In Senior Spotlight

By GINNY SIRC

The Spotlight's on one of the best-dressed girls on campus, Dianne Davis. Noticed her polka dot shirt—you can't miss it! A white L. C. blazer and many gymbats are also included in her wardrobe. She has been a member of the Varsity Basketball team for three years (co-captain last year) and the Varsity Hockey team for four years. Dianne is a co-captain of the 1966 hockey team and was recently selected as a member of the All College I team. She has shot Varsity Archery for three years and played Varsity Golf one year. Class sports such as volleyball, softball, tennis, and badminton take up much of her time, too. Her hobbies include camping, hunting, painting, and a certain guy called K. M.

At present, Dianne is working on an Honors Paper entitled "The Effects of Ankle Weights on the Leg Strength, Speed, and General Endurance of College Women." Next September will find her doing graduate work at the University of Amherst in Massachusetts, where she has an assistantship position in the Physical Education Department. Her home is in Annandale, but her student teaching this year will be done in Lynchburg.

Dianne, better known as "Flower Blossom" in S.C. 315, was voted most outstanding teacher of the 1966 session by the lacrosse class she taught first block. Yes, most outstanding—there will never be another one like her! Also known as Super-Puma, she loves to hear the hockey team sing on trips to away games, especially when she's the only one trying to sleep. Hear that your favorite hang-out is Swan Lake? Would you believe that Dianne has been sleeping on top of desk since the student teachers came back? Her favorite sayings are "Didn't we?" and "Didn't ya?" Dianne recently started using Coke as setting lotion when she rolls up her hair. Does it really work? Her car, a '59 Chevy, is known as The Blue Bomb. By the way, what did you do on Halloween night? Had a great time at the hockey tournament, didn't ya? Awfully anxious to give first aid to that truck driver, weren't you? Blood thirsty is the word!

Now that you've reached your Senior year, we extend to you Best Wishes on your Honors Paper, in student teaching, and in your graduate work next year. Keep up the great work!

Frosh Class Proposes Constitution Adoption

At a meeting a couple of weeks ago a very controversial proposal was brought before the Freshman Class. Why not have a freshman constitution? Why not provide a way for unification and "adequate, valid representation of the class of 1970"? Since its presentation, students have debated its possibility. What exactly would it provide, skeptics ask. The proposers answer that it would end the hectic superannounced meetings and replace them with meetings held on a regular monthly schedule. Special meetings would be called with at least 48 hours notice. The constitution would provide the class with authority to sponsor activities such as dances. It would also provide for a class historian "to keep a scrapbook recording class activities." Some questioned if students had lost faith in their class officers. The purpose of the constitution would not be to take over duties of class officers, but to unite these officers with class representatives to the other branches of the student government in an effort to work for the class together. This type of organization would, perhaps, inspire more class participation. Another criticism was that no class at Longwood had a constitution and they managed, so why should the class of 1970 have one? One answer is that this year's freshman class is, quite obviously, the largest to date, and therefore, most in need of more organization. Why eliminate an idea because it's a new one?

The initial decision rests with the Freshman Class today at 6:45. Will it collapse or will it succeed and snowball to the rest of the student body? Do they, too, feel they need the organizing support of a constitution? In any event, the idea showed that the class of 1970 is on the ball.

MARGARET WEBSTER

Jarman Series Presents Miss Margaret Webster

Last night, at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium, Miss Margaret Webster spoke to the Longwood College student body on the topic "Heritage of Drama." Miss Webster, appearing for the Jarman Series here, is a well-known theatrical personality, as a brief biographical sketch of her will plainly show.

Margaret Webster was born in the theatre. Her mother was Dame May Whitty, still remembered from stage and screen. Her father, Ben Webster, came of a famous theatre dynasty. She is one of the most outstanding figures in the contemporary American theatre. She is an actress of note, a well-known author and lecturer, and is distinguished as perhaps the finest director of Shakespearean drama today. Her early classical training was in London, and included her debut in John Barrymore's "Hamlet," seasons at the Old Vic and with such famous stars as Dame Sybil Thordike and Sir John Gielgud, and a season of playing in eighteen of the plays of George Bernard Shaw.

Since she returned to New York, where she was born, she has staged many Shakespearean productions. Among these were the Maurice Evans "Richard III" and "entirely" "Hamlet," the Helen Hayes "Twelfth Night," the Rogerson-Ferrer "Othello," and, more recently, "The Merchant of Venice" at Stratford-on-Avon and "Measure for Measure" at the Old Vic. For two seasons she toured her own Shakespeare company from coast to coast.

She has directed or acted in numerous other plays, such as "Family Portrait," "The Cherry Orchard," "Alice in Wonderland," "St. Joan," and the Theatre Guild's 1958 version of "Back to Methuselah." Among her recent successes have been Noel Coward's "Waiting in the Wings" in London and "The Aspern Papers" in New York. She was a co-founder, with Eva Le Gallienne, of the American Repertory Theatre, and was the first woman ever to stage opera at the "Met" ("Don Carlo," "Aida," and "Simon Boccanegra"). This function she has also performed for the New York City Opera with Walton's "Troilus and Cressida," Verdi's

"Macbeth," and Strauss's "The Silent Woman."

In 1961 the U. S. Department of State, under its American Specialists program, sent her to South Africa to direct O'Neill's "A Touch of the Poet" and to tour the Republic with her own recital and lecture programs, appearing before multi-racial audiences on all levels. This assignment proved a brilliant success. Miss Webster is the author of an outstanding book, "Shakespeare Without Tears," and of many articles and monographs. She has made numerous recital and lecture tours and has received honorary degrees from Smith College, Rutgers University, Russell Sage College, Lawrence College, Fairfield University and Boston University.

During the past two seasons Miss Webster has presented her one-woman shows in England, from coast-to-coast in the United States, and has directed "Anthony and Cleopatra" for the University of California in Berkeley, "Don Carlo" for the Metropolitan Opera in New York, "Measure for Measure" for Boston University, a London production of "Twelve Angry Men," and "The Mad Woman of Chailot" and Euripides' "The Trojan Woman" for the National Repertory Theatre.

Student Writes To Defend Board

stances few are willing to give the benefit of the doubt.

In the past, Judicial Board has proven itself an effective and impartial body. Its dealings with students have been handled with utmost discretion and fairness. Where there are human beings acting in any capacity, there is always room for error; this is acknowledged. It is also conceded that anyone is free to express her own opinions, be they favorable or unfavorable. Criticism has often led to improvement when used properly. The point is that a member of the student body, who herself knows only a very small percentage of the actual facts and none of the intangible aspects involved in any case, is in no position to be accurate in her judgment of that case, or to offer an opinion of any validity regarding it. In this case the "facts" do not always speak for themselves.

The Judicial Board is to be commended for its outstanding service rendered the student body during the past year. Judges from its past record, we, the student body, must trust the Board to remain impartial in its decisions; and where there is doubt in the student's mind, let her be sure that she is aware of all the facts before criticizing or condemning unjustly.

Honors Symposium Debates Pros, Cons Of Studying

By MARION BORISEVIC

"Study Habits and Techniques" was the topic for the Honors Council sponsored symposium held last Tuesday, November 23. The panel consisted of Mr. Ruby, Dr. Holmes, Miss Jenkins, Marnie Davis, Ann Ailor, Linda Gardner, and Tootsie Kay. The discussion of study habits dealt with questions undoubtedly in the mind of every student: Why do we study? How does the surrounding atmosphere effect our study habits? How can professors challenge students' thinking? These were some of the questions which caused a volley of responses from panel members and participating students. The faculty members presented some little-known remarks in response to what the professor's role is and also in relation to what they had learned from their personal experiences.

Students bravely voiced some gripes such as "We never have enough time!" and "It's hard to be interested in every course you take!" The many opinions, both pro and con, made the discussion a lively and successful one. Future symposiums are planned and students are urged to take advantage of this opportunity to aid themselves in developing the study habits that are most effective for them.

House Council Reviewing

"Strict Study" Process

The House Council of House Association is currently in the process of re-evaluating Strict Study Hour. A committee which has been formed for this purpose is conducting an extensive and comprehensive survey of the present system with a view toward modifying or changing the study conditions that now prevail at Longwood. As a result of this study the committee will present a recommendation to House Council that will alleviate many of the problems that are found in our present Strict Study Hour. In an effort to obtain the best possible answer to this question, the committee has broken the survey down into many phases. 1. They are talking with as many members of the student body as possible in order to obtain a consensus of student opinion. 2. They are talking with a great many of the faculty members hoping to find much needed information and ideas from them. 3. They are talking with the Head Residents in order to secure their opinion and possible suggestions on the matter. 4. They are talking with members of the Administration

LC And H-S Produce

"The Heiress" This Week

By JOANNE BLACK

Tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium the curtains will open on the Longwood Players and Hampden - Sydney Jongleurs' second production of the semester, "The Heiress." The drama will be presented again on Friday and Saturday night at the same time.

The central action of the play is centered around Catherine Sloper, played by Shirley Timberlake, who is a shy, sensitive girl passed the normally accepted age for marriage. Suppressed by the over-protection of her dominating father, played by Tom Bradley, Catherine meets and falls deeply in love with Morris Townsend, a gold-digging, opportunist played by Neil Aird. When the father learns that Townsend has proposed to his daughter, he claims he will disinherit her if she marries.

The set, quite different from the one used in the Broadway production of "The Heiress," was designed by Dr. Patton Lockwood. The actual construction of the set was done by the play production class, under the supervision of Mr. Dale Melsen, the director.

Costumes, representing fashions of the 1850's, were designed and made by members of the costume crew. Fine quality materials were carefully selected to make the costumes in an attempt to increase the quality of the Longwood Players' wardrobe.

All students are reminded to bring with them to the production their data processing ticket card for admission.

Yuletide Concert Features Choir, Madrigal Singers

BY SUE FULLER

The Longwood College Choir assisted by the Madrigal Singers will present their annual Christmas Concert Sunday, December 11 at 3:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. The program under the direction of Dr. John Molnar features a variety of music for the Yuletide: Sixteenth Century compositions like Monteverdi's "Hodie Christus Natus Est" to Bach's well-known cantata, "For Unto Us a Child is Born;" songs of many nationalities like Katalsky's "Hail, Holy Light" (Russian), Kodaly's "The Angels and the Shepherds" (Hungarian), and an old Scottish carol, "What Strangers are These?" and, finally, a group of folk and traditional carols in the modern idiom: for example, "The Coventry Carol" and "The first Nowell," interspersed in the program will be the numbers "In Natali Domini" and "Psallite Unigeniti" by Praetorius, as sung by the Madrigal Singers with director James McCormick.

Accompanying the Choir will be pianist Rosemarie Walker, a junior music major, and serving as vocal soloists will be Linda Pritchard, Gail Milstead, Carolyn Brockmeyer, Ann Freshman, and Phala Leggett. Other members of the Choir are sopranos (l) Dian Cogburn, Diana Cole, Jean Dickenson, Helen Ford, Sue Fuller, Sarah Gibbons, Joyce Harris, Betty Lou Helbig, Carol Lee, Christine Mannina, Ruth Morehead, Tullia Pickens Owens, Jeanne Powell, Martha Reynolds and Pat Thrift. Second sopranos are Bonnie Gay Andrews, Joan Emerson, Pat Linsmen, Terry MacCarthy, Elaine Maxey, Nancy Parsons, Myrtle Powell, Janet Stansberry, Rose Ellen Stewart, Meredith Vekler, and Laverne Wilson. The thirteen first altos include Sylvia Butler, Laura Clark (Treasurer), Sandy Curry, Jennifer Dunville, Carolyn Gates, Hortense Mitchell, Phyllis Myers, Bula Payne, Ginny Poindexter, Sue Ramsey (President), Janet Sofley, Diane Stout, and Jo Anne Tucker (Secretary). Second altos are Elizabeth Ball, Claudia Cunningham, Martha Drummond, Bette Ferguson, Diane Ritchie, Lucinda Sasser, Sally Sue Smith, and Stuart Windle.

The Longwood Music Department hopes that you will join them in a musical tribute to the Christmas season. No admission will be charged.

Wesley's State Policies Of New Youth Center

Recently Miss Malinda Ayres and three students worked out a policy for the running of the new Wesley Foundation Center. It has been approved by Dean Wilson and the Wesley Foundation Board of Directors. It follows:

Hours for the Center will be daily from 9-6 and, if a hostess is on duty, from 7-10 on week nights, 7-11 on Saturdays, if someone is present. Sunday it will be open all day and close after the Sunday night meeting unless someone wants to use it. A sign-up book will be available in the center on the front counter.

No food will be allowed up on the first floor except cokes when they have jackets on them. These may be brought into the library. A coke machine is in the basement, as well as a kitchen. Uses of the kitchen are posted there.

Students may date in the center if arrangements have been made previously with the director. The kitchen, patio and fireplace outside may be used if advance arrangements have been made.

The Center is not completed and will be open Thursday, December 8, from 3-5 or 7-9 for tours.

Candidates for Legislative Board are, l. to r., secretary, Martha Kay; vice-president, Carolyn Hingerty, Esther Williams, Carolyn Somma, and treasurer, Candy Jamison.

Rotunda Staff Salutes Slater System Manager

We have an unsung hero here at Longwood that, in all probability, we do not even know about. His name is Mr. M. J. Pennock, director of the Dining Hall, and it is The Rotunda's purpose this week to thank him in print for the job he does for all of us here.

No one could adequately comprehend the enormity of a job like managing a dining hall until they have tried it themselves, so that makes us doubly glad that there is someone like Mr. Pennock around. It is a large, and, probably at times, very perplexing job, but we feel that he performs it with honest sincerity and concern for Longwood students.

Perhaps we should realize that cooking for 1600 people is considerably different than that of "mama's coddled foods," and that our food is considerably better than that of other institutions of comparable size. A lot depends on a school's individual manager. He is who really is responsible for the quality of food and variety served at the meal times. Longwood offers variety, and quality, in the meals we have. We have Mr. Pennock to thank for this.

Our dining hall management is always ready to serve us in personal, or with organizational, affairs, which is a service not always offered at a college. Mr. Pennock has genuine interest in Longwood College, and is glad to help out in any way he can. We all enjoy the little "extras" he gives us, such as the picnic at the end of the year, and the birthday dinners, and doughnuts for those nights he knows we'll be up late. These are all little things that count so much toward our enjoyment of college.

So, Mr. Pennock, we of The Rotunda staff salute you for the fine job you're doing here at Longwood, and, although we may not mention it very often, we want you to know we appreciate you very, very much.

Letter To The Editor

Evening Meal Conduct Questioned In Letter

Dear Editor:

It is our opinion that after a hard day of study and classes, an evening meal should be of enjoyment at the individual tables; at least, this seems to be the majority's opinion. It appears, however, that some of the students here don't seem mature enough to consider the feelings of those around them. Their kindergarten entertainment is not appreciated by this table, and we think we speak for others around them. Such conduct as throwing fruit or cookies to one another, singing, sitting during the blessing, and monkey-like conduct—really, is this necessary? Come on, grow up! We hope that the table in question will be made aware of this letter.

Essence Of Chi

Like many things Chi had a simple beginning. It was in 1900 at the time of its founding as it is now—not people, but a spirit and a desire on the part of a group of Longwood students to inspire others with this spirit. This is and always has been Chi.

Every year the spirit of Chi has been demonstrated in some more concrete way. Throughout its existence Chi has strived to enrich Longwood's tradition, meaning, and enjoyment. The varied projects have included replacing Joan of Arc in the Rotunda when the original was beyond repair; landscaping the Dell at Longwood Estate; tiling the floor in the Rec; laying cornerstones for Stevens, Jarman and South Cunningham; and erecting the sun-dial behind the Library. These are tangible evidences of Chi, but are not the very essence of its meaning.

The intangible spirit of Longwood that is present in the heart of each girl here is the real reason for Chi's existence. This spirit that expresses itself in friendly hellos that make Longwood famous for warmth and friendliness; the enthusiastic support of the many and varied activities; the cooperation of the student body; and just that certain something that makes Longwood live in the hearts of her alumnae—these are the essence of Chi.

Men Seek Beauty Aids; Buy Hairnets, Make-Up

By PHYLLIS HUMMER

Nowadays men are being encouraged to follow the "fairer sex" in more than one way. . . We find many wearing such feminine articles as girdles, hair pieces, cologne (Have you yet been "caught by the spell of Chanel" on your favorite beard?), skin fresheners, make-up ("It's not a girl's cover-up" they all say), fake eyelashes (one designer of fake lashes for men claims that men judge other men by the look in their eyes and if their eyes stand out more, it's a definite business advantage), and even hairspray. One distressed woman reports her husband coming to bed sporting a hairnet.

If men are going to go in for all the beauty aids that are being offered today, their pockets aren't going to hold all the equipment they'll be needing to carry around with them. Next thing you know, there will be handbags for men to match their suits. It seems that manufacturers of women's items are missing one bet—starting a campaign to get men to carry handbags.

Now for some inside "scoop." gals. National Educational Advertising Services, an agency which serves advertising in college newspapers, set out to determine exactly what the characteristics of the college market are. This was done through a survey conducted by Marplan Research who interviewed approximately 4,640,000 undergraduate students in four-year institutions.

Their findings, ranging anywhere from the number of students who watch "Get Smart" on T.V. to the percentage of those students using deodorant, have recently been published in booklet form under the title of "Characteristics of the College Market."

The report states that clothing represents a major expense for college students. Half or more of the male students own: two suits, two sport coats, seven slacks, five pairs of shoes, six dress shirts, and 10 sport shirts. They also own five sweaters, nine ties, 10 pairs of underwear, two pajamas, and three belts. In contrast to this, half or more of the female students own: three suits, 10 dresses, 14 skirts, 12 sweaters, 15 blouses, five slacks, and six shorts. They also own two girdles, two pettipants, six bras, and 12 panties.

In the toiletries department, 70% of college men use razor blades, 98% use toothpaste, 62% use mouthwash, and 95% use deodorant. (That blind date you had last week end was probably in the 5% who didn't.)

The report also surveys television preferences. About half of today's college men watch night-time T.V. Their favorite programs include "Get Smart," "Man from U.N.C.L.E.," and "Bonanza."

These are just a few of the many statistics compiled in the report, but they give a representative idea of the characteristics of the college market.

I had to chuckle and couldn't help but suspect that our generation of fellers holds some strange tastes when I read that 158,000 (5.6%) college men own hair dryers. Does yours?

Academic Affairs Comm. Spotlights Dr. Badger

At this time the Academic Affairs Committee would like to recognize Dr. Blanche C. Badger for her accomplishments, both inside and outside of the Longwood College community.

As Chairman of the Department of Mathematics at Longwood College, Mrs. Badger is called upon to contribute to many phases of education in the Commonwealth of Virginia. Quite active on the state level, she has served as consultant at state-wide Mathematics Conferences, participated in the Virginia High School Visiting Scientists Program sponsored by the National Science Foundation, and served on the writing team for revision and evaluation of the "Mathematics Curriculum Guide, 8-12," which was organized by the State Department of Education. In addition, she has served on visiting committees of the state for evaluating high schools and has contributed to upgrading the endorsement requirements for teachers of Mathematics through her work with the State Committee on Teacher Training in Mathematics and Science. Quite frequently Mrs. Badger has requests for curriculum outlines and for advice on course content from high school teachers throughout the state.

Although Mrs. Badger is not fond of public speaking, she considers this an essential part of her position at Longwood College. Speaking throughout the state in locations ranging from the University of Virginia in Charlottesville to Portsmouth, Mrs. Badger has lectured on numerous topics varying from "How are Entering College Freshmen Doing in Mathematics Today?" to "Set Language and Symbols: Aid in Clarifying Concepts of Inequalities."

An exciting experience for Mrs. Badger was the selection of Longwood College for a Na-

Oleg Cassini Says

IS HIM VERSUS HER?

I am told that it is quite ordinary for a man to have no opinion at all about the clothes his ladylove wears. Not that he is not allowed to, but that he actually doesn't. Oh, he may know when he thinks she looks good, but nothing too much more specific than that. Ah, how blissful for you if all men were like that.

But, it isn't so, and what does a woman do when he sees it one way and she sees it another? How firmly should she stick with what she knows looks best and, how much should she defer to what he is equally sure of?

A lot depends on exactly how stubborn and sure of yourself each of you is. As in most of life, the stronger point of view will tend to triumph, and if you're weak-kneed you may be doomed to look the way he wants you to (which may actually be better than your own preference.)

But the more common situation involves a man with opinions and a woman with a check book, and what's the poor man to do in the face of a fait accompli? Stopping payment on the check gets embarrassing after a while, so it becomes easier to just get used to the way she looks or try not to look at her at all.

And that is the most common fate of all. The woman goes her merry way, and the man tries not to look, preferring instead to look at a woman who more suits his taste ideal. This may account for a large part of the female-gazing that exists. It isn't that he thinks she's necessarily prettier—she just looks so much better. I mean if you're wearing the vinyl, he is probably looking at her because she isn't. If she's wearing it and he is still looking it's either in disgust if she's a great-looking girl, or you're wearing something even worse.

I know a man who absolutely hates to see a woman in pants and his wife, who used to look marvelous in them, has given them up. Did she do the right thing? Hard question. If it is a balance and happy relationship, she isn't really giving up too much. In order to make him a bit happier. It's not as if it leaves her with nothing to wear. But if she's a long-haired beat type who won't be caught dead in anything but pants, then she really can't avoid shouldn't give them up. But he probably would not have ended up with that type anyway.

So you see, it's really a matter of judgment, of balancing the normal give-and-take of a healthy relationship. If he detest empire-cut clothes, it won't kill you to make that sacrifice. But if he controls all of your choices and demands adherence to all his fashion dictates, that's quite a different matter, possibly harming if not ruining the rest of your relationship as well.

Maybe you just shouldn't tell him it is returnable.

FASHION MIRROR

Whether you call them evening pantsuits, party pajamas or palazzo pants, the fact is that they are gaining momentum in the social circles and are not fading into the obsolete state of last year's fad, as some seers were predicting. If anything, they are gaudier and more glamorous than ever, as the beads and paillettes and silver shimmer of the most elegant and formal evening wear extends all the way to the pantsuit. Tops can be cut any way, from men's styling to very open halter tops trimmed with ostrich or mink. The pants are almost universally cut full and flowing gracefully at the bottom. This requirement of grace in turn places emphasis on fabric, and crepe seems the most popular. For a few brief moments you may also see some lust velvet, but its season is limited by the calendar while crepe goes on forever.

FASHION TIP

Are you a home sewer who is tired of fussing around with zippers on the things you make? Well, cheer up for help is in sight. It seems that a new process can make zippers bondable to most fabrics by heat rather than by stitching. An ordinary zipper is used—but one that by a special process is custom-coated with an adhesive that will heat-seal the zipper to the fabric just seconds. It ought to work on clothes, slip-covers, even luggage, they say. Anything that is ironsafe, one presumes! It doesn't cost very much to have the zipper processed with this special adhesive, either—as you will soon be able to find out.

New Resident Comes To North Cunningham

By CAROL SKELLEY

A quick look around campus reveals another new face at L.C.: that of Mrs. Preas, new head resident of North Cunningham dormitory. Mrs. Preas is a Virginia native and is of course partial to the state as well as to the people. If any of you sports minde folks are wondering, her Virginia relatives include the famous football player, George Preas. She has one married daughter living in Idaho.

Mrs. Preas was formerly the dorm mother for 75 girls a Glacier National Park in Montana, so she is no stranger to the new job. Her description of the park was magnificent and she has information concerning it if an L.C. girls are interested in going on a trip.

Mrs. Preas commented on the fact that everyone at Longwood has been so nice and had made her feel so welcome. It's no hard to see why! She's a delightful person and we hope she will continue to enjoy her stay at Longwood.

The elimination tournament of Dec. 12 will be played as follows:

At 10:00 the Champions of League I will play the Champions of League II, and the Champions of League III will play the Champions of League IV. At 10:25 the winners of the above games will play for the final championship. During this time a consolation game will also be played by the losers of the above games.

Please be sure to check the A. A. Bulletin Board for a schedule of your team's games!

Green & Whites Win Ten Points In Color Hockey

The Green & Whites now have 10 points toward the Color Cup for winning the color hockey tournament. All in all, the three game tournament was quite interesting. The Green & Whites won the first color game on Connie Spradlin's goal which came in the first half of the game. The score was 1-0. The next color game was a real battle in which there was no victor. Both teams exhibited great defensive skill as the game ended in a 0-0 tie. On November 22, the third and final game got under way. This was the most exciting game of the three and it was a close one all the way. The ball was driven into one cage and then the other and the game, once again finished in a tie—this time 2-2.

Because the color games were designated as a three game tournament and two of the games were ties, the points for Color Cup were awarded to the Green & Whites who were the winners of one game. Congratulations!

Two Military Officers Become LC Managers

The appointment of Lt. Col. John E. Carr III and Lt. (j.g.) Jimmy H. Paul to the two top positions in the business management of Longwood College is announced by President James H. Newman.

As business manager and treasurer and assistant manager and treasurer, respectively, they succeed Jacob H. Wamsley and Ronald G. Lawhorne.

This fall Wamsley, who had served as Longwood's business manager and treasurer for more than 10 years, accepted a top administrative position in higher education for the state of Georgia. Mr. Lawhorne succeeded Wamsley as business manager and treasurer of Longwood but recently resigned the position to accept a similar post at Hampden-Sydney College.

A 42-year-old U. S. Army staff officer, who is about to retire from active service, Carr will assume his new post on Dec. 5. As an ordnance officer, Carr has had a broad background of high military administrative experience. His military efficiency rating places him in the top one per cent of all Army officers.

tional Science Foundation Institute in Mathematics. Her attendance of the Directors' Meeting in Washington, D. C., afforded Mrs. Badger some valuable professional experience.

Commenting upon her role as an educator, Mrs. Badger stated: "During the past five years, I have attended national Mathematics meetings from Vancouver, Canada, to Miami, Florida. I do not aspire to the role of a national educator, but I feel that in order to perform a capable job at the state level, I must keep updated as to current changes throughout the nation."

Throughout her academic career, Mrs. Badger has accrued many honors. Having received a grant from the National Science Foundation, she participated in a summer program for post-doctoral study at Vanderbilt University. Mrs. Badger has been elected into honorary fraternities and societies including Delta Kappa Gamma, Kappa Mu Epsilon, Who's Who in American Education, Men of Science, and Leaders in American Science.

The Academic Affairs Committee would like to extend their congratulations to Mrs. Badger for her numerous achievements in Mathematics, and would like to wish her continued success in her future endeavors.

Other responsibilities associated with his position as comptroller included civilian pay and benefits, operation, maintenance, and repair of facilities valued at $100,000,000, general education development program for U. Carr's military career also includes having served as company commander in a basic training center, staff assignments at battalion, regiment, division, and corps headquarters, adjutant of battalion and regiment headquarters, commander of ordnance company, assistant professor of military science and tactics at The Citadel, and materiel officer in army depots throughout France.

Carr received the B.S. in commerce degree from The Citadel and master of business administration from Syracuse University. He also attended an Army specialized training program in civil engineering at the University of Cincinnati.

He had the distinction in 1965 of attending the U. S. Army Command and General Staff College. Other military training included the U. S. Army nuclear weapons employment officer's course, ordnance officer's course, infantry officer's basic course, and adjutant general basic officer course.

A native of Richmond, who attended John Marshall High School, he is married to the former Miss Jean Wenzel of Cincinnati, Ohio. The family, including two children, Alfred and Martha, will live at "Faulkland" near Meherlin.

Varsity Swim Team Competes With W&M

On November 22, Longwood's Varsity Swimming Team traveled to Williamsburg to compete with William and Mary in the first dual meet of the season. Just last year this varsity sport was organized, and, despite inexperience and lack of the best facilities, this year's team is doing a great job. Miss Buch, a new Physical Education professor at L. C., has certainly started the squad off on the right foot.

At William and Mary, the team lost 51-19, but showed that they had the potential to win. Stefanie DeRoss won two first places in the 50 yard breaststroke with a time of 37.0 seconds, and in the 100 yard medley with a time of 1:15.6. Suzanne Turner placed second in the 100 yard freestyle and timed 1:09.5. Swimming in the 50 yard freestyle and the 50 yard Butterfly, Betty Boylan and Chris Naylor, respectively, won third place. Candace Dickman, diving high, placed second in her competition. Frances Bain, Eleanor Umbdenstock, Cadell Holyfield and Wanda Wright also competed in the meet. Congratulations to these girls for a fine meet, and good luck in your next competition.

Potential divers and swimmers alert! The Varsity Team is always on the lookout for new members, to train and participate in the season's meets and also next year. Support your varsity teams!

Diane Davis Plays Holiday Hockey In St. Louis, Mo.

Miss Dianne Lee Davis, a Longwood College senior from Springfield, Va., traveled to St. Louis, Missouri, during the Thanksgiving holidays to participate in the national hockey tournament.

As a member of the alternate team of the Southeast Hockey Reserve Team, Miss Davis was chosen from members of college teams in the Tidewater Section to be a member of the alternate team. She is the fifth girl from Longwood College ever to have been asked to participate in the national hockey tournament.

Miss Davis is majoring in physical education and plans to continue her education upon graduation in June. She is a member of the college's hockey, basketball, and archery varsity teams, and is treasurer of the Athletic Association.

Recreation Bowling is open to everyone. Each student may play three free games each week—the games will be paid for by the A. A.

Gymnastics Club New To Campus; Offers Coaching

A gymnastics club is now being formed on our campus. All you need is an interest in gymnastics, because if you have no experience there will be someone to help you learn the skills. The gymnastics club will be sponsored and coached by Miss Nancy Andrews of the Physical Education department. If enough interest is shown, a varsity team will be able to represent Longwood at intercollegiate and AAU meets. The girls will also be trained in judging and will be able to attend and judge the high school meet at Falls Church, Va., in March of next year. Meetings and practices will be held each Wednesday from 4:30 to 5:45 p.m. Anyone having a 4.00 class may come at 5:00. Practices will be in Gym 3, the old laundry building.

Listen for more announcements in the dining hall concerning this, and if you have any questions, Miss Andrews will be happy to answer them. Her office is located in the new gymnasium. The gymnastics team needs YOU!

PEGGY SHULTS: "The Athletic Association should be of equal importance to every student. This can only be accomplished by participation, active interest, and support of the entire student body."

Candidates for Freshman Counselor are Chris McDonnell, Betsy Rice, and Kitty Wyman. Their statements of candidacy are as follows:

Xmas Pageant Seeks Spirited Student Body

By OLIVIA JOHNSON

Each year the YWCA presents a Christmas Pageant to stimulate the true spirit of Christmas within each of the members of the student body. This year the pageant will be presented December 14, at seven o'clock. The Madonna will be chosen by the student body from five girls selected by the YWCA. These girls have been nominated because they possess the qualities characteristic of the Madonna.

This year the pageant will be different from previous pageants in that a skit will be presented with speaking parts for the characters. Inez Colon, a sophomore member of the YWCA is in charge of the skit.

After the skit is presented, the heads of the various organizations on campus will place donations in the manger. These donations will be used to make Christmas brighter for needy families in Farmville.

DR. THOMAS PARKE HUGHES

Hughes Speaks To LC At Recent Assembly

Dr. Thomas Parke Hughes was assembly speaker here yesterday, talking on the topic of "National Socialist Technology," at 1:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. He is a visiting Associate Professor at Johns Hopkins University, and Fellow in the Center for the Study of Recent American History.

Born in Richmond, Virginia, Dr. Hughes received his B.M.E., M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Virginia. ## Dr. Lane To Help In Selecting Va. State Textbooks

A Longwood College faculty member is helping select basic textbooks to be used in state secondary schools during the next six years.

As a member of the current state textbook evaluation committee, Dr. Charles F. Lane, chairman of the department of history and social sciences at Longwood, spent three days last week in Richmond recommending books for future state-wide use in the teaching of world geography at the ninth grade level and world history for the 10th grade.

Other books selections being made at this time include: English for elementary and high school, economics for high schools, problems of democracy (sociology) for high school, and foreign languages for high school. The primary purpose of last week's sessions of the committee was to enable publishers' representatives to make sales presentations in behalf of books they have submitted for state-wide adoption.

Dr. Lane stated that as an evaluator he already had reviewed some 25 textbooks. Final reports must be submitted by Nov. 18 to the State Board of Education. The state board is expected to act on the committee's recommendations at its December meeting. New adoptions become effective July 1, 1967.

Normally about four books are adopted in each subject field. However, more or fewer than that number may be selected, depending upon quality.

Localities must use a state-approved text in a subject field as basic material, but may supplement the basal text with other books. State adoptions are made by a staggered plan in which one-third of all school textbooks are submitted every two years.

Museum Artmobile Arrives Here Dec. 12

By CAROLYN ANN DAVIS

The Civilizations of ancient Sumeria, Egypt, Greece and Rome have long since vanished, but skilled artisans left behind a legacy in stone, clay, and bronze. . . works of art that have survived the centuries.

Magnificent examples of this artistic creativity are displayed in "Art of the Ancient World" on the Virginia Museum's Artmobile IV, due to arrive here December 12, 1966 and will remain on campus until December 17.

The vehicle, which is on its first circuit of 16 Virginia colleges and universities, will be made available to students of art and other related courses at specific times. The general student body is invited to view the exhibition from 3 to 4 p.m., December 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and from 7 to 9 Tuesday evening, December 13. The Artmobile is open daily from 9 a.m. during the week of December 12 for groups. Groups wishing to attend are asked to call Miss Bedford for group reservations.

The exhibition brings together art from four of the world's most significant and influential civilizations. The Sumerians were the first to invent writing. They brought to sculptors and architects worked in Egypt. The Greeks developed a rich culture that insisted on a fusion of intellectual and artistic content, as embodied in their sculpture, architecture, drama, and philosophy. And the Romans, while relying on the conquests of Greeks for much of their intellectual and artistic life, were unsurpassed in the legal and administrative genius responsible for molding their far flung territories under a central control.

Thirty-nine pieces of stone, wood, pottery, and sculpture, all from the Virginia Museum's permanent collection, are featured in the exhibition. One of the oldest is a bronze foundation of a Sumerian king, Shul-Gi. Its importance lies in the fact that it is inscribed with cuneiform, perhaps the earliest form of writing, and that the Sumerians developed the use of bronze. Shul-Gi, the inscription reveals, was the mighty king of Ur and builder of a great wall. The basket on his head carries clay to be used in laying the first brick. The figure was placed in the cornerstone and a souvenir of the great occasion, a tradition widely practiced today.

Another fine example of cuneiform writing is found on a clay cylinder from the late Babylonian period. There is also another fine piece of Sumerian bronze, a horse bit made in early Persia. Ancient Egypt, the second oldest civilization covered in the Artmobile exhibition, is represented by a painted limestone figure rendered in the shape of a mummy. It was created about the time Moses led his people out of Egypt.

Called a shawabti, the figure personifies a servant who will wait upon his master in the next world. In some cases hundreds of these small figures were placed in the tomb of the deceased.

A variety of other articles from Egypt are displayed, including a gold and amethyst necklace and ring from Byblos and a limestone relief of a butchering scene.

A classic example of fifth-century B.C. Greek art in the Artmobile exhibition is the marble relief of the Greek goddess Athena. Displaying a superb restraint of form and expression, the work probably was done as an act of worship to please the goddess.

Greek artistry is further represented by a beautiful white marble harp player and a black amphora, a vase with painted figures.

One of the most realistic carvings in the exhibition is the head of a Roman republican, a delicate work rendered with precision and attention to detail associated with Roman art. The head was believed to have been carved about 50 B.C.

Other Roman works are a gold dolphin pin and a terra cotta campana relief depicting a lion hunt.

Artmobile IV was donated to the Virginia Museum by private sources. Private funds also made possible the orientation program that will be administered on campus by an Artmobile chairman. The chairman at Longwood College is Mrs. Janice Lemen, Associate Professor of Art.

The Artmobile will visit 16 Virginia colleges and universities on its inaugural tour. A second circuit, with an exhibition to be announced, will begin in February.

The Artmobile will be located in the parking lot on the mall.

Teachers Of Singing Name Fleshman 1st.

The Music Department of Longwood is proud to announce the selection of Miss Elizabeth Ann Fleshman as first place winner in the college sophomore women's division of the annual Southeastern Regional Auditions of the National Association of Teachers of Singing. On November 11-12 vocalists from the four states of North Carolina, South Carolina, West Virginia, and Virginia gathered in Winston-Salem, N. # U. Of Santa Clara Holds Survey Of Study Hours

SANTA CLARA, CALIF., (I.P.)

Results of the Alpha Sigma Nu study hours poll at the University of Santa Clara, according to a spokesman for the College of Arts and Sciences which sponsored the survey was twofold: first, to help individual teachers know if they are assigning too much or too little work, and secondly, to help department chairmen determine whether some part of the major program is too heavy a work load.

Each professor received the grade and amount of time spent on the course of each student, without the student's name. By comparing the amount of time spent by the "A" and "B" students to that spent by the "D" students, the professors were able to determine if they are assigning a fair amount of homework. The department chairmen received the complete program of department majors, with each student's GPA and the amount of time spent on each course. The administration stressed that there is little guarantee of the accuracy of each student's estimate; however, the average and the ability to compare students according to the grades they received should provide a reliable index. If the results are found useful by professors, and therefore, indirectly by students, the administration hopes to take a poll every winter and spring quarter, after fall and winter grades are in.

Ceramic Students Take Field Trip To Va. Museum

Ann Smith, the new resident potter at the museum, exhibited her ceramic and sculpture to the fifteen Longwood art students.

Miss Smith has both a bachelor and masters degree of fine arts in ceramics. She has recently completed a tour of Europe and is now living in residence at the museum. Her job entails teaching three classes at the museum and giving lecture-demonstrations. Like ancient potters, she makes her own domestic pottery for both useful and decorative purposes.

The art students visited Miss Smith in the Robinson House where her studios are located. Here she demonstrated the use of various equipment, materials, and methods in creating ceramic sculpture.

The art students also viewed the Bi-Annual Virginia Artists' Collection of pictures on display in the museum.

Bishop, Leitch Show Art Work In Lancaster Library Exhibit

Selected works of Miss Barbara L. Bishop, a former Roanoke artist who is now a member of the Longwood College art faculty, are being shown in a two-man exhibit on the college campus.

Showing in the exhibition room of the Lancaster Library are some 92 drawings and prints by Miss Bishop and Miss Nancy Leitch, another member of the college's art faculty. Many of the pieces are for sale.

Becoming well known as a print maker, Miss Bishop recently participated in the national print show at Peabody Teacher's College, Nashville, Tennessee, and the southeastern print and drawing show in Jacksonville, Florida.

Her present exhibit of 22 prints and drawings represents the artist's search for self and an idea. She believes that as an artist she is "linked by existence to time, place, and history, and that her beliefs, disbeliefs, affirmations and negations direct her revelation — through creation — of a unique and private vision of the world." She continually searches for an understanding of the severance of man from his earth, and the phenomena of nature.

Miss Bishop further states, "This is a world of multiplied dimensions where it is the primal instinct of man to uphold the continuing cycle of his life, and it is the challenge of the earth to hold secure the secret forms and structures of its own existence."

Most of the prints included in this exhibit are done in black and white by a print-making process called intaglio which involves an incised design on a copper or zinc plate. Other techniques of design development in the exhibit include etchings, engravings, aquatints, and soft colors.

Works of Miss Nancy V. Leitch, a former art teacher from Newport News are shown also.

An artist who favors living and natural forms for her subjects, many of Miss Leitch's drawings in this exhibit were modeled by living animals. She has spent many hours in zoos around the country observing and memorizing characteristic movements and structural details of animals. She prefers to let her drawings speak for themselves rather than comment upon what she has hoped to accomplish in her artistic efforts.

She states that drawing presents a challenge to both skill and thought for it requires long visual (training to develop the ability to separate as well as synthesize the qualities one wishes to emphasize. Many of her drawings are the groundwork for creations in another medium, such as sculpture, in which she is an accomplished worker.

As a graduate of Carnegie Institute of Technology, Miss Leitch studied under the Swedish sculptor, Carl Milles. She also studied ceramics under Maja Grotell at Cranbrook Academy of Art.

Winner of many awards, she is represented in both private and public collections abroad, as well as in the United States.

Science Department Has Recent Seminars

By KAREN CAMPBELL

On December 1, 1966, a chemistry seminar was held at 7 p.m. in Stevens Hall. The guest speaker, Mr. Joseph J. Law, led a discussion on "Activation Analysis." The discussion centered around a method of elemental analysis, theory, handling of samples and applications.

On December 6, Dr. Carl W. Vermuelen, assistant Professor of Biology at William and Mary College, conducted a joint Biology Seminar with the biology staff and students of both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney Colleges. The topic of discussion was "The Genetic Mapping of the Reboscum RNA Law in E. coli and the Direction of Chromosome Replication in HRF Strains: The Mapping of an Ur-gene."

Dr. Vermuelen did his undergraduate work at Hope College, Holland, Michigan. He received his M. A. in Biochemistry, and, under the direction of Professor Kimball C. Attwood, a Doctorate in the area of microbial genetics from the University of Illinois.

After the seminar, Dr. Vermuelen discussed the opportunities for advanced work at William and Mary.

Lychne Society sponsored Dr. S. J. Kilpatrick, Jr., who spoke on Biometry and the graduate school program offered at the Medical College of Virginia, on December 5, 1966 in Stevens Hall at 7:00 p.m. Dr. Kilpatrick is especially interested in contacting seniors who wish to become full time graduate students, who have demonstrated ability in pure or applied mathematics, and who are interested in a research or teaching career.

Loss Of Versatility Greatest Fault In Siedzieniewska Performance

By RUTH MOREHEAD

One of the greatest challenges that even the most accomplished musician may encounter is to present a recital of works by one and only one composer. Either by programming selections that have the same idiomatic sound or by concentrating on one specific aspect of a composer's style, the impact of a versatile performance may be lost. Perhaps this is the outstanding weakness of the piano recital of Chopin's works given by Halina Siedzieniewska on November 8 at the Artist Series.

To this writer Miss Siedzieniewska failed to capture the subtle nuances that characterize Chopin as one of the most prolific and versatile composers for piano. In fact, it seems the performer took the entire first half of the program to "warm up" to the instrument upon which she was playing.

Although Miss Siedzieniewska tended to emphasize the soft and more reflective passages of Chopin throughout the program, the first half seemed to face with-in one dynamic level. Because of this, the Nocturnes, Mazurkas, the Polonaises seemed to have the same tonal color and quality which should not be the case in Chopin's works.

However, during the second portion of the program, it seems the pianist finally found her instrument. With each piece she progressively came closer to the sound that typifies Chopin.

Perhaps the most outstanding part of the program was the "Marcia Funebre" from the "Sonata in B flat minor." Miss Siedzieniewska showed a definitely sensitive understanding of the phrasing. Adept was she at displaying the touch needed to convey the emotional impact of one of the most famous funeral marches in the piano repertoire today.

It is indeed unfortunate that due to either poor programming or over concentration upon one particular aspect of Chopin's style, the potential displayed in the second half of the program was not evidenced in the first.

Players Sponsor Play Try-outs On January 4, 5

Try-outs for next semester's plays are to be held in Jarman Auditorium January 4th and 5th, the first Wednesday and Thursday after Christmas vacation.

The first play for second semester is "The Chinese Wall," a cinematic theatrical experience written by the contemporary Swiss playwright Max Frisch. Dr. Patton Lockwood is the director. There are 8 women's speaking roles, two of which are major parts, and 42 male roles. Rehearsals for "The Chinese Wall" are scheduled to start soon after second semester begins. The performance date is set for March 9, 10, and 11.

For the last production during this school year, the Players and Jongleurs will present a fast moving musical, "Stop The World I Want To Get Off," written by Anthony Newley. Mr. Dale Melsen, the director, says that there are approximately 15 female roles which require singing and mime. The play will be performed May 11, 12 and 13.

Wednesday, January 4th, auditions will be conducted in Jarman Auditorium from 2 to 4 p.m. That night try-outs will be held in Johns Auditorium at Hampden-Sydney from 7 to 9 p.m. Transportation will be provided. During the afternoon of Thursday, January 5th, from 2 to 4 p.m. auditions will be held in Jarman Auditorium and again that night from 8:30 to 10 p.m. All interested students regardless of your specific talent—acting, dancing, or singing, are invited to the try-outs Jan. 4th and 5th. Those interested in working on costumes, lights, scenery, makeup, sound or publicity are urged to come also and leave your name with either of the directors. The faculty is invited to come try-out for parts in "The Chinese Wall."

FROM THE BOARD

The Legislative Board wants to bring the following information to your attention:

TEN-DAY PERIOD: The Ten-Day Period beginning January 9-18 will regulate student initiated activities and dorm study conditions. It will be carried out in the following ways:

I. During the first five days of the ten-day period, January 9-13, all students will be encouraged to promote quiet on the halls in order to create an effective atmosphere for study.

A. Regular House Council regulations concerning quiet on the halls will be strictly enforced.

B. Relative quiet will be expected all day during this period.

II. The five days prior to exams, January 14 to January 18, will be considered a strict quiet period and will be enforced by the House Council.

A. Complete quiet will be expected at all times during these days.

B. Any girl who gives another girl a call down for excessive noise during the five-day period preceding exams.

C. These regulations will apply to the exam period as well.

III. No organization or college related activity shall hold meetings during the entire ten days preceding the exam period or during the exam period. The Judicial Board and the House Council will be two exceptions. They may meet if the need arises.

The Board's office will regulate any class activities such as field trips during this period.

The Board has always been approached during exam time concerning testing during the week before exams. In checking into this matter, the Board made the administration aware of student opinion and also discovered that a faculty Ad Hoc Committee on final examinations is working on this and other similar areas relating to testing.

LIBRARY HOURS: There have been recent requests concerning extending the library hours until 11:00 p.m. on week nights. This idea has been discussed with the library staff and observations are now being made by the staff to determine the necessity of having the library open later at night.

DON'T FORGET . . . Visa Cards, a discount card, are being sold to the student body for $1.00. These cards are useful in 14 states and with them comes certain area booklets for the Richmond and Washington areas which offer specific benefits to students who have Visa cards. Cards will be sold in the Rotunda or can be purchased from freshmen representative Jeanne Kay, N. C. 280 and Rita Matthews, Ruffner 321.

STUDENT HANDBOOK: Congratulations to Margaret Bridges, the "Student Handbook" editor for 1967. Assisting her will be Lynn Rachel and typist

Patsy Peach. CULTURAL AFFAIRS: Look at the Cultural Affairs Bulletin Board occasionally. There may be events of interest to you in nearby cities. Also, support the Artmobile this week.

MAY DAY: The following proposals have been accepted for May Day 1967:

1. The court will represent an even distribution from each class. The Freshman, Sophomore and Junior classes will each elect 4 girls to be on the court. The Seniors will elect 6 girls. From these 6 Seniors, the student body will elect a queen and maid of honor.

2. Pan Hal is being contacted about the possibility of sponsoring a concert or hotpot on the Friday night preceding May Day.

3. The May Day activities for Saturday will include a special luncheon in the dining hall, the dell program, where the court will be introduced and the skills presented, and a tea at the dell following the program. The afternoon will include open house in the dorms at the approval of the House Association. At night, there will be a semiformal dance in honor of the court. The theme of the weekend will be based on May Day around the World.

4. Both faculty and students will be asked to help make May Day a success. It is still in the planning stage this semester, but the idea will be put into action next semester. Check with Carolyn McAdoo and Joan West if you have any suggestions.

ID CARDS: ID Cards will be necessary to register second semester. See Mr. Magnusson if you have lost yours or do not have one.

SCA INSTALLATION ASSEMBLY will be on January 5, 1967. The officers will officially begin their duties on January 31.

Professors Plan Varied Activity During Holidays

During the Christmas holidays, several faculty members of the English department from Longwood are going to attend meetings. Longwood College will be represented at the MLA (Modern Language Association) Convention in New York on December 27-29 by Miss Douglas, Mr. Blackwell, Miss Frischie, Mrs. Hooker, Miss Okawa, Miss Seidell, Miss Sprague and Mr. Stuart.

Dr. Lockwood and Mr. Melsen, from the speech department will be attending the convention of the Speech Association of America in Chicago at the same time.

None of the faculty members who will be attending the two conventions have any plans to present speeches. The purpose of the trips is to observe the speakers and gain new insights into the advances in the English and Speech fields.

Beore Eh Thorn Holds Annual Fall Initiation

Beore Eh Thorn, Longwood's honorary English society, held its annual initiation on December 7 in the Student Lounge. New members welcomed into the society were Vivian Gale, Anne Smith, Mrs. Lynda Jennings, Janet Ester, Jo Ann Atwell, Cynthia Nullally, Christine Dixon, Bruce Flournoy, Lella Allison, Susan Trainer, Maude Young, Nila Stevens, Linda Schultz, Mrs. Cherry Carey, Suzanne Wright, Phyllis Hummer, Kathy Scott, Ginny Hammond, Lynn Gardner, Martha Tve, and Linda Schnatler. Beore Eh Thorn, formerly opened only to majors in English, is now open to majors in other fields that relate to literature, such as French, Spanish, and other languages.

An impressive initiation ceremony was conducted by Kay Moore, president of Beore Eh Thorn. Pat Damera, secretary of the society, introduced a distinguished couple to the group—Mr. and Mrs. James M. Grainger. Mr. Grainger was chairman of the department of English at Longwood College from 1910-1950, forty years. During this time he made many contributions to Longwood and the state of Virginia. He was co-founder of the Virginia Association of the Teachers of English, which publishes the "Virginia English Bulletin." Mr. Grainger was also very influential in the founding of Kappa Delta Pi on the Longwood Campus. He contributed to the founding of the "Colomade," now the "Gyre," an always a grand support to "The Rotunda." (Incidentally, Mr. Grainger later remarked that the first few issues of "The Rotunda" were called "The Dummy," (a term used by printer to identify one phase of the printing process.) The group in attendance felt an even greater kinship to Mr. Grainger in that he was one of the founders of Beore Eh Thorn. It was a special privilege to have him with the society at such a time of transition. Beore Eh Thorn has applied for admission into the International Honor Society, Lambda Iota Tau, and hopes to be admitted some time this year. At this time Beore Eh Thorn will acquire a new name and membership requirements will be more rigid. Members must submit a scholarly paper for admission besides having the required average.

Mr. Grainger captured his at tentive audience with stories and anecdotes of his days at Longwood College. He related some of his personal experiences with speakers who had been brought to the campus by Beore Eh Thorn such as Robert Frost and Carl Sandberg. (Did you know the Carl Sandberg was once an amored by some L. C. girls? Mrs. Grainger also related some personal anecdotes about Robert Frost.

Mr. Grainger had with him several cherished, autographic books such as "Salvator Fata," by Robert P. Tristram Coffey and "North of Boston," by Robert B. Frost, which he unselfishly donated to Beore Eh Thorn with the suggestion and hope of starting a rare book collection. He also wishes to donate "Millions of Years," by Salomatus, volume published in 1649, over 300 years ago.

These gifts were gratefully accepted by the chapter president with the intention of starting a memorable collection.

A reception followed the program. It was truly a memorable event.

Madrigal Singers Present Concert For Christmas

Ann Fleishman, contralto, sang "Then Shall the eyes of the blind be opened," and "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd" (Continued on Page 4)

The Walking Of Chi

By JENNY YOUNG

"Was three weeks before Christmas and all through the dorm, Not a creature was stirring, 'cause it was too warm. The students were nestled all snug in their beds, While visions of vacation danced in their heads. And Sandie in her nightgown and I without cap, Had just settled down for a long winter's nap. When up on third floor there arose such a clatter, I sprang from my bed to see what was the matter. There was no moon, no new fallen snow, The lights from the hotel cast a hideous glow. Down the hall to a window I flew like a flash, Peered into the darkness, and I heard them exclaim—'they had vanished from sight—' 'Chi is watching you,' at five thirty last night."

Artmobile Show To Tour State College Campuses

"The chance that these Colleges would ever acquire such collections of original art seemed to grow dimmer in proportion to the ever more costly art education."

Spoke Leslie Cheek, Jr., director of the Virginia Museum, in assessing the collections of significant art owned by Virginia's colleges and universities. His statement ultimately led to the formation of an educational program unique in the history of art education.

Director Cheek's plan was heard last spring by presidents and art department heads of sixteen Colleges. The result: Artmobile IV, the "Collegiate Artmobile," arrived on campus December 12. Inside, students saw relics of the four early major civilizations: Sumerian, Egyptian, Grecian, and Roman. Thirty-nine art objects, some nearly 4,500 years old, are exhibited. All are normally on display or in storage at the Virginia Museum, the Commonwealth's statewide center for the performing arts.

Artmobile IV's primary audience is the student population of the sixteen Virginia schools. Its exhibitions, therefore, are conceived on a more academic level.

The Collegiate Artmobile program calls for, among other things: Artmobile's chairman on campus; an Artmobile coordinator at the Richmond headquarters building; a special Artmobile advisor to evaluate the entire program; two exhibitions annually; and selection of exhibitions by consensus of the Artmobile chairman. An orientation program is to be administered by the colleges with the aid of the Museum and a grant of $1,500 from the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

The entire operation, therefore, over its beginning to generous donors, the Museum staff involved in the system since its inception thirteen years ago, and some hard-earned experience.

On a larger scale, Artmobile IV is the result of a speech in the year 1934, when Governor George C. Peery, declared that the purpose of the new Museum was "to study, represent, and preserve the artistic culture of the Commonwealth and . . . foster the love, progress, and understanding of art and beauty for the people of the State." Since then, the Museum's administration and staff have taken this pledge literally and in the process have formed the nation's first statewide art center . . . one meant to serve all the people of the Commonwealth.

Other examples of this "statewide" philosophy are a wide selection of traveling exhibitions, slide sets and films, distributed by the Museum's State Service Department; a system of chapters and affiliates located throughout the State; and this year, for the first time, a touring professional drama troupe which will perform in 20 Virginia communities.

Stepping right into this statewide network, Artmobile IV will visit the colleges and universities over a four-month period this fall and winter. It will be back next semester with a different specially-prepared exhibition.

Reflections On Ourselves

Dear Students, Faculty Members and Administration, Christmas is that magic time of year when everyone, no matter what their age, should reflect on their past life, and try to think about what is ahead for them in these changing times. All too often we make many false promises to ourselves concerning our own personalities, and feelings, and attitudes. At Christmas, for instance, we all try to appear to be the very concerned, appreciative, and generous individual, when the remaining portion of the year we are still our same old hypocritical selves. And the magic of this season only seems to make our false feelings worse.

This Christmas, The Rotunda would like to see everyone think about themselves in the light of truth. For once, why don't we try to be truly penitent and thoughtful of each other? In a season when we preach brotherly love, why not really practice it? There is nothing wrong in admitting that we have been wrong before, but there is something wrong if we do not now realize our past injustices. The time for a change is now. With the beautiful decorations, and singing, and happiness we see about us, it is a shame that we cannot be honest with ourselves, it would be so easy to do. Most of us have sincere, deep, religious feelings inside, which we would never bare to anyone. Christmas is the season for us to put aside our fears, and show others we are not ashamed to say that we need that stronger crutch of idealistic, religious, attitude to keep us going in this wide world. There is nothing to fear about being proudly religious.

So, with the 1966 Christmas Season upon us, The Rotunda brings its Christmas message in the form of a wish, and a hope, that all of us will try to be more sincere individuals, and that we will make this time of the year one of real meaning, and that we will be able to gain genuine foresight about ourselves and our future.

With all good wishes for a Joyous Christmas Holiday,
Signed,
The Rotunda

Dreambeau Of The Week

The Christmas tree, decorated by the Freshman Commission, standing in The Rotunda.

Doors that have been decorated give the dormitories the Christmas spirit.

A part of the tradition of Longwood College is the door-decoration contest at Christmas sponsored by the Y.W.C.A. Two first prizes are awarded in each dorm, one for the best religious theme and one for the best secular theme. This year the following rooms were awarded first prizes for the religious theme: Student 304, Tabb 320, Ruffner 206, Post Office 312, North Cunningham 164, Main Cunningham 336 and 337, Wheeler 217, and Cox 107. The awards for the secular theme went to: Student 307, Tabb 310, South Cunningham 221, Ruffner 320, Post Office 305, North Cunningham 276, Main Cunningham 151, Wheeler 211, Cox 110, and Stubbs 310. Honorable Mentions were received by Student 301 and 312, Tabb 217, Wheeler 313, 109, 110, 308, and 121, and Cox 111.

The doors are judged on the basis of originality, theme, attractiveness, neatness, and creativity. The judges were Miss Barbara Bishop, Miss Nancy Andrews, Miss Mary Seidell, Miss Sally Bush, Mr. Louis Fawcett, and Mr. James Gusselt. A winning hall is also chosen from among the dormitories. The girls on the hall are awarded a party with cake and ice cream through the courtesy of Mr. M. J. Pennock.

THE VARIED SMELLS OF SUCCESS

A rose by any other name might smell as sweet, but it won't cost as much. That is the message wafting out from the scent industry which, you might say is doing a land-office business. At least if my nose and their advertising budgets are any indicator.

You'll notice that I haven't referred to it as the perfume industry, and with good reason. Perfume is only a drop in the bucket. Not that it is doing badly, but it gets stiff competition from the various preparations that seem to serve specific purposes such as after-shave or after-bath freshener, but that are really around purely for olfactory purposes. That they may tingle, soften, lighten, cleanse, restore—that's all very nice, but if they didn't smell pretty, where would they be? Not tingling, softening, tightening, cleansing or restoring, you can bet. They would never have made it to the store shelf.

And the ways in which they are making it to the stores is quite sparkling and very Madison-Avenue-swinging-sixties. Packaging is improving on new products and as women's scents look prettier and prettier, men's are so rugged sounding and looking that you feel satisfied if you don't buy one. Of course they try hard not to call it perfume for the men: instead it bears such pragmatic titles as after-shave lotion, toner, freshener, and other still more ingenious names.

Women too have lots of categories to select from: besides perfume and old-fashioned cologne and toilet water, there are after-bath fresheners and bath oils, all strongly scented and frequently coordinated to other scented products you may also indulge yourself in. Hair spray has just recently become a product valued at least equally for its scent as its holding power, as major perfume companies enter the field with gusto and also perfume and capital.

So, if the smell itself doesn't immediately grab you, and if the ultra-chic packaging job doesn't compel you to purchase, then the signature endorsement of some well-known but hungry high fashion designer is expected to. Of course the rash of couture perfumes to burst forth make the choosing process somewhat more complex, but the pie is probably big enough for everyone.

There is one interesting thing about the scent scene: you can't fool anyone. Or, to put it another way, you automatically announce to everyone how much money you—or he—shelled out. It is conspicuous consumption at its most conspicuous. If you are wearing an expensive designer's dress, no one can be sure exactly whose it is and what you paid for it. But the smell ah, no two are alike and it doesn't take a practiced sniffer to identify them. Which makes perfume and its lesser relatives a status symbol in the same class as automobiles: they don't leave much to the imagination.

FASHION MIRROR

It's hard to find a fashion idea that smacks of newness—and of course it is only new until someone notices it. A likely candidate for imitation is the step-in coat which is exactly what its name says it is. Sporty in feel and definitely not for important occasions, it would lose some of its appeal if worn on a day when you're in and out of buildings, in and out of your coat. For if it goes over your head, there goes your hairdo, and if you step into it, well, that isn't the sort of thing one comfortably finds oneself doing in the supermarket or your favorite department store. You could really lose your cool trying that in a crowded spot.

Still, the coat has appeal for its sportive look and original if gimmicky aspects. Don't be surprised to see it around, on towards spring.

FASHION TIP

A new trend is starting in fabrics for holiday and early spring. It replaces tropical Gaudin prints and granny calicos, and it may even unsettle the brightly abstract geometrical patterns that certain women adore. It's called animals, and while they're hardly new, having been around for several millennia, they haven't really made it big with the fashion world in quite some time. If it all doesn't come to a grinding halt, you should soon be seeing all kinds of jungle beasts, with stylized and realistic in bright, strong printed fabrics of various weights and purposes. So, get ready for the imminent switch from flora to fauna—it ought to be fun for a change.

from "The Messiah." Carolyn Brockmeyer, soprano, sang "Come Unto Him, all ye that labour," also from "The Messiah." Both girls were accompanied by Laura Clark on the piano.

The second group of songs contained "In Natali Domini," "A Christmas Carol," and "Sycamore Tree," Jeanne Powell, soprano, sang the "Magnificat" from "The Nativity According to Saint Luke" by Thompson. Janice Austin accompanied her on the piano.

The last group of songs the Madrigals sang included "The Birth of Our Lord," by the contemporary composer Martin, and "Psallite" by Praetorius.

The Madrigal Singers are under the direction of Mr. James McCombs. The officers this year are President, Phala Leggett, Secretary-Treasurer, Carolyn Brockmeyer, and Librarian, Sarah Gibbons.

Sportsman Spotlight Shines On Gallahan

Spotlight on Dumb Dumb, please! Would you believe that Connie Gallahan's supervisor during student teaching called her Dumb Dumb? And how many times did Connie split her shorts while teaching? Patrick Henry High School in Roanoke will never again be the same!

All joking aside for a moment, Connie did a wonderful job teaching Field Hockey and Health Education to her students. Connie's achievements at L. C. include playing three years of Varsity Basketball, three years of Varsity Hockey, two years of Varsity Archery, and one year of Varsity Golf. She has often participated in class tennis and badminton as well as class and color softball and volleyball. Officiating is another area of Physical Education which Connie enjoys and it is an area in which she is quite good. For her active participation and spirit, Connie was awarded a white L. C. blazer earlier this year. She is also a member of the Monogram Club.

Did you know that Connie's favorite pastime is going to burlesque shows? Much of her time is also spent taking care of an adopted child - Dink Cundiff! Connie craves the color pink, I hear that she's developed a sudden dislike of scrambled eggs - especially on her car. What's this about the eight year old boy who used to live down the street from her? Would you believe that Connie Gallahan actually rolled her hair every night during student teaching. ## Gymnasts Hold Meeting New Members Invited Potential gymnasts attended their first meeting last Wednesday at 4 p.m. in Gym 3. Approximately 16 girls practiced skills on the horse and uneven bars. "It was loads of fun!" reported Freshman, Linda Paris.

Gymnastics helps to develop agility, grace, style, balance, timing, and muscle control as well as instilling leadership and sportsmanship. And of course, it's a great way to get exercise and have fun at the same time! The girls are already starting to work up routines in preparation for gymnastics meets and will soon begin training in the skills of judging meets.

If you have any interest in gymnastics, take advantage of this opportunity to learn and improve your skill and ability. The present members are quite willing to help in teaching skills and fundamentals to those who have no experience. Practices are held each Wednesday from 4 to 6 p.m. in Gym 3. If you have any question please contact Miss Andrews or Tommy Stone in M.C. 343. Come out and join in the fun!

1967 Junior Weekend Features Swingin' Singers, Southern Setting

By GWYN MUSE

Hours of planning, months of meetings, and two and one-half years of expectation will come to an end Saturday, February 25, when the juniors step into the spotlight as the Class of 1968. The Junior Weekend will begin with a concert featuring The Swingin' Medallions from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. in Jarman Hall, and the third annual Ring Dance, beginning at 8 p.m. and lasting until 12 midnight, will be held in the Senior Dining Hall. Providing the music for this occasion will be "The Rhondels," a diversified dance band well-known in this area. A breakfast for Juniors and their dates will bring the weekend's activities to a close.

The two-hour concert Saturday afternoon will feature one of popular music's newest and most in demand groups, The Swingin' Medallions. Long popular as top choices for college parties in the South, the eight young Medallions achieved national fame through their recordings of "Double Shot (Of My Baby's Love)" and "She Drives Me Out of My Mind."

heart of Dixie" and "rather uninhibited Southern Gentlemen." The members of the group hail from South Carolina and Georgia, and several of them proudly display their Southern accents.

The group could very well be known as the "versatile" Swingin' Medallions. Guitar, drum, piano, sax, and flute are a few of the musical instruments the guys play well, and several double on two instruments.

Their enthusiastic performances have been well-received at several colleges in Virginia, among them RPI, where the Medallions played for a packed house. Tickets for their Longwood performance went on sale today in the Rotunda to the whole student body.

The Third Annual Ring Dance, a renovation of the Cotillion Dances formerly held at Longwood, will highlight the weekend activities. The theme of this year's dance centers around the Old South. The highlight of the evening will be the performance of the traditional Ring Figure, during which each Junior will receive her ring from her escort.

The Rhondels from Virginia Beach will provide music for the evening. Well-known along the east coast, the group, officially known as "Big Deal and The Rhondels," is quite versatile. They are widely known not only as a swinging rock n' roll band, but also as one of the best small orchestral dance bands in the state of Virginia. Probably best known as the regular band at the "Top Hat" in Virginia Beach, The Rhondels have appeared as back-up band for many show business personalities, as well as appearing for every occasion from teenage club parties to formal adult New Year's Eve dances. The Rhondels will be making their second appearance at Longwood; their first was in February 1966 when they played for the Second Annual Ring Dance.

Numerous committees have spent many hours of hard work and much planning to make the Junior Weekend a success. All involved deserve recognition for their time and effort. Patsy Diehr and Sherry Grimes are co-chairmen for the Ring Dance. Individual committee chairmen are as follows: Decorations, Smitty Smith; Ring Figure, Jeanne Overman; Breakfast, Kay Boykin; Favors, Susan Barwick; Refreshments, Carol Blythe and Kathy Kampe; Dance Programs, Frances Scott; Tickets, Phyllis Hummer; Ushers, Nancy Robinson; Publicity, Joette Bailey; Flowers, Ella McDade; Invitations, Martha Mullins; Gifts, Kathy Stone and Mary Franklin Green; Chaperones, Barbara Hooper, and Photographer, Alice Reene.

L. C. Honorary Business Society Installs FBLa

Thursday, February 9, was a memorable day for the business students of Bluestone High School, Mecklenburg County, for on this day Phi Beta Lambda representatives from Longwood visited their school to establish an official Future Business Leaders of America chapter. Future Business Leaders of America, an association of students following a business curriculum, is the equivalent of Phi Beta Lambda on the high school level. The ceremony was attended by Mrs. Frances Hamlet, sponsor of Phi Beta Lambda, and Carol Bradley, Carol Anthony, Jean Oakley, Joyce Harris, and Betty Bynson, who represented Phi Beta Lambda at the installation.

Future activities planned for Phi Beta Lambda members include being host to the Longwood Region Future Business Leaders of America Regional Convention on March 11. Also, a state convention for Phi Beta Lambda is scheduled for April 7-9 at Natural Bridge.

Pi Delta Epsilon Holds Initiation; Plans Contest

Pi Delta Epsilon, the journalism fraternity activated last year "strives everywhere to teach the ethics, techniques and mechanics of journalism." In addition, the Longwood chapter will sponsor the annual spring literary contest at the college this year.

Recently, Freda Richards, president of the fraternity this year, conducted a meeting of all new members who have been asked to join the honorary organization.

Those asked to join from "The Rotunda" staff include Carolyn Somma, Linda Shell, Diane Bosher, Priscilla Farmer, Carol Skelley, Gwyn Muse, Ginny Sirci, Leslie Sedgwick and Cheryl Stine. Members asked from the "Virginian" staff are Marilyn Taylor, Margaret Robinson, Becky Easter, Martha Willson, Judy Chandler, Sally Whitting, Carol Anthony, and Gail Goches. Susan Bestley and Donna Barnes will join from the "Gyre" staff.

Today at 5:00 p.m., the junior class members mentioned above were initiated. Their sponsor is Mr. Paul Hughes, a professor in the English department at Longwood.

Dr. Brooks To Resign, Assume W&M Position

By IDA MAYE SIMMONS

Dr. Richard B. Brooks, dean of Longwood College since 1964, will become Dean of the School of Education of the College of William and Mary, on September 1, 1967. Dr. Brooks joined the Longwood College faculty in 1957 as an associate professor of education. In 1959, he became Chairman of the Department of Education, Psychology, and Philosophy, a position he held until 1964 when he became Dean of the College.

Dr. Brooks will succeed Dr. M. K. Holland who had resigned the opportunity to devote full time to teaching and research in the School of Education. Dr. Davis Y. Paschall, President of William and Mary, said that Dr. Brooks "brings to his position first hand knowledge of educational development systems involving Virginia's public school system." The Dean holds an undergraduate degree from Springfield College, a master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania and a doctorate in Education from the University of Virginia.

Dr. Brooks has taught at Cherry Lawn School, the University of Pennsylvania, and Colby College. He was a member of the William and Mary Psychology Department and Director of Counseling. Dr. Brooks will return to William and Mary for the third time. As a ten-year member of the faculty and administration, he has many friends and acquaintances in Williamsburg. However, Dr. and Mrs. Brooks "will be looking forward to the future at William and Mary with many misgivings as we have enjoyed Longwood and Farmville, both."

Dr. James H. Newman, President of Longwood College, issued the following statement February 10, 1967:

"We congratulate Dean Brooks on his position as Dean of the College of Education at William and Mary. It is a distinct mark of confidence for him to be invited to return to William and Mary and to return as Dean of the College of Education."

"Longwood College is losing a very valued member of its faculty and administration. He has made a great contribution to Longwood as a faculty member and as Dean of the College."

"Dean Brooks is held in high regard here by both faculty and students. We believe he will always be a friend of Longwood and that his interest in the College will never lapse. We shall miss him but we wish him well in his new position."

LC Committee Names Gardner "Best-Dressed"

By CAROL SKELLEY

Leigh Gardner has been chosen to represent Longwood College in "Glamour" magazine's "Ten Best-Dressed College Girls" Contest for 1967. Leigh is a junior majoring in Elementary Education. She is from Buena Vista. Her sole comment was, "You're kidding!" She said her "mother would be very pleased" because, typical of most mothers, Leigh's thinks she has too many clothes!

Leigh was chosen from semi-finalists Maureen Luby, Jennifer Camper, Alice Rennie, Barbara Hooper, Pam Kerber, Kitt Sweety, Marla Lyon, Judy Jerrill, Betty Patterson, and Patsy Peach. These semi-finalists were nominated by various groups and individuals on campus.

The contest was sponsored by the "Rotunda" staff, who chose the judges for the contest. Judy Johnston was chairman of the committee which included Mrs. Griffin, Mrs. Simmons, Mr. Woodburn, Lindy Schaperjahn, Gail Stell, and Nancy Maxey. The contestants met with the faculty judges for individual conferences as well as having dinner with all the judges February 3 and attending a tea in their honor, February 13.

Sophomores Undergo

'Educational Experiment'

Sophomore students at Longwood are being administered Comprehensive College Tests this week on Tuesday, February 14, and on Thursday, February 16, from 1 to 5 p.m. in Jarman Hall.

All sophomores are required to take these tests which are offered by the College Entrance Examination Board, a non-profit membership organization whose tests and other educational services are available to all schools and colleges. The membership is composed of more than 600 colleges as well as schools and educational associations. In 1965, the College Entrance Examination Board created a Council on College-Level Examinations to "improve access to, and appropriate placement in, higher education; to facilitate student mobility and individual development; and to encourage better utilization of human resources by providing opportunities for educational advancement."

The Comprehensive Tests are intended to provide a measure of undergraduate achievement in the five basic areas of the liberal arts—English Composition, Humanities, Mathematics, Natural Sciences, and Social Sciences—History. They do not attempt to measure advanced training in any specific discipline, but rather to assess the student's knowledge of fundamental facts and concepts, and his understanding of the basic principles of the subject. The content of the examinations is similar to the content of those subjects ordinarily included in

"The Inheritor"

Stopped to look in a mirror lately? Notice anything new or gratifying?

"The Inheritor," Man of 1966," the lead story in the January 6 issue of Time magazine should certainly lure each one of us to take a closer look at ourselves. Are we really the individuals of the year?

According to Time, "the Man of the Year 1966" is a generation: the man — and woman — 40 and under. That's us — you and I. Time's "Old Man of the Year" is not an individual, but a generation — today's youth.

The Man of the Year is usually the individual who has most occupied the year's headlines, for better or for worse. But Time has discovered that sometimes a group best typifies the year's history, such as the "American Fighting Man" during the Korean War in 1950, or the "Hungarian Freedom Fighter" who rose against Soviet power in 1956.

Time predicts that our generation will soon be the majority in charge. In 1970 there will be 100 million young Americans in the 25 and under bracket. Is it logical that these millions of young voices should be heard as the sound of the time? We believe it is.

Labelled by Time's editors as "the most intensely discussed and dissected generation in history," today's "Now Generation" is unique. Never have the young been so "alienated," so "uncommitted," so "assertive," so "artistic," so "well-educated," so "affluent," so "rebellious," so "responsible," so "wordly," so "pragmatic," so "idealistic," so "brave," so "hopeful." Being a highly independent generation, we stand highly unpredictable in the eyes of our elders. Time tells us that we are "not just a new generation, but a new kind of generation." We are what's happening today.

According to Time: "Despite his tolerance of quixotic causes and idiosyncratic roles, the Man of the Year reflects — more accurately than he might care to admit — many of the mainstream currents in society at large." These currents being reflected include the war in Viet Nam, the turbulence in China, the attempts to build the Great Society in our country, and "the obverse side of the Puritan ethic — that hard work is good for its own sake." Our youthful generation is epitomizing the definition of talent by Henry James as "the art of being completely whatever one happened to be." Everyday our "Now Generation" is making the headlines, whether it be in space exploration, or working with Operation Head Start, or marching in favor of racial integration.

Time says the philosophy of the Man of the Year is immediate — he is living now, today, this minute; he is living not simply preparing to live. His immediate interests, including the "pill," the "pot," the "tube," and "Snoopy for President," are being discussed in discotheques or espresso shops throughout the country. Everywhere students are under social and academic pressures, but are adhering to Kierkegaard's philosophy when he said: "The desire to avoid definition is a proof of tact." Never before has a generation been so caught up with society yet with such varied spirit.

"For better or for worse," says Time, "the world today is committed to accelerating change," and our generation has grown up with this change. "The Man of the year" suggests that he will infuse the future with a new sense of morality, a transcendental and contemporary ethic that could infinitely enrich the "empty society."

Time's presentation of "The Inheritor" gives each of us something to think about as members of the "Now Generation." Again ask yourself, when did I last stop to look in a mirror?

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

If Eric Berne should decide to write a book entitled, "Games College Students Play," at least one chapter should be devoted to Longwood and our impressive list of pastimes, habits, and behavior. Typical example of games Longwood students play — The Great Scramble. This phenomenon occurs whenever students must sign up for tables in the dining hall, and one of the best games of Great Scramble ever played took place last week in the Senior Dining Hall. For all who missed the event and for those who don't know how to play, a quick rundown of the procedure:

All players assemble on the battlefield (that is, playing area), smile and say "Hi!" — a diversionary tactic to make other players think they're not really that interested in playing the game — and take their places on the outskirts of the battle area (in this case, just outside the tables). At the appointed time, established beforehand by the referees (House Association — all players Scramble; that is, push, run, kick, shove, snarl, growl, leap, all the while attempting to elapse their hands on the back of a chair, and to hold their position until the major action is over. One important reminder — this should be done with as much savagery as one can muster. After all chairs have been grabbed, the Signing takes place. This is the resolution of the Scramble, and is somewhat comparable to the signing of a peace treaty. Signing one's name to the Great Scramble insures the player of not having to Scramble again for another semester, except on weekends when the rules are modified and the results are somewhat less deadly. For those who fail to meet the requirements of Great Scramble, a consolation game is offered — Take What You Can Get. But that's another area and a new game, and must less prestigious than the rigors of Great Scramble.

And in the Sundry Item Department: Many ideas on how to make exam periods less tedious, less maddening, and a bit more bearable have come and gone over the years. We've had Cheerful Cherubs and special dinners, but whoever started the Epidemic was a genius. A genius like Hitler.

Nineteen Sixty-Six . . A Kicky Kind Of Year

(ACP) — 1966 was a year of schizophrenia with pizzazz, according to the University of Kansas "Daily Kansan."

It was the year that launched the Yellow Submarine, the "Kansan" noted, then almost sank John Lennon.

It was the year skirts went up and hair came down. Men cheered the change, even if it meant girls had to roll two feet of hair on soup cans. Tom the Peepster never had it so good when girls tried to sit down in their high-high mini-skirts. Modesty died an awkward death.

And it was the year topless clubs spread coast to coast, but one club, apparently unsure that the body was really all that beautiful, asked patrons to sign a statement saying their morals weren't being corrupted.

In passing, it was a good year, if you weren't I-A, afraid of becoming I-A, or in Vietnam. The emphasis was on youth, and adults responded. Sometimes this response caused a few lifted eyebrows, however.

Justice William O. Douglas married a 23-year-old college coed, Cathleen Heffernan, and Congressional tongues wagged. Frank Sinatra married that 21-year-old Peyton Place kid and got a few sly winks. The oldsters were acting like youngsters.

Using imagination all their own, the kids turned the tables. Old movies, silent movies, older movies became a fad. The Bogie cult came on like gangbusters. Even clothing fell into step.

London mode, short on money but rich in imagination, discovered secondhand stores and the Salvation Army look. Girls looked like soldiers or sailors of pieces of high-fashion tinfoil. Shiny silver dresses and accessories became a New York rage, and women wore enough metal to make the U. S. Treasury envious.

It was also the year of the accessory with a message; lapel buttons sounded the sentiments of the moment. Campus wits wore buttons proclaiming "Hire the morally handicapped," or "Custer died for your sins." Then there was the button that read, "God is not dead; He just doesn't want to get involved."

And was God dead? If he were, the controversy over His demise generated almost enough heat to assure a second coming.

Like God, folk music went underground, and a new, homogenized sound — folk rock — rose to the surface. Enter musical groups with bizarre names and bizarre but often beautiful sounds, like the Mamas and Papas, Simon and Garfunkel.

And in 1966, Camp didn't really die, it just went on the tube. In his superkeen Batmobile with Robin at his side, Batman roared into the vast wasteland and was greeted with the biggest howl heard in a long time. Everybody over age nine knew it was designed to be High Camp . . . or was it?

So for 12 months it went — a very fine madness and a kicky kind of year.

Oleg Cassini Says

DRESS FOR THE OCCASION

The boudoir — or bedroom if you will — is usually a fairly interesting room per se, as most everyone knows. But there is nothing that can't stand a little improvement, and foolish is the woman who leaves it all to nature — especially when art in conjunction with nature will always win the day (or is it the night?).

What am I speaking of? Not what you do but merely something so simple as what you wear. This is hardly the day for any woman to be less than beautifully attired in her most private room — not when the selection available to her is so overwhelming and dazzling. There is no excuse today for any woman looking dowdy or uninteresting. And there is no excuse for any woman to be underdressed if her heart yearns for dramatic or sumptuous or swinging outfits for the intimate evenings at home.

The reason is that the old price lines for these clothes have been broken, as the at-home market has exploded into all-time popularity. No longer can you hide behind the dodge of I-can't-afford-to-look-elegant-at-home. You can afford virtually any kind of garment that your eye could fancy. You may not get silk with mink trim, but there is crepe and marabou. Then there is the woman who is always cold. She is less common in apartments, but seems to proliferate in drafty houses, both luxurious and modest. Her story has always been that she agreed that crepe, silk, tulle, lace and sexy nightgowns were good things, and that she in fact owned a fair sampling — but they were no solace for goose bumps and cold feet. Just give her a granny gown or some nice warm flannel pajamas and her drafty old castle finally seems like a home.

Now even this woman, long a mainstay of the species, is about to become extinct. She simply hasn't got any excuse left. Fashion has finally attended even to her, and she can now be both warm and winning. For instance, flannel is around, but it has given way to brushed nylon or other synthetics, and the nap is not enough. These fuzzy fabrics are fashioned into all kinds of delectables, with cowli collars and deep cuffs made of orlon pile, or trimmed with eyelid and lace and fancy frog closings. And if that isn't warm or expensive enough, you can get really beautiful nightgowns of viscose. Should that conjure up images of men's tuxedo robes, forget it. This viscose is so lightweight that it is nearly sheer, is in the gentlest of pastel hues, and is ruffled, gathered and otherwise made into truly feminine (yet warm) concoctions.

For those who are traditional in their concepts of boudoir chic, black lace is always around, but the current turned-on version is fashioned into a stretch jump suit — now how's that for updating an old and previously successful concept?

So, my loveless, whether you're a siren or a simple type, whether you lean to crepe culottes or ruffled voile, you'd better lean toward something chic and never toward boredom. Stay-at-homes never had it so good, and men are finding more and more reason to stay there with you.

FASHION MIRROR

If dresses are transparent vinyl and skirts are up to here, what better time for fashion to finally shed its benign light on your barest essentials. And of course the inevitable did happen.

Not only did new design concepts suddenly mushroom up in the underworld, but so have flowers, paisleys, prints, dots, plaids, and all manner of wild, vivid patterns. And the best of all, you can be completely coordinated, down to the last snitch of fabric you wear — you don't have to have a floral top and plaid bottom, unless that is your liking.

So, now that there is no reason left for drab, uninteresting undergarments, open your eyes and let go a little. It will change your whole outlook on lingerie, if not on life.

FASHION TIP

Winter white requires just as much accessorizing as basic black — a fact many women seem to forget. But white even asks to be doted, and can take nearly anything but unadorned pearls (if they are in a pin with

Cross Campus: Longwood Surveys College Scene

(Editor's Note: Cross Campus is a feature to inform Longwood students of news tidbits and various activities happening on other college campuses.)

At Westhampton College of the University of Richmond construction is underway on the million-dollar fine arts center on the campus. The collegiate Gothic structure will house the departments of art, drama, music, and speech, which are currently scattered in six separate locations. From the standpoint of the performing arts, the most important single unit of the fine arts building is the projected theater which will seat 746 persons.

At East Carolina College, a battle is waging between the girls of Fletcher Dorm and other girls' dorms. Seems that the Fletcher girls saved hundreds of soft drink bottles and traded them for an ice machine. Now all the girls from other dorms also wish to solicit the services of the tiny machine and are emphatically told by the Fletcher girls to save their soft drink bottles and purchase one of their own!

Muhlenberg College in Allentown, Pennsylvania reports that a reform measure to change the rule that imposes a campus as punishment for an incomplete sign-out has been successfully passed by the faculty-student affairs committee. Under the new system, a woman will receive two demerits for an incorrect or incomplete overnight sign-out, which constitutes a failure to fill in all of the required information or using false information. A campus will be issued to only those women students who completely fail to sign-out.

These services give publications a thorough criticism, noting weaknesses, suggesting improvement and measuring achievement. Publications are classified in groups according to college enrollment and frequency of issue.

College publications are rated with other papers from similar schools across the nation. Pace-maker Awards for outstanding excellence in college and university newspapers are given each semester. The awards are sponsored jointly by the American Newspaper Publishers Association and ACP.

All ACP newspaper members also receive two news services—the ACP News and Feature Service.

ice and the Business Review. The News and Feature supplies college papers with news and feature material whose value is not limited to the campuses on which the stories originate. In this week's "Rotunda" appears the first ACP feature, "1966... A Kicky Kind of Year."

ACP's Annual Conference is held in the fall of each year. Outstanding national figures in business and publication fields speak and confer with college staffs and advisers. This year Editors Susan Woltz and Phyllis Hummer attended the ACP Conference in Philadelphia, making "The Rotunda's" first impressive contacts with ACP.

"The Rotunda" is very pleased with its new membership and hopes that Longwood will find it an interesting news and feature service.

Varsity Basketball Team prepares to meet Mary Washington.

Varsity Basketball Play RPI, Lynchburg

By LESLIE SEDGWICK
Longwood Tromps RPI

To start out this season, L. C. hosted R.P.I. on January 3. The crowd of spectators watched as both teams battled not only against each other, but against the clock. The first quarter began rather slowly as each team tested each other's defense. Would it be zone or man-to-man? At the end of the quarter, L. C. led 9-7. However, R.P.I. made up for this as they ruled the court in the second quarter. At the end of the half L. C. was behind 25-19.

When the teams again stepped up to the opening jump ball, L. C. seemed determined to win the game. Outscoring R.P.I. the next two quarters, L. C. made up the big difference. But not enough to win. At the end of the normal time period, L. C. and R.P.I. both had 47 points. In a 3-minute overtime, both teams relied heavily on their defense. Longwood broke R.P.I.'s defense, scored eight points, while only allowing a field goal for the opponents. The final score was L. C. 54, R.P.I. 49.

Leading scorer was freshman Judy Turner of Longwood with 24 points as against R.P.I.'s high scorer with 22 points.

The second game was quite different. R.P.I. put up a valiant try as L. C. tromped over them. Longwood not only outscored, but outdid themselves. The first half ended with L. C. out front with 28 to 10. Then Longwood broke loose with 21 points in the third quarter and 17 in the final quarter against R.P.I.'s 6 for both quarters. The final score was 68-16. Everyone on the Longwood team was given a chance to score, but Linda McCulloch led with 14 points. But not far behind was Fran Anthony and Janice Hudgins with 13 and 12.

Charlottesville Freshman Earns 4.6 LC Average

When Freshmen received their grades in the library this past Wednesday, February 1, one girl in particular was due for a surprise. When Martha Deffenwerger reached the desk and gave her name, her achievement was announced to all the girls there. She had been the only freshman to make a 4.0!

Martha attended Albemarle High School in Charlottesville, where she was valedictorian's through both her junior and senior years. She also was editor of the annual, an extremely active member of Tri-Hi-Y, and valedictorian.

How did Martha fare so well?

Spish, Splash! Last week I got a sneak preview of the upcoming Water Show and it's going to be another great one. I haven't seen the scenery or costumes yet, but the music is really wild and the girls have spent many long hours writing and practicing their routines. Two of the tunes to which they will be swimming are "Whipped Cream" and "Greenback Dollars." One number to watch for is a duet by Lucy Flannigan and Anne Smith. On March 1, 2, and 3 the show will begin at 8 p.m. and on March 4 at 7 p.m. I predict an excellent show!

Be sure to check by the A.A. bulletin board for the intramural basketball schedule and a posting of the rules. Come on and support your class!

Remember that athletic equipment may be checked out in the locker room from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and from 1 to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, and from 9 a.m. to 12 noon on Saturday. All equipment must be returned within 24 hours except bicycles and golf clubs which have a 2 hour limit. If you need extra practice for your Physical Education classes, or if you just want to relax and have fun, utilize this equipment.

There will be a gymnastics meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in Gym 3 for all those interested in Photos of Leigh will be sent to "Glamour" magazine showing her in a typical campus outfit, an off-campus daytime outfit, and a party dress. A panel of "Glamour" editors will then select the national winners by using the same list of qualifications used in judging the local best-dressed candidates. The national winners will receive "national recognition" for themselves and their colleges in the August College Issue and in newspapers throughout the country. Also, they will receive personal gifts from "Glamour" and an all-expense-paid visit to New York City from June 5 to June 16.

"The Rotunda" would like to take this opportunity to thank Judy Johnston, committee chairman, and her panel for the splendid job they did. Also, we have the highest confidence that Leigh will be an outstanding representative of Longwood College. Congratulations and good luck!

Longwood has a two-fold purpose in mind by administering the tests. First, the results will be used by the CEEB to help establish national norms along with other parts of the country. A set of norms will also be made for Longwood. Transfer students will be required to take the test in the future as means of decision for admission and placement.

All freshmen who still have moments of "Gee, wasn't old Podunk High great?" should have been required to attend the Fabulous Five Concert. A quick look around the audience would have revealed "good old Podunk High" at its best - or worst, depending upon how one feels about Podunk. For frosh who still miss the Senior Prom - perhaps a date with one of the local go-go boys would help the situation.

College Reading Habits Reflect Dramatic Shift

NEW YORK, N. Y., (LP.)

There may have been a dramatic shift in the reading habits of college-bound youth during the past several years, according to the results of a study at Columbia College recently released.

The report reveals a trend away from the classics, British writers, and those magazines with light content, to existentialists like Camus and Dostoevsky, American writers like Steinbeck, Hemingway, Faulkner, and Ayn Rand, and more serious magazines like "The New Yorker," "Newsweek," "Saturday Review," and "The New Yorker."

The findings come from a comparison of books, magazines, and newspapers read by entering freshmen in the Class of 1962 and the Class of 1970 at Columbia College. All applicants to the College are requested to list the books they have most enjoyed and the magazines and newspapers they read regularly.

Shakespeare is the author who has declined in popularity most conspicuously. While 25 per cent of the Class of 1962 listed at least one of his plays as a favorite, only nine per cent of the 1970 man Class of 1970 did so. Homer, Dickens, G. B. Shaw, and E. M. Forster were other important writers who have suffered a loss of interest.

On the other hand, several authors have risen sharply in popularity. Camus, listed as a favorite by only two per cent of the Class of 1962, was enjoyed by 18 per cent of the Class of 1970. James Joyce was read by five times as many members of the Class of 1970 as in the earlier group. Kafka, Steinbeck, Ayn Rand, Fitzgerald, and Faulkner were others whose stock has risen.

Some authors who were strongly liked eight years ago continued to be fairly popular: Joseph Conrad, Thomas Hardy, Jean-Paul Sartre, Sinclair Lewis, Mark Twain, Thomas Wolfe, and Hemingway.

Certain single books also continue to enjoy the students' favor: Huxley's "Brave New World," Joyce's "Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man," Salinger's "Catcher in the Rye," Orwell's "1984," and "Animal Farm," Fitzgerald's "The Great Gatsby."

Each girl will remain on the College Board until she graduates. During this time, she will accumulate a professional portfolio of work submitted to "Mademoiselle" which may well be valuable to her in finding a challenging job after graduation.

Once a student has been selected for the College Board, she is eligible to compete for "Mademoiselle's" 20 grand prizes. Each year, 20 of the Board members are chosen to become Guest Editors. To win one of these positions, a Board member must submit a second entry that shows superior aptitude for magazine work.

The 20 Guest Editors spend the month of June in New York as salaried employees of "Mademoiselle." They help write, illustrate and edit "Mademoiselle's" August college issue, sharing offices with the magazine's regular editors. They interview well-known personalities and represent the magazine on visits to publishing houses, stores and advertising agencies.

Announces L. C. Campus Winner

"Mademoiselle" magazine has a unique program - its College Board - that enables women students to participate in the magazine's many activities. This year Longwood College will be represented on the "Mademoiselle" College Board by Margaret Faye Pearce '67.

Each College Board member will have an opportunity to contribute to "Mademoiselle" and help the magazine keep abreast of campus trends. College Board members report regularly to "Mademoiselle" on events at their colleges, research articles and help "Mademoiselle" fashion editors select models for college fashion features.

The Board is composed of some 1500 winners of the magazine's annual nationwide College Board Competition, a contest designed to recognize young women with talent in art, writing, editing, photography, layout, fashion design, merchandising, retail promotion or advertising. Board members are selected on the basis of entries they submit showing ability in one of these fields.

'Print Month' Shows Varied Art Exhibits

During the month of February, "Print Month," the Art Department of Longwood College is sponsoring three exhibits.

The first exhibit features a group of serigraphs by Sister Mary Corita, chairman of the Art Department of Immaculate Heart College, Los Angeles, California. Serigraphs are hand prints in the same classification as etchings, lithographs, or any other graphic art medium. The name serigraph is derived from the root of the word "silk," "seri" and "graph," the root form for "writing." Sister Mary Corita has been an international art figure for the past decade, winning more than 50 prizes and presenting more than 200 "one-man" shows here and abroad. Her works are part of the collections in the Metropolitan Museum in New York, the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, and the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris. Sister Mary Corita's concept of art differs from that of most religious persons, for her belief is that one can feel God in ordinary images as well as one can in the traditional religious images.

Her work will be on display in the Art Hall of the Granger Building until February 24.

An exhibit of forty original prints entitled, "Contemporary American Prints," is on display in the exhibition room in Lancaster Library. Many of the prints in this show have been on display in the White House and in the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D. C. These prints will also be on display until February 24.

On February 23 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. the lobby of Lancaster Library will be the site of a one day showing of 500 original etchings, lithographs, and woodcuts by such artists as Picasso, Chagall, and Lautrec. Other highlights include manuscript pages from the thirteenth and fifteenth centuries, and one of the works of Koethe Kolwitz, who is renowned as history's most accomplished woman artist. The Rotter Gallery of Baltimore is responsible for bringing this exhibit to our campus.

The prints on display this month are all for sale; anyone interested should contact any member of the Art Department of the college.

L C English Professor Writes Life Of Emerson

Dr. William J. Sowder, associate professor of English at Longwood College, is the author of a new book on the life of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Published recently by the University Press of Virginia, the book is a study of Emerson's impact upon the British Isles and Canada as seen through the eyes of Victorian journalists during the period of 1840-1903.

Entitled "Emerson's Impact on the British Isles and Canada," the work is organized around three key chapters in which the author traces Emerson's reputation step by step and notes changes occurring in the great poet's reputation abroad.

According to the author, Emerson's critics were interested in nearly all aspects of the poet's life, but Sowder states that critical interest and comment centered in Emerson's philosophy, religion, literary style, reputation, and influence in both England and America.

Now on a one-year leave of absence from Longwood, Dr. Sowder is spending this year at Duke University as a Humanities Scholar, a high academic distinction.

A native of Roanoke, Va., Sowder received the B.S. degree from Virginia Polytechnic Institute, the M.A. from University of Virginia, and the Ph.D. from University of Kentucky.

Music Club Presents L. C. Faculty Lecture

Have you heard the beautiful tone of the harpsichord? MENC, the Music Educators National Conference, is sponsoring a faculty lecture March 2 at 5:00. It will be held in classroom #1, Jarman Hall. Mr. Hesselink, the organ instructor at Longwood, will give a complete demonstration of the instrument.

He will also compare the piano and the harpsichord as well as give the historical background of the instrument. The topic also includes the information concerning the music written for the harpsichord. Mr. Hesselink's talk will be very interesting.

Reed & Barton Contest Offers Scholarships

(1) During the months of February and March, Reed & Barton, America's oldest major silver-smiths, are conducting a "Silver Opinion Competition" in which valuable scholarships (totalling $2050 are being offered to duly enrolled women students at a few selected colleges and universities.

(2) In the 1966 Competition Miss Ruth Klemmer, Class of '67, was one of the major prize winners of a starter set in sterling silver, china, and crystal for her entry from matching Reed & Barton sterling patterns with leading china and crystal patterns.

(3) Longwood College has been selected to enter this Competition in which the First Grand Award is a $500 scholarship; Second Grand Award is a $300 scholarship; Third Grand Award is a $250 scholarship; Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Awards are $200 scholarships; and Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth are $100 scholarships. In addition, there will be 100 other awards consisting of sterling silver, fine china, and crystal with a retail value of approximately $50.00.

(4) In the 1967 "Silver Opinion Competition," an entry form illustrates twelve designs of sterling with eight designs of both china and crystal. The entrant simply lists the three best combinations of sterling, china, and crystal from the patterns illustrated. Scholarships and awards will be made to those entries matching or coming closest to the unanimous selections of table-setting editors from three of the nation's leading magazines. Sandra McIvor is the Student Representative who is conducting the "Silver Opinion Competition" for Reed & Barton at Longwood College. Those interested in entering the "Silver Opinion Competition" should contact her at 218 South Cunningham for any additional information. She also has samples of 12 of the most popular Reed & Barton designs so that entrants can see how these sterling patterns actually look.

(5) Through the opinions on silver design expressed by college women competing for these scholarships, Reed & Barton hopes to compile a valuable library of expressions of American taste.

Players And Jongleurs Prepare For Production

Upon returning to school after the semester break, immediate preparations began for the largest production the Players and the Jongleurs have presented this school year. The first play scheduled for second semester is "The Chinese Wall," written by the contemporary Swiss playwright Mac Frisch. Performance nights are scheduled for March 16, 17, and 18.

A man goes back in time and tries to show people that they can learn and benefit by other people's mistakes instead of repeating them. A Chinese emperor gives a masquerade party. Many famous people throughout time attend this party such as: Romeo and Juliet, Columbus, Brutus, and Mary Stuart.

The cast of "The Chinese Wall" was chosen by Dr. Patton Lockwood and the executive council of the Longwood Players during try-outs held in January. The play contains forty-five roles, twenty-five of which are female parts and the remaining twenty-one are males. Many characters have two parts.

The cast is the following: John Adams as Contemporary; Jim Rhodes as Hwang Ti; Diana Coleman as Mee Lan; Sherry Matthews as Sul; Wayne Melton as Da Hing

Yen; Simmons Armstrong and Bruce Escav as soldiers; Donna Barnes, Cheryl Rose, Linda Butler, and Pat Quinn as Mandarins; Terry Hall as the photographer, soldier, and waiter; and Linda Powers, Joette Bailey, Donna Jenkins, Judy Fedzud, Mary Polifka, Janie Stoops, Martha Cafazza and Jennifer Dunville as Coolies.

Others include: Jay Maynard as Romeo; Sandy Peterson as Juliet; Bill Weiss as Napoleon; Frank Faust as Columbus; Freda Richards as L'Inconnue; Tom Bradley as Pilate; Neil Aird as Don Juan; Bob Hearn as Brutus; Dr. Simpson as Philip II; David Simpson as William Tell's son; Carolyn McKee as Cleopatra; Patsy Stryker as Mary Stuart; Tom Harrett as Tails; Waverly Land as Cutaway; Carolyn Jackson as Helen of Troy; Linda Pelikan as Pocahontas; Topper Crook as Louis XIV; and Janet Solley as Betsy Ross.

Costumes are being supervised by Mr. Dale McInness. He is assisted by a crew of Longwood students who are interested in design and sewing. The director, Dr. Lockwood, will be assisted by Hortense Mitchell, a junior English major who is a member of Alpha Psi Omega, the honorary dramatics fraternity.

Noted Scholar Discusses "Shakespeare's Women"

On Thursday, March 2, at 1:00 p.m., Bernard Grebanier, Professor of English at Brooklyn College, will speak to all interested students and faculty members on the topic, "Shakespeare's Women." Dr. Grebanier will appear at Longwood upon the auspices of Beoré Th. Thorne, honorary English society.

Dr. Grebanier originally studied to be a concert pianist. During his last weeks as an undergraduate at the College of the City of New York, he was offered a position teaching Shakespeare the following year. The position was accepted, though he had never planned to teach, but the choice was never regretted. Dr. Grebanier received his Ph.D. from New York University in 1930.

In his role as professor, this noted Shakespearean scholar has taught courses in Playwriting, Milton, History of Literary Criticism, English Romantic Poets, and Shakespeare.

Dr. Grebanier's versatility as both scholar and author is proved by his numerous publications. A cross-section of titles include "The Heart of Hamlet," "English Literature and Its Backgrounds," "Moliere's, the Misanthrope," (an English acting version), and "Thornton Wilder." Others include "Fawns, Satyrs, and a Few Sages," and "College Writing and Reading" (with S. Reiter). He has also written many articles, stories, essays, and poems for periodicals such as "Story," "The New Yorker," and "The Saturday Review of Literature." Two prominent articles on Shakespeare are "Ayonian Wily" ("Horizon," 1964), and "Lady Macbeth of Lennox" ("Shenandoah," Summer 1952). Professor Grebanier recently appeared on the television program, "Camera Three" to discuss his latest book, which deals with the eighteenth century Shakespearean Festival at Stratford-upon-Avon.

Dr. Grebanier's hobbies include collecting ancient and Renaissance intaglios, Greek and Roman vases, and Renaissance and some contemporary paintings. Also an enthusiastic collector of books, Professor Grebanier's library contains more than 15,000 volumes, all first rate books.

Currently Editor of the Living Shakespeare recording, Dr. Grebanier is a member of the Poetry Society of America, P.E.N.

Ninth Historical Novel Published By Sprague

Dr. Rosemary Sprague, professor of English at Longwood College, has written a novel about the Norman Conquest. This is Miss Sprague's ninth historical novel.

Entitled "Red Lion and Gold Dragon," the book will be published on February 24 by Chilton Books, the publisher of Miss Sprague's highly regarded "Forever in Joy," a biography of Robert Browning.

In her latest book Miss Sprague utilizes the Norman Conquest as a background for her story of romance and intrigue during the Saxon twilight in England. The novel's hero, a Saxon loyal to King Harold, survives the historic Battle of Hastings and lives to serve and win the respect of the victor, William of Normandy.

An authority on children's literature, Miss Sprague has appeared professionally on the stage and has lectured on Shakespeare.

A graduate of Bryn Mawr, the author did her graduate work at Western Reserve University from which she received the Ph.D. degree while serving as a Fellow - in - English. She has studied at the Shakespeare Institute at Stratford-upon-Avon, England, and the University of London.

Miss Sprague has been a delegate to the conference on English literature at Oxford University.

In England, She was also a member of the first school of Letters at Kenyon College.

The Demon Ruler

Various aspects of college life are sharply criticized from time to time, but one area that constantly is under attack is the Student Government. This organization is found in different forms on nearly every college campus in the United States, and more often than not, is thought of by most students as the "demon ruler," "the powerful oligarchy," or so some students believe.

In reality, this conception of the Student Government is a narrow and an immature one. The students who propagate this "power" myth are a minority, but, it seems, a powerful one. They attack the organization itself and the right of the organization to exist as a ruling body, and they attack the people who are a part of the organization. This attitude appears on every campus, and Longwood is no exception.

Since last September, a number of Longwood students have criticized our Student Government, either openly, or at the well-known dinner table clutch or in the privacy of their own rooms. They have taken offense with House Association: "The dormitory rules around here are as thick as the people who make them." They have taken offense with Judicial Board: "What gives them the right to say who stays and who goes?" And they have taken offense with Legislative Board: "Why don't they do something beneficial instead of just creating more committees?"

Perhaps these quotations are not characteristic of the student body as a whole, but they reflect the attitudes of some of the students. Too often, attitudes such as these spread too quickly to too many people.

Those who hold this position may be justified in their beliefs, but it is quite likely that they are not. Too often they have been influenced by others, have taken the latest gossip as truth, have become resentful because they were given a campus or a call down. Those who feel that Student Government is a detriment to the campus should take a few minutes to ask themselves one very important question: Is my attitude justified?

Consider the purpose of Student Government, and remember that it is designed to serve all students. This includes people with varied backgrounds, beliefs, and ideas. So you don't feel that you need to be reminded that pets are not allowed in the dormitory? Well, someone else may need to be reminded.

The Student Government works for all students — not for just a few. This is not an easy task. Those who are elected to offices in House Association, Legislative Board, and Judicial Board spend many hours trying to make regulations and to act on them in such a way that the majority of students will be served. Their purpose is not to restrict the student, but to give her as much freedom of choice and individual responsibility as is possible in a campus situation.

The "dissenter" should also consider the role of the individual student. Though any form of campus government or ruling body must necessarily work for the majority, this does not mean that the needs or wishes of the student as an individual are not considered. Most certainly, they are considered.

The Student Government is not perfect. Those who hold the highest offices in Student Government will be the first to admit this. Students should remember that they are doing a difficult job in the best way they can, and that the result of their work is usually beneficial. However, for Student Government to be better, it needs the co-operation of the student body as a whole, and perhaps more importantly, it needs the respect of the student body. A desirable working relationship between student government and the student body will be obtained only if the individual approaches the ruling body with a mature attitude and a desire to see the organization truly serving every student.

The Swingin' Medallions Enjoy Concert Success

By PHYLLIS HUMMER
Want to know how to make teenagers scream, parents sigh, promoters grin, and disc jockeys play records? Here are the directions: Take eight wild, slightly goofy guys from the heart of Dixie (or should we just say "rather uninhibited Southern gentlemen"), add lots of guitars, drums, piano, organ, trumpets, saxophone, flute and any other musical instrument that's handy, then blend well with enthusiastic singing, a few shouts and a scream or two.

If you followed directions you now have one of the hottest groups in America today — The Swingin' Medallions. For the desired effect, those eight wonderful guys must be John McElrath, Carroll Bledsoe, Charlie Webster, Jimmy Perkins, Steve Caldwell, Jimmie Doares, Joe Morris and Brent Fortson.

This magic formula has been tested time and time again on the younger set around the country, and the results have been amazing. Nine and a half out of every ten young fans questioned — along with a high percentage of the more mature crowd — agree that The Swingin' Medallions are great, super, fab, tuff, groovy, boss, etc. (Translation: they're very, very good.)

For those who want only the facts, here's a not-very-scientific breakdown on the basic ingredients: Drummer Joe Morris is from Ninety-six, S. C., enjoys spy novels, sports cars and movies. John McElrath, also from Ninety-six, plays organ and piano, sings, digs chess, art and sports. Carroll Bledsoe hails from Belton, S. C., was once a folk singer, plays trumpet and sings. Born in Greenville, S. C., Brent Fortson plays sax, flute, piano, organ and bass, and sings. Doubling on tenor sax and bass guitar, Jimmy Perkins also sings, likes to hunt and fish and finds himself attracted to girls with long hair. Jimmie Doares plays guitar and sings, enjoys "Snoopy" and "Dr. Seuss." Chicken noodle soup and water skiing are the forte of Steve Caldwell — when he isn't playing sax or singing. Charlie Webster had a football scholarship, likes big steaks, and weightlifting, plays trumpet and sings.

The Swingin' Medallions record for Smash Records. Included on their list of hits are "Double Shot (Of My Baby's Love)," "She Drives Me Out Of My Mind," "Night Owl," "I Don't Want To Lose You, Baby." You haven't experienced real excitement until you see the dynamic Swingin' Medallions perform on stage — in Jarman Auditorium, February 25, from 3 to 5 p.m.

All students are invited to attend Union Vespers at the Baptist Student Center on Sunday, March 5 at 6:30 p.m. A speaker, The Reverend William Lancaster, will be presented. His topic will be "Freedom Without Responsibility."

Reverend Lancaster is currently pastor of First Baptist Church, Decatur, Georgia.

Oleg Cassini Says

DESIGNER FABRICS MAKE FINER FASHION

Would it shock and surprise you to learn that a designer can't design absolutely anything he wants in this world? Would it dismay you to learn that he is severely limited in what we can do — not only by what you will accept (a minimal consideration for some of us) but by economic factors and — more important — by what is available to us, such as what fabrics, what patterns, in what quality of material.

Suppose, for example, that I design a dress with a particular fabric in mind for its use. Then suppose I look around at all the fabrics produced by the various textile firms — and suppose I don't find a single texture or pattern that would approximate what I was thinking of when I designed the dress. Well, my choices are then obvious: I can settle for the best of what is available, or I can make suitable adjustments in my designed garment to take into account the nature of the fabric I am forced to use.

Of course, there is one other alternative, but it is a major undertaking, not entered into lightly. It is called doing it yourself.

Now that is a more significant step to take than those few words may indicate — because it means instant freedom to follow any creative direction at all, with no thought to other more commercial or practical considerations. It means that I can design a garment fully and at once, so that the fabric and design are conceived simultaneously and are so interrelated that they complement each other perfectly. One is incomplete without the other, and less than perfect. It means the best possible design because all the elements are made for each other, with only each other taken into consideration. There need be no setting for second best, for what is merely available.

Do you know what else it means? It means that when you buy a dress, a caftan, a pair of party pajamas from a designer who also designs his own fabric, you are not about to see yourself coming and going. You won't see the same dress in a less expensive edition. You won't see the same fabric in a lumpy, indistinguishable dress. And you won't see it in tablecloths, window curtains or maternity clothes. That should represent some measure of comfort for the women whose gravest dread is facing their same dress across a crowded room.

It is, as you might expect, a big commitment for a designer to tackle the fabric as well as the garments. It is of course more work, because a splendidly patterned and vividly colored design does not come easily, nor is its production a simple matter. But to be able to finally get what one really had hoped to achieve, to have complete control and complete responsibility — that is worth it all. It frees the imagination from unnecessary shackles. It enables a designer to give you his very best work. This is the most he can do.

FASHION MIRROR

Fashions in handbags are as quixotic as the rest of the clothing world, and this season the world is small. Even delicate. Surely unobtrusive. They are little black rectangles, about the size of books and even paperback books. Seldom in perfectly smooth leather, they can be textured, "quilted," pressed, or made of real reptilian skins. Most frequently, their handle is metallic — perhaps a link chain or shiny metal fashioned to look like bamboo, this season's most popular phenomenon. This little black handbag is just perfect for suits and other daytime ensembles — if you don't carry cigarette cases, lighters, eyeglasses, and other common place necessities, all of which are apt to be too big for the little bags.

For evening, on the other hand, the little bag is equally popular and more practical. Here the same shapes will be found in black peau de soie, silk shantung or moire.

FASHION TIP

With all of these new beaded dresses around, what's a girl to wear on her feet? They're sure to be noticed, at the end of that vast expanse between foot, short hem and suddenly conspicuous foot. Well, the one thing you don't want to do is wear a heavy-looking black or very dark shoe. If your beaded wonder is pale and lightly shimmering, save the black shoes for the black dresses which gleam with jet and sequin, but don't even consider them if your dress is any of the lighter tones. Either get a fabric shoe that is very neutral (such as champagne-colored silk) or get one of the newer materials such as vinyl or metallic silver or gold (or a subtly speckled mixture). You don't want your feet to overshadow the dress, for that is hardly where you want all eyes to be. So just try to find shoes that blend well in color and harmonize in feeling.

WUS Makes Appeals; Sponsored By YWCA

The World University Service (WUS), more familiar to Longwood students as WUS, will begin March 6, and continue until March 10. Freshman commission members Charlie Weeks, Betsy Rice, Martha McDonnell, Janis Austin, Candee Dickman, Jane Edwards, Patsy Peck, Stuart Winde, Marcy Woodall, and Andrea Myers will be taking collections from students in their dorms, and also from the faculty and administration.

WUS was founded in 1919 after the First World War in hope of giving students in less fortunate countries a better opportunity in education. Sixty countries participate in WUS, with Canada, the United States, and European countries being the largest contributors.

The World University Service is not carried out on a national basis — it is sponsored strictly by student organizations, such as the National YWCA and YMCA, the United States National Student Association.

The WUS program is not a handout. Enough money is pro-

Women's College Teaches Students In Weightlifting

Girls at Pepperdine College in Los Angeles, California are enthusiastically enrolling in "Mrs. Pat Smith's Developmental Activities For Women." It is a course in weightlifting! Although the course is not the usual type of activity one pictures the American woman indulging in, we are told that "it is not calculated to make her into an Amazon." After completing the course, Mrs. Smith believes her girls should be able to lift 115 pounds on the bench press, run a mile, and do 30 men's pushups. Here's to future femme Olympic stars from Pepperdine!

Liquor is now permitted in George Washington University's women's dormitories. A long-standing prohibition of alcoholic beverages was reversed by the student Executive Board governing the women's dorms. The liberalization of rules for women follows action by the University last year permitting alcoholic beverages to be served at social functions in general campus buildings. There are four women's residence halls on the GW campus, housing 1290 students.

Mrs. Harris and Miss Huffman will be attending the clinic. For further information, contact Mrs. Harris and/or check the information posted on her office door. Do this as soon as possible because there is a deadline date for the registration fees and room reservations.

Varsity Basketballers Defeat R-MWC; 51-44

On February 14, L. C.'s Varsity Basketball team had quite a basket battle going with the team from Randolph-Macon Woman's College. Our L. C. team was behind 7 to 15 at the end of the first quarter, but it came roaring back in the second to take the lead. Longwood sank nearly twice as many shots as R.M.W.C. in the second quarter. High scorer for the Blue and Whites was Betty King with 15 points. She was followed by Co-captain, Connie Gallahan, and Judy Turner who scored 11 points each. It was a good game all the way. Terry Schwartz had 20 points for R.M.W.C., but the L. C. guards held their other opponents in check. The final score, L. C. - 51 and R.M.W.C. - 44.

The second game with R. M.W.C. was completely dominated by our Longwood Ladies. L.C. had a commanding lead of 17 to 7 at the end of the first quarter, and they never gave it up. Both the offense and the defense had some sparkling plays. Linda McCulloch took the scoring honors for L.C. with 12. Marsha Tench and Sandy Long each scored 11 points. The game ended with L.C. having 50 points to 24 for R.M.W.C.

Last Saturday Longwood again played on the home court, this time with the members of the Mary Washington Varsity team. Our girls took the lead and held it until the closing minutes of the third quarter. The Mary Washington girls then began sinking baskets right and left, as their score began to pull up. As a matter of fact, it pulled up into a tie once. Vannie Gunter came through with some beautiful shots late in the fourth quarter to give L.C. the 7 point lead to win. Becky Bonduant played an outstanding defensive as well as offensive game (she took the scoring honors with 14 points). Vannie was next in line with 9 points. Once again the guards did a fine job of blocking shots, rebounding, and stealing the ball. The final total: L.C. - 51, M.W. - 24. The second game was a case of the L.C. guards checking their opponents with 24 points while our L.C. forwards poured in the points. Our Longwood Ladies hit for over 50% from the charity stripe, too. This time Linda McCulloch and Marsha Tench tied for high scorer with 9 points each. Barbara Matthews and Betty King each had 7 points. The game consisted of fine ball handling, good passing, and a lot of net swishing by the Blue and Whites. The net swishing is easily seen in the final scoring, L.C. - 49, M.W. - 24.

Congratulations are in order for the First and Second teams, who at "The Rotunda" deadline date had a combined total of 7 wins and 1 loss!

LC Republicans Hears Speakers, Plan Excursion

On Wednesday, February 15, Young Republicans from Longwood and Hampton-Sydney met at Hampton-Sydney to hear campaign speeches given by J. Strother Smith, III and George Mason Green, Jr., both of whom are candidates for the Chairmanship of the Young Republican Federation of Virginia.

Next weekend, February 25-26, six delegates from the Longwood Young Republicans will travel to Arlington to vote for one of the two candidates, and for other members of the Executive Board of the State Confederation.

Sire Spectates

Attention Varsity Tennis Players! There will be an organizational meeting on March 8, at 5:30 p.m., for anyone interested in trying out for the team. Mrs. Harris would like a good turnout for this meeting which will be held in her office (located on the first floor of Student Building, near the Student Lounge). Mrs. Harris also invites all interested students to come to the new gym and get in some early practice. The team will be selected after the student teachers return.

Don't forget the upcoming Water Show. Miss Bush, the H2O Club members and the Corkettes have really worked hard to put the show together. Hope to see you all at the performances!

The Intramural basketball games are now in progress. Check this page for some rule changes, and keep an eye on the A. A. bulletin board for a posting of the game schedules and scores. A lot of luck to the Varsity Basketball team in their return game with R.P.L. which will take place in Richmond on February 27.

Keys for the A. A. bicycles can only be obtained from Carol Blythe in Stubbs 412. Get a few.

friends together and take a ride out to Longwood Estate. It's a fun way to spend a beautiful afternoon!

Remember, it's not too late to start coming to the gymnastic meetings which are held each Wednesday. See Miss Andrews for further information on this.

Take advantage of Rec, Swims and recreational bowling. They're held for your benefit and they're fun!

Ed. Office Gives College Outlook And Statistics

Nearly half of the 3.8 million youngsters who entered the ninth grade this fall probably will go to college, but only one in five is likely to stay long enough to win a degree, according to data prepared by the U. S. Office of Education.

Some 1.7 million, or 44 percent, will probably enter college, but approximately only 780,000, or 21 percent, may win a four-year bachelor's degree.

H2O Club Presents: "Best Of A Nation"

The roar of the crowd will quiet into a calm as the show begins. Not only for the audience but for the H2O Club and Corkettes a new and exciting program will unfold. On March 8, 9, 10 and 11, the big days will be here in Longwood's swimming pool. For months, these girls have been practicing routines, music coordinations, and costuming. At 8:00 p.m. on the 8th of March, all the hard work of the H2O Club and Corkettes will pay off.

The annual Water Show is presented to the students to show how much of all types can be expressed through simultaneous routines in the water. Each swimmer coordinates her strokes and kicks with those of her group so as to put emphasis on each high point of the music.

The title for this year's show is "Best of a Nation," exhibiting the different music forms born in the United States. The show will open with a fast movement to the music of the "Western Symphony." From there, the swimmers will present routines with American jazz, Broadway, Dixie Blues, and the music popular today with the "in" crowd.

This year's show has all the makings of surpassing last year's fabulous exhibit. It is highly recommended that all students come see this show, not once but twice.

Members of H2O and Corkettes practice for annual Water Show.

Intramurals Begin; Class Spirit Soars

Six teams have entered the Intramural Basketball Competition. The Senior team is known as "The Senior Smarts," the Junior team as "The Jolly J's," and the Freshman team as "The Frosh." The spirited Sophomores have 3 teams participating, "The Dirty Socks," "The Great Eight," and "The Kibbles." How's that for a wild conglomeration of team names? One major rule change states that a player will be eligible for the class team if she has a minimum of 4 practices. Class teams will be voted upon by members of the respective classes. Each of the intramural teams will play 5 games, beginning on Monday, February 20, and running through Tuesday, March 7. All games must start promptly at 7 p.m. Please check the A.A. board for a schedule of game time and place. Also posted on the board will be game scores.

Further information concerning the date for choosing class teams will be posted soon. All spectators are welcome at the intramural, class and color games. Support your favorite team and cheer!

Institute Presents Second 66-67 Lecture

The second in the 1966-67 series of three lectures sponsored by the Longwood College Institute of Southern Culture was delivered on Friday, Feb. 17, at 4 p.m. in the Student Building Lounge.

Professor Helen M. Lewis, lecturer in sociology and anthropology at Clinch Valley College of the University of Virginia, spoke to an audience of students, faculty, and public on the topic "The Subcultures of the Southern Appalachians—Their Origins and Boundary Maintenance."

Mrs. Lewis described her topic as "an attempt to delineate three subcultures of the area, especially analyzing the impact of coal mining on the mountain culture of southwest Virginia and eastern Kentucky."

Among her publications are "Marriage and the Family" and "The Woman Movement and The Negro Movement." A paper entitled "Exploration in Kinship Analysis," a study of Appalachian kinship, will be read at the southern sociological meeting this spring. Currently the sociologist is working on a research project in which she is studying the impact of technology on the organization of coal mining communities.

A native of Jackson County, Georgia, Mrs. Lewis received the B.A. degree from Woman's College of Georgia and the M.A.

Floating Campus Embarks; Spring Semester Begins

Chapman College's floating campus, the s.s. Ryndam, embarked Tuesday, February 7, with a student body of 450 for the spring semester at sea. The liner will journey to ports in South America, Africa and Europe, terminating in New York May 25.

Classes are held six days a week at sea. Facilities include classrooms, laboratories, a theatre, library, and hospital.

In sociology from the University of Virginia. Presently she is completing requirements for the Ph.D. in sociology at the University of Kentucky. She has also done graduate work at Duke University and University of California.

A former social worker with the American Red Cross in Richmond, she has served as research assistant, Bureau of Population Economic Research at the University of Virginia, directing a study of road use and the impact of a manufacturing plant in Charlotte County. She is a member of the Virginia Mental Health study commission and has served on the national implementation committee of the American Association of University Women. She is also a member of the state board of AADW.

Oertel Becomes Campus Officer; Assumes Duties

The addition of a fifth officer to the Campus Police this week will enable Longwood's security organization to provide 24-hour police protection, it is announced by LTC John E. Carr III, USA, Ret., business manager and treasurer.

Willie Oertel, the new policeman, goes on duty Wednesday, Feb. 15. Other members of the campus police force are Earl Johnson, Earl Seamster, James T. Webb, and Cornelius H. Smith, the College's Institutional Chief of Police. At least one of these men may be reached day or night by calling 392-6212, headquarters of the Campus Police at the west end of Ruffner.

There will be an officer on duty each day on Pine Street to direct traffic when the students are crossing the street on their way to lunch and dinner.

Chief Smith has expressed appreciation to the many Longwood students who make use of the crosswalks as they cross High Street.

Longwood and Hampden-Sydney student prepare to donate blood during Bloodmobile visit.

Bloodmobile Quota Exceeded By Students

Longwood and Hampden-Sydney College students donated 140 pints during the bloodmobile visit to the Longwood campus February 9. This student effort was 30 pints over the 110-pint quota.

Mrs. Janice Chapman, blood program chairman for the sponsoring Farmville Area Red Cross Chapter, was "quite pleased that our students supported the program so generously." She said the campus results "pretty well even" the chapter with its 1967 quota. A 1966 collection below the chapter quota must be made up this year, and the make-up is right on schedule.

The Bloodmobile Center is in Roanoke, and this center covers one-third of the state of Virginia. All blood collected during the recent visit will be credited to the Farmville Area Chapter, which is comprised of Prince Edward County, Buckingham County, and Cumberland County.

Peggy Thompson was the Longwood College chairman for the visit and conducted a very successful drive on our campus. Bill Carter was the student contact at Hampden-Sydney. Area doctors each contributed one-hour's time during the bloodmobile visit.

The chapter is proud to announce two donors who have given a gallon of blood: Dr. Anthony Munoz, a local physician and Mr. Richard J. Medell, supervisor of the data processing center at Longwood. Both received gold pins in recognition of their generous contribution.

Two L. C. Dramatics Groups Gain Members

Three students recently became members of the Longwood Players. They are Mayling Simpson, Martha Jones, and Nancy Morton. To be eligible for membership, the girls must first work as apprentices. They may attend meetings of the Longwood Players but cannot vote. After they have either worked on two major productions, or otherwise completed two semesters of play production, they are eligible for membership in the Longwood Players. The girls are also judged on the amount of interest they show in play production and the Longwood Players.

Alpha Psi Omega, national honorary dramatics fraternity, also has initiated six new members: Martha Hall, Joanne Black, Cheryl Rose, Peggy Thompson, Mary Polifka, and Linda Long. Membership in Alpha Psi Omega is based on the point system. Prospective members earn points by working as crew chiefs, playing a major or minor part in a college production, or performing other jobs connected with the production of the plays. After enough points have been earned—usually about 50 points—the girls become official members of Alpha Psi Omega.

Committee Evaluates Strict Study Hour

How would you feel if you were kicked out of the dorms from after dinner until your curfew? The House Council at Ohio State University has set up a system of exiling coeds who make excessive noise during study hours from the dormitory the next night. If the girl makes noise the next time she is permitted to come back into the dormitory, out she goes again the following night.

This bit of information from Ohio State University is one of the ideas which the House Association Committee on Strict Study Hour is considering. The Committee has discovered that most colleges and universities have regulations concerning a quiet hour in the dormitory. A couple of the schools used the technique of exiling the girls from the dormitory. A couple of the smaller colleges maintained a system close to that of Longwood's strict study hour. The larger colleges and universities depended on quiet hours over longer periods of time.

The Committee feels the need to evaluate Longwood's system of strict study hour and perhaps to make changes. At the moment there are three possibilities:

1. The first possibility is a quiet hour which would extend from 1:00 p.m. until 7:00 a.m. the next morning. There would be no such thing as a strict study hour, but students would be responsible to keep reasonable quiet in the dormitory.

2. Another idea has been a combination of quiet hour and strict study hour. The quiet hour would be from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the afternoon, and strict study hour would be from 7:30 until 10 p.m. that evening.

3. The last possibility is to maintain the system which now exists. Whatever system is decided upon, the committee wishes the students to realize that the rules will have to be strictly enforced.

Of course, with new ideas come new questions. A decision must be made as to how these rules will be enforced and who will enforce them. There is a tendency in many colleges to make it the personal responsibility of a student to enforce the rules. There is still a need for some sort of regulator such as a hall president or dorm counselor. The Committee is striving for a system which best suits the needs of the students at Longwood. It would be helpful to have your ideas about these problems because it will be your system. If you have any ideas, give them to your hall president or to Jinx Washington who is the chairman of the Committee. What the Committee really wants to know is, "How would you feel if you were kicked out of the dorm for the evening?"

Slater Survey Notes LC Food Preference

By IDA MAYE SIMMONS

Mr. Pennock this week released the results of the Slater Food Preference Survey given to Longwood College students last fall. Mr. Pennock, Slater Manager, noted few changes in the survey results over last year's survey. As has been the policy in the past, foods most liked by students will be most often served. Foods not liked are not served.

Several foods were noted by the Slater Manager as not well liked and not served: Hungarian goulash, liver, salmon roll, and corned beef hash. Mr. Pennock will serve several foods more often as a result of their high survey rating: blueberry pie, apple pie, and veal cutlet parmesano.

Discrepancies between the Survey percentages and the amount of a food actually consumed by the students. Cabbage was rated at 55% liked; Mr. Pennock noted that more than 55% of the cabbage is eaten. Apple crisp was rated highly by the Survey, but Longwood students eat less apple crisp than the Survey showed. Mr. Pennock plans to test the peach cobbler ratings. Peach cobbler was rated at 82% liked. The Slater Manager plans to serve the dessert soon to note how much of it is actually consumed.

Mr. Pennock expressed concern over the 60% rating of buffet meals. He said that family style dinner on Sunday night was impossible since (1) few waitresses would be off on weekends and (2) the dining hall never knows how many people to prepare for on Sunday nights.

The following are a sample of the Slater Survey results. The complete Survey has been posted

Longwood College, Farmville, Va., March 1, 1967

No. 14

The Swinging Medallions, "eight wild, slightly goofy guys from the heart of Dixie," were featured at the third annual ring dance last weekend. They were quite impressed with Longwood, but were rather disappointed that Farmville offered no open pool hall. They suffered another set back when they discovered no cars could be rented in Farmville. They did manage to engage two taxis for their journey to Staunton Saturday night. "Double Shot," "She Drives Me Out Of My Mind," were included among the favorite selections played, and also included were several unique presentations including "Ghost Rides in the Sky," "Along Came John," and "Long Tall Texan." They have recently taped a new album, "I Found A Rainbow," which will be released soon, and which they described as "tough, tough, tough." The weekend also included the traditional ring figure Saturday night with music by the Rhondells from Virginia Beach. A breakfast was served for the juniors following the dance. Also the sorority chapter rooms were open to guests Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

Dr. Harvill Prepares For Next Class.

Dr. Harvill Publishes Guide For Students

Not many professors would take the time to compile and publish a guide for their students, and then give them free copies. But that is exactly what Dr. Harvill, Jr., has done for his plant ecology class. The study of plant ecology in Virginia, in cooperation with the Department of Natural Sciences. Since Dr. Harvill felt that no adequate text existed for the study of plant ecology in Virginia, he compiled his own publication, "Spring Flora of Virginia," during his first year in Longwood (1964), to be used by his students.

"Spring Flora of Virginia" is a portion of a larger work on the

Founders Day Program Dedicates Five Buildings

By IDA MAYE SIMMONS
Longwood College faculty, students, and alumnae will celebrate the institution's 83rd Founders Day in traditional sessions on March 17-18. The occasion will also mark the 80th anniversary of the Longwood Alumnae Association.

Developed around the theme of "Tradition - Excellence - Challenge," this year's observance will feature an address by President Emeritus Dabney S. Lancaster, of Bath County, Va., and the dedication of five buildings.

One of the buildings which will be dedicated is Stubbs dormitory, a new structure named in honor of Miss Florence H. Stubbs, of Farmville, former teacher of sociology at Longwood who retired in 1954. Other buildings to be dedicated on Founders Day include the laundry building named in honor of Samuel L. Graham, of Farmville, former business manager of Longwood who retired in 1955; new gymnasium in honor of Miss Olive T. Iler, of Farmville, former teacher of physical education who retired in 1965; West Wing in honor of James M. ### Mexican Student Speaks, Dances Before Forum

Governor Mills E. Godwin, Jr., opened the Governor's Southside Conference at Longwood College Monday and challenged southsiders to join the educational march.

Hot dogs, the Mexican Bamba and impressions of Cristina Torre, our Mexican Exchange student, were the highlights of the Longwood Forum which was held at the Baptist Student Union Center on Wednesday, February 22. Cristy danced for the group and answered questions for them.

What were her first impressions of Longwood?

"I liked it very much. The girls are so friendly; I like the competition between the Green and Whites and the Red and Whites." "When the girls fight, they fight friendly."

One of the things Cristy has liked most about being in Farmville is the snow. This winter was the first time that it had

Longwood 'Ladies' And Lack Of Consideration

Ah, the subject for an editorial. Many thoughts cross my mind, but a recent comment I overheard keeps returning to my mind. "Oh, I'm used to my table. They're just like my brothers, thoughtless." It's not really a stinging comment until you think about it awhile. Is the term "Longwood Lady" a farce, or could we go as far as to say this concerning Christian charity?

Picture yourself in the LC dining hall. What do you see? Look at the "LC Ladies." They don't even say hello to the waitress. It's almost as if she is the servant and they are the aristocracy. Listen to the cries of the lumberjacks, "More food, more food." Listen to the talk: "We have a lousy waitress. She never tries to get us extras." Let's take a view of the table after the meal. The dessert plates should be stacked, the napkins should be placed in one group, and the glasses should be placed together. Simple enough, but this is rarely done. Are we really so busy that we can't devote one extra minute to lighten the waitress's load? If you are laughing at the absurdity(?) of this editorial then I would venture to say that you have never substituted in the dining hall. I guarantee you, it's quite an experience, and I didn't say pleasant.

Good manners as well as a sincere interest in other people cannot be turned off and on. They must be cultivated. This is a day to day process and if we wish to be a lady in the outside world, it's about time we acted like one in the inside world of LC.

Announcements come over the intercom concerning this, and people snicker. I snicker too, not because it's funny, but because it should not need to be said. It is the little things that count!

Passage Of "Late" Rule: Necessary For Longwood?

Wouldn't it be lovely — yes, it would. If only Longwood would incorporate into that list of rules one which reads something like, "Seniors, will be allowed four lates a semester, juniors three, sophomores two, and freshmen one. Now here is a rule to make the heart leap with gladness. Is it a necessity? No, but it certainly would add oase to the hectic life of an LC co-ed. Perhaps if girls were permitted these lates, the term suitcase college would not be equated so readily with Longwood. Think of the possibilities. Instead of packing up and out for the weekend, it would be possible to journey to Richmond, Lexington, etc., for the evening without having to contend with the problem of money for rooms, and the like. You could take in that movie, (without having to leave in the middle), shop with the girls and treat yourselves to dinner, see a play or make use of any of the cultural advantages of a big city knowing that you can enjoy the evening without feeling uneasy or rushed because LC has a new rule. Several of the girls colleges in Virginia including Mary Baldwin and Randolph-Macon have this system in effect at the present. What do you think, LC? We are open for comments and suggestions.

Shell's Yells

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

Longwood girls are really remarkable. The change of appearance which occurred between noon Saturday and three o'clock Saturday was astonishing. The washed-out, tousled-haired, half-asleep bodies who gulped lunch were hardly recognizable as the coiffed, carefully-dressed young ladies who walked into the concert. We're remarkable, ladies, really remarkable.

The recent exhibit and sale of original prints was impressive, but, alas, was just another reminder of how small the student's pocketbook really is.

About Sunday dinner: It's marvelous how the dining hall was nearly full by the time the doors were opened. Of course, some peons weren't lucky enough to be one of the seven girls to follow one guest to a table.

Those who regularly attend the Sunday night movie in Jarman will note a change of pace in our film fare. During exam period, "The Hoodlum Priest" and Peter Marshall provided the Saturday evening jollies, but now that we're back to the regular schedule of classes, the lightness of "Breakfast at Tiffany's" and everybody's oldest boyfriend, Cary Grant, are appearing on the screen. Was it that the film committee thought we need all the help we could get?

Cabinet pudding: How long does it take, what secret is involved, in making a dessert look that unappealing?

Junior Weekend not only brought a little social life to our campus, it also brought a lot of cooling. It was love, love, love — everywhere. In the rec, in the kitchen, on the mall, in the dining hall, indoors, outdoors, upstairs, downstairs, everywhere. But the greatest scene of all took place Sunday afternoon in Grainger. Several couples, it seems, were quite successful in transforming classrooms into dens of emotion. Love on a Sunday afternoon is never so idyllic as when it's in West Wing.

Scoop from the Dean's office: Beginning in September '67, there will be no Saturday classes. Now for my next magical trick . . .

Just a few words about Junior Weekend: Yes, yes, yes.

As Longwood ladies trudge through snow, cold winds, and near-zero temperatures, bundled in coat, muffler, hat, and gloves, do they recall those warm days in January when two-piece clad coeds sunned on the roof?

Nat'l. Service Announces Summer '67 Wage Scale

If your job pays $150 or $1,200 plus room and board for approximately two months this summer, you will be either the low or high on the salary scale for the most plentiful jobs of the two leading summer employers, resorts and camps.

It is more likely, however, that your contract (if you are fortunate enough already to have one) calls for somewhere near $400 per room and board, the median salary.

These prevailing wages are from a study on summer jobs in seven selected states throughout the country, taken from 1967 "Summer Employment Directory."

If you are still looking for a summer job, you may want to give prime consideration to areas in which there are the most openings. At resorts they are as waiter or waitress, maid, kitchen help, cook and dishwasher. At camps, as counselors, they are general, waterfront, arts and crafts, nature and tennis.

The low, median and high salaries paid at resorts, plus room and board, are: waiter or waitress $80, $220, $500, and tips; maid $200, $416, $650; kitchen help $260, $300-$350, $520; cook $150, $520, $1,200; dishwasher $200, $400-$500, $750.

At camps, the low, median and high salaries paid to counselors, plus room and board, are: general $90, $200-$500, $600; waterfront $150, $300-$500, $1,000; arts and crafts $250, $500 up, $600-$800; nature $200, $300-$350, $500; tennis $250-$350, $300-$400, $400-$550.

Details of 45,000 summer jobs offered by resorts, camps and many other employers throughout the United States and Canada are contained in 1967 "Summer Employment Directory" published by National Directory Service, Dept. CO, Box 32065, Cincinnati, Ohio 45232. Price, $3.

Oleg Cassini Says

SPARKLE PLENTY

All that glitters is not gold, the old maxim says. And it certainly speaks truth, because a lot of what glitters around town these days is silver, rhinestone, laser, aluminum, and every kind of fake stone, from emerald to topaz. It is a sparkling season in the big cities, and if you are the basic black type, forget it. You'll either get lost in the crowd of sparklers or stand out like a sore thumb. (To some misguided souls you may even have a certain amount of appeal, but do not count fashion editors and gossip columnists among them.)

It is quite common for glitter to appear on the scene around holiday time — this is not unique with the current season. What is different now is that sparklers are common place, making the rounds all year round. Fourth of July or Christmas, in private homes or hotel ballrooms. It is the new uniform. It is de rigueur.

What has happened? Progress, Technical advance, Mass production. . . all the hallmarks of our age, and they have altered fashion as well as space travel. In times past, a beaded dress had to be hand sewn, each bead put on with loving if underpaid care. It was a luxury few could afford. Today, man-made jewels abound, and machines affix them to man-made fibers to the world ablaze. Actual metals are used to make textiles, whether aluminum, gold, or who knows what else. Lurex, for instance, is a metallic thread whose cost is so modest that even the poor, pitted working girl can afford to glow in the dark.

Phosphorescence, previously the realm of Superman listeners with their magic code rings, how now made the grade too, in certain esoteric fashion circles. It isn't overwhelmingly surprising to see a bewitched young thing in her glow-in-the-dark miniskirt, maybe with some electric light bulbs (battery operated, naturally) twitting on and off. If you twitch a little too, it just means you are from those Superman days, when such things only appeared in comic books or science fiction. (It could conceivably follow that these young women look like emigres from comic books or science fiction, but don't say I said so.)

But back to the unadorned glitter which conservative types can live with. One problem with the beaded or sequined dress is that you can't treat it as an isolated thing. You can't just wear the dress — it will overpower you. The glitter dress needs high-voltage accessories to really work. This means a cleverly made up face that won't fade into the woodwork. Heavier eyes, brighter mouth — whatever you say, but don't forget to do it. Shoes too must get revved up for the new look, and you can probably find silver and gold shoes in your nearest store — at reasonable prices. After a while, your beamed senses will even get used to rhinestone footwear and other curiosity pieces.

And just a last reminder: the turned-on look is definitely not for girls with turned-off personalities. You'd better be able to open your mouth — to shout if necessary to be heard above the nerve-shattering, trumpet-blasting sound of this year's glitter. It isn't exactly for the weak of spirit or quivering of nerve.

FASHION MIRROR

Catfats are becoming increasingly popular as more women discover how very comfortable and practical they are. The secret of their success lies in the great freedom of movement that they allow and even encourage, and this mobility makes a woman feel and look graceful and at ease. . . a catfat is surely an improvement over bustle costumes of a scant few years ago, which more often than not had very slim, even tight, skirts. While they may have looked chic, movement was lost to impossible, and hostesses were seen mincing around their homes in great discomfort.

Catfats are their prettiest in vividly colored and busily patterned fabrics that can range from cotton to silk. The busier the pattern, the simpler the cut of the catfat should be.

Never minimize the wonders of the basic black turtleneck. No longer the sole possession of beatniks, poets and artists, it is the all-purpose suit accompaniment for daytime wear this time of year. It looks well on nearly every conceivable type of woman, and many kinds of suits. It can even compensate for a suit whose coloring is less than flattering, since the black is closer to the face.

Black, of course, is marvelous, but many other colors can do a lot for suits as well, and this is a good year to pick up a good supply of them, to last you through the years when turtle-necks may not be so plentiful. They are, to my taste, truly classic and can be worn nearly anywhere. I even find that they often flatter a sagging chin, although many women with that handicap are afraid of the turtle-neck when they needn't be.

part study of herbarium and selecting collection of plants which includes about 80% of the 3000 species found in Virginia.

Dr. Harvill's work in the field of botany has taken him to many interesting places. He worked for the Firestone Company in the West African country of Liberia in rubber research. Later he taught for one year at the American University in Cairo, Egypt.

By serving in the Military Branch of the U. S. Geological Survey, Dr. Harvill has been an instrument in our national security. He identified plants from aerial photographs where military action was anticipated. In this way our military will know what to expect as to the vegetation when troops are moved into new areas of the world. Dr. Harvill worked on the plants of Vietnam before the war there began.

The Academic Affairs Committee would like to congratulate Dr. Harvill on the outstanding

The out-of-town students live in special houses in the city. She said of dorm life, "It is a good experience for girls; they become like sisters."

"American boys — like them?" "They are as nice as Mexican boys." When asked if there was any difference in dating, she said that the customs were a little different. For instance, a couple seldom goes out alone; they usually double date.

In June Cristy will go back to Mexico but she said that she would "love to come back again."

Intramurals Underway; Jolly J's Lead Others

The Intramural Basketball games have been slow in getting underway. Some games have been postponed due to faulty heating system in the New Gym and because the faculty sponsors were attending a convention last week.

The Jolly J's (the Junior team) has really been going to town. Last week they had scored a total of 66 points! Defeating the Kiblerettes by a score of 33-4, and the Frosh Gals by a score of 33-3, the Jolly J's have a good lead on their competition, but they haven't played everyone yet. Susan Davis, captain of the Junior team, has a total of 33 points.

In 2 games. Other members of the team are Ricky Howard, Judy Parker, Judy Nevitt, Carol Croxton, Margaret Lawson, Ginny Padgett, Janel Powell, Mary F. Greene, Joan West, and Dick Cundiff. Judy Forrester, captain of the Kiblerettes, scored the only points for her team as the ball just would not go through the hoop.

Captains of the other teams are: for the Frosh Gals—Suzanne Turner, the Senior Smarts—Sandy McVior, the Dirty Socks—Cathy Jester, and the Great 8—Cathy Hass. A schedule of the games is printed below. Come team, and support your team.

Virginia AHPER Holds Meeting

Last Thursday, Friday, and Saturday many Longwood students were excused from their Physical Education classes, as all faculty members of the Physical Education Department and many of the Physical Education majors attended the Southern District meeting of the American Association of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation and the meeting of the Virginia AHPER.

These meetings were held at the John Marshall Hotel in Richmond. Saturday was the big day of the convention — at 8 a.m. registration began. This was followed by an address, "Our Challenge from the Past," by Andrew Kozar of the University of Tennessee. Preceding the Student-Faculty discussion was the Southern District business meeting. At 10 a.m., just prior to the State Student Section business meeting, our Longwood representatives held a tea. Various meetings and programs were held the rest of the day on all phases of Health and Physical Education.

During the 1965-66 session, Dianne Davis, a Senior Physical Education major here at Longwood, served as Chairman Elect of the Southern District of AHPER and as President of the state organization. Tommi Stone, a Sophomore Physical Education major at L. C., served as Secretary of the state. This year Longwood had 2 girls running for Southern District offices. The results of the elections were not known at Rotunda deadline date. Anna Pettis, one of our Sophomore majors, ran for the office of Chairman Elect. Jean Hendricks a junior major, ran for Secretary of the Southern District. Also, Pat Ingram ran for the office of President. Betty Reynolds for Vice-President, and Betty Patterson for Newsletter Editor. They are all junior physical education majors at Longwood. Betty Reynolds was the office of vice president of Southern District.

Madison College Stops Varsity Basketball Team

On Feb. 20 our Varsity Basketball team boarded the bus and headed for Harrisonburg, Va., and Madison College. The weather looked rather foreboding as a chilling rain came down. It brought back thoughts of the last away game when the team got snowed-in at Lynchburg College. This time it seemed to snow Madison baskets and Longwood fouls. The first quarter found L. C. too far behind to catch up. Each team had 15 fouls by the end of the game and although Longwood shot for 66 from the foul line, they could not make the 2 pointers go in. Judy Turner had 16 points for the Blue and Whites. She was followed by Vannie Gunter and Connie Galiana who each had 6 points. Behind in the third quarter by 42 to 23, L. C. out-shot Madison in the fourth quarter, but it was not enough to make up the earlier deficit. The game ended in Madison's favor, 52 to 36.

The second game, also characterized by L. C. fouls, again found our girls short on the scoring end as the final whistle blew. Madison had only a 3 point lead at the end of the first quarter. The first half of the game went rather slowly and at the half, L. C. was only down 14 to 10. In the second half Madison picked up and came out with a 31 to 22 win. Once again Linda McCulloch led the Longwood Ladies with 10 points, Pat Ingram and Janice Hudgins were next with 4 points each. Madison's high scorer had a total of 13 points.

Several of the H.O. members take time out to clown for the camera.

New Trend Towards Integration Emerges

(ACP) — It wasn't so long ago that administrators and students of southern white colleges fought tooth and nail to keep out Negroes, notes the "Minnesota Daily." But while most southern colleges and universities are still reluctant about admitting Negroes, a new trend toward integration is emerging.

The university paper continued: "All over the South, according to the 'New York Times,' 'Negro valedictorians, salutatorians, and finalists in such nationally-known scholarship competitions as the National Merit and National Achievement awards are being offered scholarships worth up to $15,000 over four years to go to prominent white colleges.' Some Negro high school seniors report getting scholarship offers from 20 to 40 white schools.

Partially responsible for this trend is the Rockefeller Foundation, which three years ago donated $250,000 each to four southern universities for the specific purpose of aiding "economically-deprived" students — and especially Negroes. These awards were recently renewed for another three years.

This is all very good, of course, but still is not enough. The fact is, as one Negro educator points out, that "If you're Negro you still have to be better than the best to be admitted to the white schools. And that leaves the Negro schools with all the risk students — all those who need some type of remedial work."

Before one can really speak of an integrated system of higher education in the South, the predominant white colleges must be willing to accept not only the brightest Negroes but also those with the same ability as the average white students. In addition, these colleges should be willing to develop special remedial programs for those Negroes who have the ability to succeed in college but do not have the preparation white students get at superior and largely white elementary and secondary schools.

Sire Spectates

This Saturday L. C. plays host to the Varsity Basketball team from Westhampton College. Game time is at 2 p.m. Support our Blue and Whites with attendance and cheering. Good Luck, Team!

Did everyone enjoy their extra time due to the cancellation of Physical Education classes last week? I know I did! Now that classes have started again, why not get in some extra practice. Basketballs and volleyballs are available for use in the Old Gym. Tennis and golf equipment may be checked out in the locker room.

Attention Weight-Watchers: Why not check out the bicycles and get rid of those extra pounds — it's great exercise! See Carol Blythe in Subbs 412 for the keys.

Again I remind you about the Watershow. Four performances will be given starting March 8 and going through March 11. Support the H2O Club with your attendance — you'll be glad you went!

The latest news around Main

Cunningham is in concern with the hole-in-one made by Becky Bondurant last week!

Don't forget that you can begin practicing for Varsity Tennis tryouts in the New Gym.

By the way, quite a few people think that only Physical Education majors can work in Main and South Rec. I'd like to clear up this rumor. Being a Physical Education major is not one of the requirements!

I'm sure you've heard by now that the Old Dominion College basketball team defeated Hampden-Sydney last week. How about that?

Badminton intramurals will soon be on the scene. Watch for news and announcements concerning this Badminton is a great game — you can get your exercise, have fun, and learn some new strategy.

If you've been looking for something to do on the week ends, don't forget about your 3 free games down at the bowling alley!

U. S. College Population Will Increase Fourfold

(Editor's Note: Below is an article released from the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare which most students will find interesting.)

The U. S. college population will increase four times as fast as the national population during the coming decade, the U. S. Office of Education predicted today.

In its annual projection of school data, the Office foresees a 12 per cent rise in overall school enrollment by 1975-76 — about the same as the anticipated growth in the Nation's population. The projected jump in college enrollment is 49 per cent.

"The projected boom in college population underlines the foresight of Congress in enacting new programs, such as the Higher Education Act of 1965," said Dr. Paul A. Miller, Assistant Secretary for Education of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

"American colleges are better prepared to accept larger numbers of students, thanks to the increased Federal aid made available for construction of college buildings and the training of qualified college teachers." During the next decade, high school enrollment is due to increase by about 25 per cent. In the grade schools, the rise probably will be less than 2 per cent.

The Office of Education said the steep gain in college enrollment is expected to result from higher birth rates in the late 1940's and 1950's, together with the increasing proportion of students who go to college and then do graduate work.

The predicted gain in high school enrollment is based on the birthrate in the 1950's and the growing percentage of students who remain in school. The increase in grade school enrollments will be slight because the birthrate declined after 1961.

Despite the boom in college attendance, the proportion of the population attending school in 1975-76 will be about the same as today (three out of 10), the Office said. This is because proportionately the 5-17 age group will not increase as fast as the total population.

Numerically, the forecast shapes up as follows:

* About 63 million Americans will be in school in 1975-76, compared with 56 million in 1966-67.

* During the same period, the national population will increase from about 196 million to about 220 million.

* Colleges and universities are expected to enroll about 9 million degree-seeking students in 1975-76, compared with 6.1 million enrolled in 1966-67.

* About one-third of the college-age population (18-24) may be in higher education institutions 10 years from now.

* High school enrollments (grades 9-12) will increase from 13.3 million this year to 16.6 million. By the end of the next decade, close to 98 per cent of the age 14-17 population may be enrolled in school, compared with the present 93 per cent.

* Grade school students (kindergarten through grade 8) may number 37 million in 1975, only a nominal gain from 36.4 million this year.

* Classroom teachers in grade and high schools are expected to increase by nearly one-fifth, from 2 million to 2.4 million.

* College and university teachers may number 640,000 in 1975, up 36 per cent from this year's estimate of 470,000.

The report, "Projections of Educational Statistics to 1975-76" (OE-10030-66), also contains data on school graduates and expenditures. Copies are available from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., 20402, at $1.00 each.

Conversation, Confusion, 'Gyre' '67 Impressions

By LIBBA BALL
Longwood freshmen are impressed many times throughout the school year by age-old traditions - Circus, the Freshman Commission, Chi, Cabots, the Thanksgiving turkey and the Christmas sing. Another phase of college "togetherness" recently entered into the picture - the "Gyre," Longwood's literary magazine.

Not only does the "Gyre" exhibit the Longwood student body's polished writing talents, but each of the individual selections vividly expresses inherent collegiate ideas and beliefs. The interwoven theme in the poetry sections was centered around the disappointment in love. The short story, essay, and feature sections were well arranged, but the most striking feature was the art work. The entire staff deserves commendation for a successful 1967 "Gyre."

Freshman opinions varied from the quite confused to the severely critical. Sarah Borman, when confronted with what she thought of the publication, openly admitted she hadn't found time to read it.

"The cover is attractive and eye-catching, and the minute I find some spare time, I'm planning on reading," smiled the blue-eyed 18-year-old.

Jane Acker liked what she'd read, but found some fiction stories and poems "almost incomprehensible."

Stuart Windle commented the poems "lacked variety of content. They seemed to deal only with love affairs and tortured feelings. The layouts were great, but the art department was really the crown and glory. The prints and inks were particularly realistic and expressive."

Marsha Gonsales sided with Stuart in her opinion of this year's edition. "It seemed," she began, "that only a few people contributed the poetry material, and I guess that's the reason a certain few styles seem to stick out."

Nancy Pitts, a freshman from the Richmond-area Hermitage High School commented that her high school literary magazine was on the same intellectual level as the "Gyre."

"We had one in high school, but more students contributed. I think if Longwoods students would contribute more short stories, the readers would get a broader scope of the student body's capabilities."

Bonnie Ferguson thinks the poems are "a little off beat," "but," she added, "somebody's got a great imagination!"

Talent Auditions Announced By "Six Flags"

SIX FLAGS Over Texas and SIX FLAGS Over Georgia announce plans to participate jointly in conducting a series of regional auditions in February and March seeking talented collegiate performers for their respective show department productions this summer.

Longwood College students are invited to attend the Virginia-North Carolina Regional Auditions, which will be held in Raleigh, North Carolina, on Friday, March 10. The exact time and location in Raleigh will be announced shortly.

All types of talent are being sought. Singers, dancers, musicians, specialty acts such as magicians, acrobats, military drill teams, ventriloquists, fast draw midgets - all will be considered.

The quest for collegiate performers will take the talent scouts into eleven strategically located regional audition sites in the southeastern and southwestern parts of the United States.

SIX FLAGS Over Texas, located in Arlington, midway between Dallas and Fort Worth, attracted nearly 2,000,000 visitors from all over the nation during its 1966 season.

SIX FLAGS Over Georgia, on the other hand, will begin its first season of operations in June 1967. Though similar in concept to its counterpart in Arlington, this $12,000,000, 276-acre entertainment center, located in Atlanta, draws its theme from the exciting history and legend surrounding Georgia and the Southeastern states.

Both attractions are owned and operated by Great Southwest Corporation.

Leigh Gardner models two outfits as LC's best-dressed girl. Currently "Glamour" Magazine is deciding upon the 10-best dressed college girls in the nation.

Jesuit Jarman Speaker Asks "What Is Woman?"

On March 15, a Jesuit priest, Reverend Walter J. Burghardt, S.J., will speak at Longwood on the topic "What Is Woman." This will be the first time a Jesuit has visited the campus. Dr. Sprague heard Father Burghardt speak on this same topic at the University of San Francisco, while she was a visiting professor at the university during the summer of 1965. Dr. Sprague was very much impressed with Father Burghardt, and is sure that the student body of Longwood will enjoy his talk equally as well.

Father Burghardt was born in New York City in 1914 and was ordained in 1941 at Woodstock College, Woodstock, Md. He received his M.A. and Ph.D. from Woodstock College and his S.T.D. from the Catholic University of America. He holds the following positions and offices: Professor of patrology and patristic theology, Woodstock College (since 1946); Managing Editor, "Theological Studies" (since 1946); Coeditor, "Woodstock Papers" (since 1957); Coeditor, "Ancient Christian Writers" (since 1958); Editor for Patrology, "The New Catholic Encyclopedia," President, The Patristic Academy of America; Past President, The Mariological Society of America, The Patristic Academy of America, and The Catholic Commission on Intellectual and Cultural Affairs. He is also a member of the Baltimore Area Archdiocesan Commission on Christian Unity, and Chairman of its Subcommittee for Catholic Theologians.

Father Burghardt has been the recipient of many honors: The Mariological Award, 1958, for distinguished contributions to the field of Marian theology; The Cardinal Spellman Award, 1962, for outstanding contributions to the field of sacred theology; Honorary degree, Doctor of Laws, University of Notre Dame, 1966; Honorary degree, Doctor of Humane Letters, University of Scranton, 1966. He is also the author of many books such as "The Image of God in Man According to Cyril of Alexandria" (1957), "The Testimony of the Patristic Age concerning Mary's Death" (1957), (with William F. Lynch, S.J.) "The Idea of Catholicism" (1960); "All Lost in Wonder," "Sermons on Theology and Life" (1960), and "Saints and Sanctity" (1965).

Father Burghardt had his own radio program, bi-weekly, 1951-59, WWJN, Baltimore, Md., and was a speaker on the Catholic Hour on several occasions. He was featured in "Life" Magazine, Easter, 1957, in an article on "Best Easter Sermons." Father has lectured extensively in the East, South, and the Midwest.

On March 16, Father Burghardt will remain on campus to visit classes and talk with students.

Freshman Show Re-establishes LC On Mars

The annual Freshman Production will be presented on Thursday, March 2, at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. The admission price will be 25 cents per person.

This year the production will center around the typical Longwood College life. It will be out of this world literally, as the Freshmen plan to re-establish Longwood on the planet Mars.

Dottie Harry is the chairman of the Freshman Production. She is assisted by Pat Quinn, who is the backstage director, by Janice Austin, who is the music chairman, and by Shorty Moriconi, who is the narrator. Also Billie Sue Spenser, Kathy Parker, Shorty Moriconi, and Lindy Schaperjoha combined their talents to write the script for the program.

The Freshmen said that there is every type of talent "imaginable and unimaginable." The Production contains singing, dancing, and "such carrying on as you've never seen before."

The Class of 1970 extends a cordial invitation to everyone to attend their Freshman Production and "see your friends, enemies, and those girls whom you have never seen before."

Good Old Days Featured Many Demonstrations

(ACP) - If college administrators think they have it rough dealing with today's demonstration-happy students, a look at some "demonstrations" in the early 1800s might convince them that they don't have it so bad after all, comments the University of Maryland "Diamondback."

In those days students were fined, suspended or expelled for such offenses as using profanity, playing billiards, associating with "idle or dissolute persons," traveling more than two miles from campus or attending the theater. Reacting to such harsh discipline, students at Hobart College heated cannon balls till they were red-hot and rolled them down a dormitory corridor, seriously injuring a faculty member.

In 1807 Princeton expelled more than 60 per cent (125 of an enrollment of 200) of its student body for rioting. Seven years later some pyrotechnically-inclined Princeton Tigers constructed a giant firecracker out of a hollow log packed with two pounds of gunpowder and nearly blew up a campus building.

Not to be outdone by Princeton, students at Bowdoin in 1827 set off powder charges under several tutors' chairs. Three students were expelled and 20 more were disciplined.

But today's faculty and administrators will perhaps be most thankful that they don't feel student anger as directly as many of their predecessors in the 1800s did. For example, University of Virginia students, upset over what they considered excessive classroom work, horsewhipped several faculty members. In 1817 Princeton activists pulled some of the faculty with wine bottles and firewood. And just before graduation in 1824, Dartmouth students stoned a professor.

Publishers Gamble, Students Must Pay

(ACP) - Why are textbooks so expensive, asks Western Michigan University's "Western Herald"?

Is it the fault of the university - owned "non-profit" bookstores whose prices are as high as those of the profit-making bookstores? Is the publishing industry to blame?

Both contribute to the situation, the "Western Herald" concluded, but the greater culprit, without a doubt, is the publishing industry.

"Time" magazine recently revealed that the book industry relies on textbooks and children's books to support gambling losses on adult grade books. All the major publishers, "Time" said, "print text and reference books, as well as children's books, which are dependable money-makers. Their profitable textbook and paperback operations enable them to gamble on adult trade books which as a rule lose money."

One publisher estimated that "60% of adult trade books end up in the red, another 36% break even, and only 4% turn a decent profit."

Should students be forced to bear the brunt of the industry's losses and non-profits? Publishers are fully aware that they have the students over a barrel.

Senior Presents Research Work On Nucleotides

Senior Deanna Talley will be conducting the science seminar March 7 at 7:00 p.m. in room 311 of the science building. Deanna will present her research work on "Adenosine and Triphosphate," dealing with the nucleotides and their function as energy storers. She chose this topic because it is so often referred to in biology and chemistry.

The science seminars are the projects of a special one-credit class open to chemistry and biology majors. The purpose of this special class is to provide students with a more detailed background in specific areas of science. The class meets six to eight times a semester in a definitely set grouping or order. The seminars are open to anyone interested in enriching their knowledge in science or satisfying their curiosity.

His search for Dylan, a first-hand account of the man, how he works and a probing analysis into the concept of Dylan is the subject of the 15,000 word text. The nearly 150 photographs, many of them double-page spreads, were drawn from 3000 pictures made of Dylan over a year and a half. Ofte called "the best picture of Dylan made," the photographs reveal the folk artist in many facet of his life - working, playing, resting - and a certain number of them includes Joan Baez, rare moments of the path crossing of these two artist: Singer Judy Collins, who had a opportunity to see a product copy of the book, had this to say: "Daniel Kramer is a fine artist and his work is terribly important."

VOL. XLV

Longwood College, Farmville, Va., March 8, 1967

No. 15

Crew for the first spring production "The Chinese Wall." work on costumes.

Backstage help work for the coming play, to be seen March 16, 17 and 18.

Crews for the play have been busy preparing for some time. Here they work on costumes.

Crews Start Work Early For "The Chinese Wall"

"The Chinese Wall," the Spring Production, actually began its work before being presented to the public. Designs for lights, costumes, and scenery were carefully developed. In the month of preparation before the first performance, approximately thirty-seven people were involved in the making of the one play. During the final two weeks of the preparation of the play, the number of workers may drop to thirty-three. These figures do not include the members of the cast; this is just backstage hands and crews. The following is their story:

Some of the departments or crews in a major production are: lighting, makeup, costume, scenery, property, house, and public relations. There is a director and perhaps an assistant director for each crew. In addition to this, there is a sound director, stage electrician, technical director, stage manager, and of course, the director and assistant director.

Each crew is held responsible for completing its work by a deadline. There is a time sheet for these groups. This is to keep a record of hours each individual has contributed. Each department also has a budget to work within. Finding quicker or cheaper ways to accomplish the impossible is a real headache but a very rewarding one.

Persons participating in plays are required to sign a casting agreement. This states that the person is a student in good standing, that she is aware of the regulations and rules necessary for a successful production, and that she will fulfill her obligation to the best of her ability. A person

Allan Jones Has Library Exhibit Through March

The committee for the purchase of art objects by contemporary Virginia artists presents an exhibit by Allan Jones of Hampton. This display will continue through the month of March.

Many different techniques are shown consisting of sixteen watercolors, nineteen acrylics, six charcoal drawings, a collage and an oil painting. The purchase price for each one of the works is listed.

Owned by various museums, foundations, and families, the art work has been exhibited throughout the east coast and Panama.

Mr. Jones attended Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and received his BFA from the University of Pennsylvania. He also attended the Barnes Foundation in Merion. A member of several art societies, art clubs, and museums of fine art, Allan Jones has won many awards. His style of drawing and his watercolors are especially popular.

He has instructed at the Pennsylvania Academy, the school which has also financed his fellowship to travel in Europe and Central America. In 1959, he was a visiting artist at the University of Virginia. Presently, Mr. Jones is teaching at Hampton Roads Academy at Robert Suggs School.

Four Debaters From H-S Argue On U. S. Policies

The president and four members of the Hampton-Sidney debate team will present a program on the Longwood campus. The team will consist of Mike Lilly, a senior from Bluefield, W. Va.; Charles Geyer, junior from Philadelphia, Pa.; Andy Jackson, a sophomore from Alexandria, Va.; and Tim Miles, a freshman from Baltimore, Md. Accompanying the group will be the president of the team, John Goethe, from Charlotte, N. C.

The topic to be discussed is "Should the United States Should Substantially Reduce Its Foreign Policy Commitments." Following this presentation a group discussion will be held.

This program is being sponsored by the Wesley Foundation and will be held in the Methodist Student Center on campus, March 13, at 6:30 p.m. All students are invited to attend.

Dean Wilson Attends National Conference

Dean of Women Ruth E. Wilson will attend the annual meeting of the National Association of Women Deans and Counselors in Dallas, Texas, March 15 through 17. The conference is for all members of the organization, which encompasses college deans and people in related work, high school guidance counselors, and people in similar personnel work.

While attending the convention, Dean Wilson will work at the NAWDC Placement Bureau during an afternoon session. This is a bureau set up by the NAWDC for members who are looking for new employment, or Deans of Women who are seeking some new personnel. The bureau keeps records of all current vacancies and qualified candidates for positions, and is in operation during the convention for personal contact and interviewing.

Today in Danville, Virginia, at Averett College, marked the start of the annual Virginia meeting for Deans of Women and staff members. Attending from Longwood are: Dr. Brown, Assistant Dean of Women; Mrs. Rock, Mrs. Priess, Mrs. Whitt, Mrs. Smith, Head Residents; and Mrs. Hubbard, Housekeeping.

The format of this meeting features a keynote speaker, and

Richmond FBLA Visits College

The Future Business Leaders of America organization, from Henrico High School in Richmond, visited the Longwood campus on March 4. It is one of their projects this year to visit the business departments on various college campuses.

The group had a short meeting in the Y.W.C.A. lounge where Phi Beta Lambda, the Business fraternity on campus, was discussed. Later, the F.B.L.A. had a tour of the Longwood campus and business department.

The Henrico F.B.L.A. was accompanied by its sponsor, Miss Mary Lou Whitehead who graduated from Longwood in 1966.

Fall 1968 To Start Certification Change

By SUZAN WOLTZ

Beginning with the fall of 1968 new certification requirements will go into effect for students planning to teach in the state of Virginia.

In General Education, requirements include: Humanities, 12 semester hours; Social Sciences, 12 semester hours; Laboratory Science and Mathematics, 12 semester hours; and Health and Physical Education, 6 semester hours. A remaining 6 semester hours may be selected from any of the first three listed above.

For particular subject area fields, requirements have increased, thereby rather eliminating the practice of double majors, and has increased from 24-30 semester hours. Business Education is 43 hours, placed in three major endorsements of general office work, stenography and bookkeeping, and data processing. English has moved from 24 to 30 hours, while certification for journalism and speech, English and Journalism, or English and dramatic art has increased from 30 to 36 semester hours.

Twenty-four to thirty hours is the jump in foreign languages, while health and physical education increased 30 to 36 hours. History and social science certifications moved from 30 to 42

Reed & Barton Contest Closes In Two Weeks

There are only two weeks left in Reed & Barton's "Silver Opinion" Scholarship Competition. The Competition, in which Longwood College has been selected to participate, is open to all undergraduate women on this campus and offers over $7,000 in Scholarships and Awards. The First Grand Award is a $500 cash scholarship; Second Grand Award a $300 Scholarship; Third, a $250 scholarship; Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Awards $200 scholarships each; and Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Tenth Awards, $100 scholarships each. In addition, there will be 100 other awards consisting of sterling silver, fine china and crystal with a retail value of approximately $50.00.

In the "Silver Opinion Competition," twelve designs of sterling and eight designs of china and crystal are illustrated. The entrant simply lists the three best combinations of sterling, china, and crystal from those shown. Scholarships and awards will be made to those entries matching or coming closest to the unanimous selections of table-setting editors from three of the nation's leading magazines.

Sandra Melvor is the Student Representative conducting the Competition for Reed & Barton at Longwood College. Those interested in entering should contact her at 216 South Cunningham for any additional information. She also has samples of the 12 Reed & Barton sterling patterns featured in the competition so that entrants can see how these sterling patterns actually look.

Through the opinions of silver design expressed by college women competing for the scholarships, Reed & Barton will create a valuable library of expressions of American taste.

Lateness Clarity

One of the most important rules of journalism is to get the facts straight before presenting an argument. It has been called to my attention that this rule was violated in last week's "Rotunda." The permission blank which parents sign reads, "Your daughter will be permitted to request late permission from the Dean of Women each time for special events in Richmond, Charlottesville, or distant points. These out-of-town trips in automobiles may be made with either male or female friends." Therefore, this is your chance, girls. The misconception is alleviated. Next time you and your date find the cultural activity of Farmville logging your permission and take off for "that distant point."

However, why is it necessary to relate one's plans for an evening to the Dean before a late permission is acquired? We are supposedly mature individuals. Is it that the administration has no faith in the students? If a certain amount of late permission was permitted each semester, the student could use these at her own judgement and discretion. Many times dates from other colleges who are unfamiliar with LC's rules arrive with plans to journey to another city for that movie, dinner, etc. It would save time and trouble for everyone concerned if the Dean did not have to grant each permission, especially on a Saturday afternoon. Much of the complexity and red-tape would therefore be lessened if a specific number of late permissions were allowed per semester. Therefore, I feel that the opinion stated in the previous editorial is not without merit. Again I ask for the comments and suggestions of the student body.

The Longwood Lady

Most of the students enrolled at Longwood College are between the ages of 18 and 21, so it is naturally assumed that they are young women not infants, pre-schoolers or adolescents. However, it is quite apparent that many of these "young women" do not know how to act as adults for the general behaviors and courtesies usually (that should be found when people are in contact with other people) demonstrate often show a lack of training, or more appropriately, forthright.

Longwood College is an institution of higher learning—by definition emphasis should be put on academics. It should not, have to teach its students how to act properly, how to have respect, how to hold things with deference, how to use the common courtesies... but still, there is a definite lack of courtesy and respect on the campus.

True "ladyship" is letting a professor be in charge of his class — not openly disrupting it with thoughtless words. True "ladyship" is not crowding like a pack of animals through a door, just so you and seven other cronies can sit together during a meal. Are you so dependent on each other that being separated for one half hour is mental or physical torture?

True "ladyship" is respect for the administration, and head residents and faculty of the college. It is not trying to run them down in a hall way, or slamming a door in their face.

True "ladyship" is respect for each other, and not "bad-mouthing" a peer (for everyone here is a peer of everyone else) just because you, individually, disapprove of her.

True "ladyship," finally, is respect for yourself — so much self respect that you would never, intentionally, or unintentionally, commit any of the aforementioned etiquette faux pas. Being a truly mature, adult, self-respecting woman means by nature a courteous, caring, thoughtful person, and, in the college community, this means everywhere: classroom, dining hall, hallway — everywhere.

The House Council of the House Association has set up a Social Standards Committee, which will deal with the problems of courtesy on the campus. It is the duty of every student to consider and carry out the thoughts of this group, to work with it, to respect it. They are working for the betterment of Longwood.

So Longwood "Ladies," before you can no longer be called by that name, think before you commit that new infraction, and think about yourself, and the image you want to convey. Come back to the world of consideration and thoughtfulness and courtesy, and let our school stand proud of its student body — the Longwood Ladies.

Shell's Yells

My, what talented freshmen Longwood has!

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

In the last issue of "The Rotunda," one article cleverly informed readers that demonstrations just aren't what they used to be. The highlight of the entire article was the sentence concerning the antebellum disturbance at the University of Virginia. Seems the young dandies were a bit upset because of "excessive classroom work," so they horsewhipped several faculty members. Of course, everyone knows that today this outrageous behavior would never occur at the big U. The modern young gentlemen who attend U.Va. would not even consider such violence. They'd just pelt the profs with empty Jack Daniels bottles.

However, considering the number of empties around, perhaps horsewhipping is kinder.

*****

Still on the subject of demonstrations: If, in the future, an article such as the one mentioned above is written to inform students of latter-day blow-ups, a certain group on campus hopes that Longwood will be included. Just to make sure we stay "with it," they have designated March 14 as the First Annual Demonstration Day. All students are expected to participate. Tentative plans are for a Smile-In.

*****

Everyone has heard by now that the Farmville Drive-In is opening March 23. This means that on Saturday night, if your date is not from Hampden-Sydney, you'll have three movies from which to choose.

*****

Another tantalizing bit of spring soon left, but not without everyone taking full advantage of it. Kite flying, hopscotch, bicycle riding and yes, of course, sunning on the roof, took precedence over reading and studying. Shirtsleeve'n was great, even if it lasted only a day and a half.

*****

And for the person who took the time to write me a letter but who forgot to sign her name, please permit me to say that I'm glad your mother makes cabinet pudding, and I'm so pleased that you like it.

True Tears And Thanks

Last March 15 a rather stunned young lady assumed the editorship of The Rotunda, and promptly became thrilled, scared, excited, worried, and wondering, all at the same time. She knew in her heart that she was pleased, but she also knew that working on a newspaper required a great deal of teamwork, and could not be accomplished by one person alone. She needed a team, a group of people to function together, as a unit, to put out The Rotunda. And her team appeared.

This editorial is dedicated to my team—The Rotunda Staff. Throughout my year in office as Editor-in-Chief I have had the privilege of working with a fine group of people — people who now mean a great deal to me. Without my team, there never would have been a Rotunda this year. They have worked unceasingly, done many things much beyond their own duty and expectation, and, most importantly have never let each other down. They have never let me down.

Many are the hours that have been put into this little piece of newsprint, and each one has carried the concern, and effort and care of the team members. They are The Rotunda. An editor can no more make a paper than can print or ink. But an editor and her staff, together, that is a different story. They hold the magical combination to newspaper success. In this, my final opportunity to fill this column, I have chosen for my last words "Thank you." This applies to everyone — for all the cooperation and help they have given me — but especially to my staff. One thank you can never adequately express all that I owe them, but it must suffice as a meaningful term of my continuing gratitude.

To next year's editor and staff, I extend my regards, and wishes for a wonderful term of office. I cannot deny that The Rotunda does not bring some problems, and, tears, and heartaches, but its rewards and merits far outweigh its burden. My only desire is to see the Rotunda continue on, and march forward as a major organ of Longwood College.

I suppose now I have said my piece, and expressed my hopes, and my appreciations. So, to The Rotunda Staff, 1966-67, I say thank you, for being the people that you are, the workers that you are, the individuals that you are and the friends that you are. Thank you very much.

Oleg Cassini Says

GOOD TIPS FOR GOOD DRESSING

Are you an "almost" who wants to be an "in"? Is there something not quite right about your finished appearance, when you want so very much to be well-dressed? Okay, now let's really look at it. After all, many interrelated things go into the total picture of you, and you have more than ample control over a goodly number of them.

What do you really need in order to look good?

1. A good hard eye to accurately appraise an unadorned mirror image.

2. The sense and sensitivity to know or to see which effects make positive contributions to the total.

3. A well-proportioned figure (notice that I did not say slim, buxom, curvaceous — merely balanced).

4. Ample funds to make right and careful purchases.

5. A husband with ample funds to encourage right and careful purchases.

6. A basic concern for your appearance which extends beyond one-shot evenings and command performances.

7. A better than passing acquaintance with what is happening in the fashion world, perhaps not every second but at least frequently enough not to be surprised by a new look that saunters into a room.

8. A sewing machine or tailor to make those little alterations that make the difference between looking just right and missing the mark.

9. Accessories to coordinate with and complement every outfit (repetition is definitely allowed).

10. The ability to recognize a well-constructed, well-cut, well-made dress, no matter what its price may be — no matter how low its price may be.

If you have points one and two, any other two in addition ought to be enough to make you fairly well-dressed.

Among the things you don't need, but perhaps think you do, are:

1. A total commitment to clothes and beauty — the fashion mystique.

2. A great variety of different things to wear.

3. A mother who started you out in the right direction or a husband whose interest inspires you.

4. A need to be among the first to sport a new look.

5. A strong personality to project yourself and your "look."

6. A big mouth to broadcast to everyone how much you paid (or how little, as in "look how clever I am to have found this marvelous bargain which was obviously mismarked").

7. Social position and correlated publicity.

8. To be seen at certain important places.

9. To wear only designer's or "name" clothes.

10. A thoroughly serious and business-like attitude about the whole thing.

Like a lot of other things in life, being well-dressed boils down to common sense and moderation, to a sense of rightness and proportion — about yourself, about your appearance, and about the relative importance of fashion in a world crammed full of other interesting things. It is nice to be well-dressed, it gives you physical advantages and psychological confidence, and perhaps also the admiration of others. Hopefully it also pleases you. But it is not the most important thing in the world, not the sort of thing a right-thinking woman would sell her peace of mind for.

FASHION MIRROR

As you know, the leg coverings under your skirt have attained all kinds of eminence with the emergence of decorative and very feminine bloomers. Well, from that, the next step in sophistication is the Bermuda shorts look for not-so-casual daytime wear. Bermudas in the patio were news ages ago, but Bermudas on city streets, even with gloves and handbag — that is more like news. The look you can expect to see is a longish tunic (or shortish shift) with perhaps just a couple of inches of shorts peeking out from beneath the overskirt hem.

They do, of course, require lower leg coverings somewhat more noticeable than skin-toned nylons, so don't buy the Bermuda dress unless you're ready to get suitably interesting hosiery to be worn with it. If you've the courage for this style in the first place.

FASHION TIP

Now that short and softly waved or even curled hair is reappearing in fashionable salons and circles, you'll be starting out with a much better "given" for purchasing a new spring hat. Casual, short, naturally waved hair is just about the best coiffure for hat-wearing, since it neither distracts from the hat nor looks any different after the wearing. And you may be surprised at the wide variety of hats being shown for spring — from traditional pillboxes to undulating picture hats, berets, cloches, caps, Aussies, panamas. Whatever your favorite, you'll be able to find it, in a range of materials from chiffon and linen and straw and velvet to — well, even to paper. So, clip your locks and splurge on a new hat. You'll be surprised how good the new you will feel — and look.

Letter To The Editor Concerns Dining Hall

Dear Editor,

Due to the comments in last week's "Rotunda" about lady-like behavior in the dining hall, I realized that there were a few misunderstandings. Most girls sitting at their tables have little or no understanding of how the dining hall systems work and, therefore, can't explain their waitress's long, mysterious disappearance into the depths of the kitchen. For all they know, she might be in there, leaning on a cart, telling jokes to a fellow waitress. "If only every girl could work one week in the dining hall," Mrs. Tucker has so often said. Maybe this would clear up a lot of misconceived ideas, but it would be a practically impossible project to undertake.

Longwood Triumphs, Season's Last Game

On March 4, L.C.'s Varsity Basketball Team played host to Westhampton. At a little past 2:00, the players walked onto the court. All was quiet as they lined up for the jump ball to start the game. This proved to be the last calm before the storm. The first quarter was fast and furious as ball handling and rebounding proved to be the biggest asset of both teams. Westhampton could not settle down completely as they fouled five times. However they made up for it in shots made outside the key. First quarter ended 11-11. The second quarter L.C. was very nervous, Westhampton edged ahead while L.C. fouled seven times. It appeared that whoever was to get settled, stay settled and could outwear the opponent first, would win. At the half L.C. was behind 23-20. Duly noted, in the first half a few successful tactics were completed.

Former Grads Given VAHPER Service Awards

Two Longwood College graduates who will be remembered for their leadership and winning personalities have been working very hard for the advancement of the Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation. Miss Rachael Peters recently stepped down from the office of President of the VAHPER, and in her place will be Miss Betsy Gravelly who is serving as President-Elect this year.

Miss Peters, a 1952 graduate of Longwood, is now head of the Women's Physical Education Department at Amundale. While at Longwood she was a member of Chi, the Varsity Hockey Team, the Monogram Club, the Athletic Association, and the Varsity Basketball Team. She was also a blazer award winner.

Miss Gravelly of the class of 1951 was a member of Chi, Who's Who, Alpha Kappa Gamma, the Athletic Association, and the Monogram Club. She also served as President of her Senior Class. She too was presented a blazer for her participation in athletic activities.

Both women are well known in their field - Miss Peters has helped create an interest in gymnastics, and Miss Gravelly started the tennis tournament for high school students in Virginia. They have worked exceptionally hard and have given their utmost attention to improving and bettering the VAHPER. We of Longwood College salute you!

Yet L.C. was not to follow the appearances of the first half. They did not tire nor were they clear-cut win. All the tricks in the book were used yet Westhampton just outscored L.C. 38-31.

It would appear as though L.C. has an affinity to playing highly-tensed games. Certainly this was one.

The game was still fast and furious as each team scored one right after the other. L.C. scored. Westhampton scored. But the margin of the first three quarters proved to be deadly to L.C., as the buzzer went off with Westhampton ahead 52-45. High scorer was Mary Terry of Westhampton with 19 points. L.C.'s outwear the opponent first, high with 15 points was Betty King, followed closely by Vannie Gunter and Becky Bondurant with 13 and 11 respectively. L.C. made 11 of 18 free throws with Vannie Gunter making nine of her thirteen.

The second game again repeated the action of the first. From the first quarter to the third, L.C. just outscored Westhampton. Again the game from first to last was left up to the defense for stability. L.C. won by stealing the ball away and rebounding all the shots. At the half L.C. led 19-11. Again the win depended on who would keep ahead in the last seconds. Westhampton in the fourth quarter called time out with six seconds to go in order to plan their strategy. But L.C. denied them the opportunity by stealing the ball and the buzzer went off. L.C. won 34-32. High scorer was Linda McCulloch with 14 points.

This was the last game of the season. "The Rotunda" wishes to extend their congratulations to a job well done to L.C.'s Varsity Basketball Team.

wishing to participate in any play must have at least a 2.0 grade average. In order to work on two plays per semester she must be on the Dean's list. So, from this point of view, participation in a production at Longwood is not only a challenge but an honor.

"The Chinese Wall" will be presented March 16, 17, and 18 in Jarman Auditorium at 7:30. Students have free admission with their IBM tickets.

The German Club will be sponsoring movies of Germany every Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. in Hiner 106. The movies will be in English. Everyone is invited to attend.

Longwood Splits Double With R. P. I.

The Varsity Basketball Team traveled to R.P.I. on Feb. 28. The first game started badly for L.C. as R.P.I. jumped ahead with a series of key shots to lead the quarter 10-3. This proved to be a big hint of the disaster to follow. L.C. was never to lead the game. However the valiant attempt to gain proved that L.C. could have beaten them had it been for the first quarter. From then on, L.C. maintained control of the ball and of the court. At halftime the gap was prominent - 21-13.

In the third quarter, L.C. came onto the court determined to close that gap. L.C.'s forwards started pumping in the ball, basket scored, ball stolen and another point for L.C. Yet R.P.I. was having an easy job of breaking L.C.'s zone and put in a couple of baskets just to keep ahead. In the third quarter L.C. outscored R.P.I. 11-8 and was behind now only 29-24. The fourth quarter was a cliffhanger as L.C. scored, R.P.I. scored.

As the minutes were speeding away L.C. pulled within three points of R.P.I. Three time outs were called to give the players of both teams a relief from the building tension. In the last seconds, L.C. almost caught them but the buzzer went off with L.C. behind 36-33.

The highest scorer for L.C. was Connie Gallahan with 11 points. Each team went to the free line eleven times with L.C. scoring 9 points and R.P.I. scoring 4.

The second game started differently from the first, as both teams tried out each other's defenses, scoring intermittently, and controlled the ball. At the half L.C. was behind 14-11. But the second half was remarkably different. L.C. started to pump in the baskets, and kept R.P.I. away from their own goal. L.C.'s zone defense proved to be too much for R.P.I.

In the third quarter L.C. had scored 17 points to R.P.I.'s 4. The fourth quarter proved to be no change as L.C. let R.P.I. have two foul shots and no field goals. L.C. won 36-20. Linda McCulloch led L.C. by scoring 12 points in the two quarters she was in.

Longwood Graduate's Leadership Honored

The Distinguished Service Award "in public recognition for her distinguished service and outstanding contributions to the professions of health, physical education, and recreation" was recently presented to a former Department Head and faculty member, Miss Oliver T. Iler.

This presentation was made by the Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation during the state convention held in Richmond. Another recipient of the same award was Miss Barlow who served as head of the Longwood Physical Education Department from 1919 to 1949.

Miss Iler who is a well-known figure on campus, has been quite active in Longwood life. She has sponsored the classes of '27, '33, '37, '43, '47, and one Red and White class, '50, as well as leading the Athletic Association and the Monogram Club for a number of years. She served as department head from 1949 to 1962. Miss Iler has previously advised and sponsored Chi, Alpha Kappa Gamma, and Pi Kappa Sigma social sorority (now Sigma Kappa).

Although she graduated from Sargent's School of Physical Education in Massachusetts, she obtained her B.S. in History at Longwood, and her Masters Degree at Teacher's College of Columbia University. She began her teaching at Chevy Chase School for Girls, but she soon went on to teach Physical Education on the high school and elementary levels in Baltimore Md. Directing summer camps

NSA-CIA Connections Bring National Interest

(Editor's Note: The following is from "The Evening Star," Washington, D. C.)

Somewhere in the files of the Central Intelligence Agency there ought to be a folder labeled "The Chicago Bookstore Flasco" or perhaps "The Grek Rug Merchant Caper."

Inside is the story of the way CIA agents ended up holding the bag for $140,000 to bail out what must rank as one of history's worst run business ventures.

It also is the story of how officials of the National Student Association - who were working with the CIA - were sold a bill of goods by a group of University of Chicago undergraduates.

The story began in the fall of 1962, when some University of Chicago students, working through their student government, decided to form a cooperative bookstore to provide lower prices on textbooks for college students.

They opened a modest store near the campus, and had some initial success. Encouraged, the young men got bigger ideas - they decided to open a nationwide chain of book cooperatives.

But instead of building the organization from the bottom up, they decided to do it from the top down. In the spring of 1962, they moved into a seven-room suite in a downtown Chicago office building, with an option to take over a full floor for offices.

The suite was furnished in the very best fashion - Danish furniture, plush carpets, expensive lamps, massive desks and even a specially installed sink.

The young men knew that all modern businesses also need a big computer operation, so they rented the whole works - key-punch machines, collators and data processing units.

Thinking toward the future, they purchased a three-year supply of punch cards.

Sprinkled about the office were six-button telephones. The youthful businessmen also contracted to buy eight special cash registers, at $2,000 apiece, designed to produce a tape record that could be fed directly into the computers.

The headquarters looked fine but there were problems. Foremost of which was a virtually complete lack of business experience.

The head of the organization was borrowing $10 and $20 from friends at the same time he was setting up the plush office.

"The accountant didn't know double-entry bookkeeping. He kept all his financial records on the backs of envelopes," says one young man who recalls the operation.

At the campus level, things were worse. Plans were made to open stores near campuses that

LC Sponsors Archery Clinic; Demonstrations

By DONNA CRAMER

This Saturday, March 11, at 2 p.m., Longwood College will host an archery demonstration and clinic to be held in the Student Building gymnasium. All interested students and faculty are cordially invited.

Miss Sandra Long will be the student in charge of the clinic. Sandy is the manager of the Varsity Archery Team. Faculty sponsors for the clinic include Miss Rebecca L. Brockenbrough, Associate Professor of the Physical Education Department, Dr. Shirley O'Neill, Department Head, and Miss Nancy Andrews, Assistant Professor of Physical Education. Any girls wishing to participate in the clinic and who need equipment are urged to contact Miss Brockenbrough.

Highlighting the program will be demonstrations by six outstanding archers - Mr. Bill Clifton who was third in the state championship; Mrs. Virginia Clifton; Mr. Clifford Necessary, National champion of the instinctive division and Virginia State instinctive champion in 1962, 1963, 1964, and 1965; Mr. Jim Quarles, President of the Richmond Archers; Mrs. Virginia Quarles; and Mr. Tom Taylor, Mid-Atlantic Free Style Champion of 1964.

A tea will be served by the Athletic Association for the teachers and participants after all demonstrations and clinical activities have been completed. It is hoped that many of you will support this demonstration with your attendance. Take advantage of this opportunity to learn more about the techniques of archery. Two Seniors, Connie Gallahan and Dianne Davis, will be the only returnees of last year's varsity archery squad to participate this year.

Basketball players during a rest talk about approaching plays.

Longwood College YWCA

Welcomes VPI Visitors

By DOROTHY CHAPPELL
The Longwood College YWCA welcomed members of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute YWCA and their YWCA sponsor to Longwood College Feb. 18 and 19. Eight VPI students and their sponsor "Butch" Trent came to Longwood for an exchange program presented by the Longwood YWCA.

Members of the Longwood YWCA presented a program Saturday afternoon. Nancy Young, president of the YWCA at Longwood presided. Discussions were led by members of the cabinet on such programs as the WUS Campaign, Orientation Week, Thanksgiving Baskets, the Christmas programs, and the many other activities of the Longwood YWCA.

After the Longwood program, a tour of the Longwood campus was conducted by the YWCA girls. Later, after several exhausting snowball fights, the groups returned to the Wesley Foundation for a program presented by the YWCA of VPI. Tom Comer presided, and members of the "Y" of VPI participated in explaining their activities as a YWCA.

The girls of Longwood were particularly interested in Bill Coulbourne's (president of the YWCA of VPI) report of "Conflict '67" to be presented April 6 and 7. The two topics for this program are: "Roles of the Majority and Minority Parties" with guest speakers Robert Wagner and Gerald Ford, and "Liberalism and Conservatism" with guest speakers Barry Goldwater and Max Learner.

The purpose of the program at Longwood was to exchange ideas of the two Christian groups. The YWCA of Longwood acquired many good ideas for improvement in the activities of the "Y" at Longwood, and was greatly impressed by the large scale of activities and participation of the YWCA of VPI.

The program was quite successful and everyone at Longwood enjoyed having the visitors from VPI here on the Longwood campus. Girls! They said our food was delicious. We hope the activities of the YWCA at Longwood will be benefited by this program and that students will become more aware of the purpose of the YWCA on the Longwood campus.

Miss F.B.L.A. will be chosen on the basis of a general knowledge test and an interview for poise and tact.

In the afternoon, entertainment will be provided for Convention members followed by the announcement of the contest winner.

Members of Phi Beta Lambda, the business fraternity at Longwood, will serve as hosts and guides to the convention.

Dining Hall Letter

Maybe an explanation would be more realistic. A waitress spends, on the average, anywhere from 15 to 35 minutes waiting in lines: lines to eat, to get ice, to get the meat, potatoes, vegetables, and bread, and the three most discouragingly long: the coffee, peanut butter and jelly, and "seconds" lines. She has no control on either the speed that these files move, or their length. All she can do is wait and hope her tables are patient. The most discouraging thing she can face after suffering in the kitchen a dreadfully long ten minutes is to be greeted with scowls of disapproval. Or perhaps she has scanned the tables trying to find some more pie and is thanked only by having the pie plate grabbed from her hands. Thank goodness, this isn't usually the case! A "thank you" is ever so much more gratifying.

The NO STACKERS are also a minority group, along with the STAY FOREVERs. If it only happens now and then, no one is really upset. It's the students who habitually make their waitress late for afternoon classes, or another pet peeve, those starving TARDY BREAK-FASTERs who force the waitress to attend 8:00 classes at 8:10, that cause bad feelings. In general, I wish to emphasize this, the students in the dining hall are polite, considerate, and perfect "ladies" — maybe that's why the exceptions seem so obvious. M.B.

hours; Home Economics remained at 45. Mathematics for high school increased from 18 to 27, but for eighth and ninth grade, and business math, is set at 16 hours.

Music requirements moved from 30 to 36 semester hours, and Biology, Chemistry and Physics requirements increased from 16 to 24 semester hours. General Science remained at 24 hours.

In Teacher Education, elementary education requirements are 18 semester hours, but include specific new courses. English is set at 18 hours, and History and Social Science at 15 to 18 (to include a basic economics course). Math, Science, Art, Music, and Health and Physical Education are 6 semester hours. In Teacher Education, secondary school, 15 semester hours are required.

All special requirements for nursery school and kindergarten begin in 1968, which means the current freshmen and sophomore classes will be affected. Dr. Richard B. Brooks, Dean of the College, has information concerning the new changes. He will be able to answer any questions that arise concerning certification.

Association Surveys LC Smoking Habits

Longwood College is one of 50 colleges and universities selected to participate in a national survey of student smoking habits, attitudes and beliefs. Dean Ruth B. Wilson announced today.

The study is sponsored by the American College Health Association, which has a long-standing interest in the problems of smoking and health, under a contract from the U. S. Public Health Service.

Under the plan, students will be asked for detailed information of their smoking attitudes and experience in a questionnaire to be provided for this purpose. It will be distributed at Longwood College to all undergraduates who live on campus. Questionnaires will be distributed and collected by the hall presidents in each dormitory.

The total number of students involved in the survey at all 50 institutions is estimated at 50,000. This sample, with appropriate weighting, will be representative of the total undergraduate student body in the United States.

All tabulation and preparation of reports will be done at the American College Health Association headquarters in Miami, Florida. Reports of the survey on each campus will be made available to the local health service director. On completion of the total survey, long-term studies on aspects of the smoking problem related to students will be initiated.

In announcing the project, Dean Wilson said, "Longwood College welcomes the opportunity to take part in a study which can contribute to the control of a serious health hazard. Students represent one of the most important segments of the population for developing and carrying out a program on smoking and health. Smoking habits not only are frequently established during college years, but students represent an important nucleus of opinion leaders and social exemplars. I urge all selected students to complete the questionnaire and to answer questions as accurately as possible in terms of their own opinions and beliefs."

ACHA Project Coordinator James W. Dilley said in Miami that the three-fold purpose of the project is to: (1) provide

NSA-CIA Controversy Brings Highlights To News

already had book cooperatives, but at one campus space wasn't rented until a week before the beginning of classes. Elsewhere they just couldn't find store locations.

The entrepreneurs weren't receiving course lists from many schools so they didn't know which books to order. Publishers suspected the operation was financially shaky and wouldn't extend any credit.

At about the same time, the NSA was seeking to expand its campus services, so the officers of the fledgling book cooperatives approached the student association and, without revealing their precarious financial position, offered to sell their whole operation.

The Chicago students asked for three payments of $5,000. After a round of negotiations, NSA bought the cooperative for one $15,000 cash payment.

NSA soon discovered what it had purchased. By the summer of 1963, all was "chaos," according to one source. "It was even worse than they told us."

A new set of NSA officers was elected and in the early fall several traveled to Chicago for a board of directors meeting. The meeting ran on for two weeks, and it finally was decided the book operation simply wasn't salvageable.

Faced with the possibility of a huge financial loss, the NSA officers turned to their principal backers — the Central Intelligence Agency — and the CIA came up with a needed $140,000 to pay off debts.

There was one remaining problem. The NSA national supervisory board, which is supposed to oversee the work of NSA officers and staff members but didn't know of the CIA involvement with NSA officers, was anxious for an explanation of how the bookstore problem had been resolved.

Eighty-Third Founders Day Features Dedication Of Five College Buildings

The 83rd Founders Day at Longwood College, scheduled for Friday and Saturday, March 17-18, will feature the dedication of five buildings in honor of former faculty and staff members. More than 500 alumnae and James M. Grainger Building - Mrs. Charles Hall Davis, Jr., alumnae and associate professor of English at Longwood; Olive T. Iler Building - Miss Frances Horton, of Roanoke, Va., a former national president of Longwood alumnae; Florence H. Stubbs Hall - Mrs. Virginia C. Hall, of Richmond, former student leader at Longwood.

Worthy Johnson grew up near Athens, Georgia, was graduated from the State Normal School in Athens, attended the University of Georgia, and received the B.S. degree at Columbia University. She came to Farmville in 1907 to introduce Home Economics as an elective subject at the then, Normal School of Women. Mrs. Craft's special interests through the years have been art, gardening, and flower arranging. OLIVE T. ILER

Mr. Samuel L. Graham, born in Boydton, Virginia, served as business manager at Longwood for 26 years. When he came to Longwood as business manager and supervisor of grounds and buildings, the student overflow from the existing dormitory space filled ten cottages. Hunting, fishing, and sports are pet interests of Mr. Graham, and he also enjoyed teaching golf to Longwood girls.

Mr. James M. Grainger served as head of the Longwood English department for 48 years. He established Beorc Eh Thorn and was active in bringing writers to the campus. Mr. Grainger retired at age 70 by state law and he and his wife, Alice, reside at "Contentment" in Farmville.

Miss Florence Stubbs was born in Bennettsville, South Carolina, and took her B.A. and M.A. degree from George Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, Tennessee. She was a distinguished member of the Longwood faculty for 37 years.

She was influential in getting our present National Organization of Alpha Kappa Gamma started. When the "Times Dispatch" selected its first annual Virginia Honor Roll for persons who had rendered distinguished service to Virginia during 1937, Miss Stubbs was one of the ten persons who was chosen.

Miss LC Pageant Awards Prizes From Pepsi-Cola

By KAREN MAHER

The Miss Longwood Pageant of 1967, a pre-requisite to The Miss Virginia contest, will be presented on April 8, at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman auditorium. The tickets are $1.00 for students and $1.50 for adults.

The theme for this year's pageant is "In Step with the Seasons." Each competition of the contest will be coordinated with a season of the year. The program will also feature an Honor Court consisting of Honey Johnson, Miss Longwood of 1964, and Linda Pritchard, Miss Longwood of 1965, who will entertain by singing.

For the first time, the Pageant will award educational scholarships. The Pepsi-Cola Company has provided a gift of $250 for Miss Longwood, and $100 each for the first two runners-up to Miss Longwood. In addition, the new Miss Longwood of 1967 will receive the traditional crown from Miss Nancy Maxey, Miss Longwood of 1966.

There will be a Tea and Reception sponsored by the Home Economics Department of Longwood for the contestants and committees. The Tea is scheduled for Saturday, April 8, at 3:00 p.m. The Reception will follow the Miss Longwood Pageant on Saturday night.

Artists Series Hosts Troubadour Harpist

The Longwood College Artists Series will present Gerald Goodman, popular troubadour-harpist, as its second program of the current year on Tuesday evening, March 21, at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Mr. Goodman's program, to be presented in four parts, will feature voice and harp, solo harp, and harp and piano. His presentations will range from ancient ballads of the Middle Ages to American folk ballads.

Critics and audiences alike discover "something a little different, distinctive, and rather special" when baritone Gerald Goodman presents his imaginative program in the slightly manner. Subtly varying musical sounds, Goodman weaves a rich tapestry of artistic minstrelsy.

An artist of indisputable taste, he has performed all major concertos for harp and has introduced the works of new and modern composers. His visits to college and university campuses, as well as appearances on a hootenanny, have made him keenly aware of non-traditional tastes.

He wrote the music and appeared in an off-Broadway hit. Acting lessons and voice training bore fruit seasons later when he was featured both as an actor and singer in the N. Y. Shakespeare Festival production of "As You Like It." Since his solo debut in Town Hall in 1959 he has earned recognition as one of the leading harpists of our time.

New Editorial Policy: Student Sounding Board

It is traditional with each editor of The Rotunda to present a statement of objectives or aims for the new publication year, as well as a preview of the editorial policy that will underlie forthcoming editorials.

In the new editorial paths guiding The Rotunda you may detect some departures from past policies, but I am sure that most of you will accept these changes.

The primary purpose of this student newspaper is to act as a media of a lively, thought-provoking nature. It is an organism through which you may bear your differences of opinion concerning all topics of campus interest. It is printed to inform you of what is happening of academic and social significance on other campuses, in relation to happenings at Longwood. It is meant to be an opinionated sounding board for student thought. What is printed in this newspaper strives to stimulate you, if at all possible. It must be emphasized that the editorial column reflects only the opinion of the individual writer. One editor on the staff is not necessarily the spokesman for all L. C. students. For every editorial opinion expressed, 1499 others exist on this campus. They should all be expressed. The Rotunda does not intend to solely reflect the opinions of its editors. It welcomes your criticism and is anxious to hear more student voices. We hope that we are able to print material vibrant enough to stimulate response on the part of the student. This newspaper should reflect your opinions, discussions, and responses.

The right to freedom of expression in both editorial and letters to the editor will be upheld by The Rotunda staff. It is necessary that readers of the newspaper submit their views via letters to the editor. The Rotunda cannot serve its purpose as a student publication without knowing how other students feel about certain matters.

The Rotunda will continue to gather and publish the news in all phases of college life, striving to give equal attention to each area. Therefore, we ask your help in informing us of all possible news sources.

We will strive to make The Rotunda a readable and appealing newspaper. However, we cannot accomplish this goal ourselves. The Rotunda serves as a medium for the journalistic efforts of all students. We welcome the interest of any member of the student body. We solicit your thoughts, ideas, and suggestions. You will be heard only if you exert the effort involved to express yourself.

Grass Pleads: Don't Tread On Me!

Dear Editor,

The school is presently engaged in a project to put the green grass back on our once beautiful campus. Various methods are being used to inform the student body of this project. First of all, "Keep Off the Grass" signs have been placed on front campus and the mail. Also, announcements were made in the dining hall, while the student body to use the sidewalks. Special attention should be given to the area between Cot dormitory and Stevens Hall. No signs have been placed there, but it is requested that students not use this area as a passageway. Students are urged to use the sidewalks at all times and "Keep Off the Grass."

Signed,
"The Grass"

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

College students and Yankees have long been noted for their ingenuity. Yankee colleagians, therefore, should be able to manage almost anything—from no grades to extended vacations. The latter was recently obtained by students at St. Joseph's College of Rensselaer, Indiana, in a move that was not so clever as effective. The Hoosiers received an extra three weeks of spring vacation when water pressure in the dorms fell so low that there was no water at all. The trouble began when a hole rusted through one of the main pipes in the school's water system. Before engineers could repair it, students added some "help" of their own—everyone left showers running for over 15 hours, making sure that all the water that could possibly escape from the hole, had the chance. It worked. No water—no school. Students packed, and left three weeks early for fun and games. The president, however, had the last laugh. In a last-minute announcement, he declared that all classes missed would be rescheduled either at night or in June. Which will it be, smarties, work now or later?

Taking a cue from its women's colleges (no doubt), the state of Virginia has compiled a blacklist—of birds. Only these birds are the real thing, with feathers, wings, etc., and not the kind that usually make the Most Undesirable List at women's colleges. The General Assembly listed those feathery creatures it considers to be enemies of man and subject of destruction. We've declared all-out war on the starling, blackbird, buzzard, English sparrow, jaybird, and crow. Pigeons are considered neutral territory and hawks are simply overlooked. If the current attitude towards birds continues, what will happen? Perhaps the science department would create a new course—"Enemy Bird Warfare"? No one can be certain, but if this should happen, then Virginia's women's colleges would know how to handle one kind of pesky creature, at least.

Everyslick. Now there's a fellow we've all met before. He is what his name implies—the average lizard going through the world suffering all the disadvantages of his greasy state. It's not that he's necessarily a bad guy. He CAN be amiable, if his appearance doesn't scare prospective watchers away.

Don't be fooled into thinking that Everyslick is a two-dab Everyman. He is not. Unlike the latter who had Good Deeds to smooth the way, Everyslick does not. His good deeds, if there are any, are well-hidden beneath a rather "hairy" exterior.

Everyslick is everywhere—in the country, in the city, in college, out of college. His is a populous race, and a well-distributed one. My first close-up encounter with Everyslick came last Saturday afternoon on High Street. A motley-looking character was just standing around, watching all the girls go by, as they say. When I saw the pink shirt, black trousers, white socks, pretend-weejuns (for the collegiate touch), argyle-design black and green sweater, and most important, well-plastered hair, I knew my time had come. He was standing beside a new car—Everyslick must know how to travel in style. But the clincher was the Brooklyn-ese accent, with which he managed to say, "Is this Longwood College?" Obviously, Everyslick can't read. He was standing in front of the LC plaque. Later, in the Rotunda, the same merd and I met again. "Hey, is this the Rotunda?" Believe so, Everyslick.

When you're surrounded, what can you do but say, "forget it."

Saturday afternoon must have been a good one for Longwood-watching. The plane that buzzed the campus several times wasn't lost, or if it was, the pilot didn't mind. The roofs had too much interesting scenery to offer.

Artists Series Hosts Troubadour Harpist

Born in Cleveland, Ohio, the son of an amateur harpist, he studied piano at an early age and displayed amazing technical and interpretative talent for the keyboard. However, the constant image of the harp in the living room captured his imagination, and at the age of 15 he began serious training on the harp. During summers as a teenager he studied under Carlos Salzedo at the famed Summer Colony in Camden, Maine. He got his first job in New York upstaging the cherubim at a funeral parlor. From there he appeared in extended engagements at the Penthouse Club and leading hotels.

The "Rotunda" welcomes letters to the editor but it will not print any letter unless it is type-written and signed by the individual submitting it. Letters are subject to publication only at the editorial staff's approval.

Oleg Cassini Says

WHAT ARE THEY TRYING TO DO?

Well, they have pranced through their semi-annual paces in Paris, amid the usual efforts of fanfare and what sometimes passes for excitement—and what is the verdict? All I can say is: Good heavens, what are they trying to do to you? No matter who you are, they have devised something strange and odd, something designated to demoralize you, if not alienate you entirely.

Now, of course, you do have a choice. You can choose to look like a refugee from the thirties... a male refugee with criminal connections if the truth be spoken. For this graceful role you would naturally select a pin-striped, wide-legged pantsuit, complete with vest, shirt, wide tie and fedora.

Or, you might select the role of the debonaire, the sophisticate by donning a smoking suit which may come with cummerbund, ruffled shirt and string tie or ascot. Then there is the safari suit of the white hunter, loosely cut and sensibly detailed for the exotic life of the hunting plains. Also there are hacking suits and coachmen's coats, and on and on.

Remaining thus unmoved, you might consider Africanized dresses with hoopis, braids, raffia, and other minutiae of authenticity. Or lady dresses with bosom-high waists, scalloped edges and garden hats. To go, naturally, with knee socks and Mary Janes.

I could go on, but to what end? What a strange and distressing vision of woman emerges from this seasonal paroxysm of activity and confusion. What a distorted and perhaps even frightening image of the female of the species. There is woman as the predatory hunter, as the tough moll figure, as the worldly, effete dilettante, as the little itty-bitsy girl who is cute, formless and juvenile in the extreme.

Now I suppose that these various themes or guises are supposed to be foils to a woman's natural charms, to contrast with them in order to set them off. But of course we all know that isn't so. Anyone (perhaps anyone not in the fashion business) can see that a tough masculine style is going to affect the woman more than the woman is going to be able to affect or alter the style. And a woman in a cutesy little-girl dress is not apt to come shining through as an intelligent, thoughtful, sexy, or even grown-up woman. The costume will dominate the wearer, and not vice versa. A strong personality can water down the total effect, but never overcome it.

Now isn't it a pity to talk about styles as something to be overcome—but that is exactly what is wrong with many of the current crop. They're against you, not for you. They're cute or gimmicky or eccentric or terrible—anything to be different and noticed. And where has the woman gone in all of this undulating mess? Well, actually they don't care. They know you're around somewhere, probably looking for something new to wear. They're pretty sure that they'll get you sooner or later, that you'll give in to what's new eventually. And that's all that counts, right?—wearing what is new. Ah, for women who are women.

FASHION MIRROR

Of the varied and strange ideas to come to us from across the seas perhaps one of the strangest is the fancy bloomer, many years past its prime, with little reason for being except to give you something pretty to wear under these ubiquitous short skirts. Basically, frivolous, they are pretty of themselves when fashioned in crisp and feminine white organdy, perhaps with some lace trim here and there—but they don't do a thing for your leg. The French version is a full bloomer, rather cut like knickers. Some American lingerie companies are making a half-and-half version that has underpants and petticoats, being longer than one but shorter than the other. Since the hems haven't made it downward yet, the underpinnings are.

FASHION TIP

I hope you saved your shirtwaist dresses that have looked so passé for the past few seasons—for they're right back in style now, that what was once have re-emerged. In fact, quite a few are being shown already for the spring. Just about the only difference between these new ones and your old ones is the length—so move it up, up, up. Because the skirt on a shirtwaist is full, the skirt should be a little shorter than the length at which you wear your straighter garments. That is, you know, sort of a rule of thumb. Full skirts are worn a bit shorter than slim skirts, although you achieve the look of the same length. Scientific? Maybe not, put your money on it anyway.

Landrum Compiles Dance History For Association

Mrs. Emily K. Landrum, associate professor of physical education and dance at Longwood College, has been asked to compile the history of the dance section of the Virginia Association of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation. The historical records of the dance section will be included in a spring publication.

The Virginia dance section spans four decades. The first official meeting of the section was held at the University of Virginia in 1936 with Mrs. Louise Fitzpatrick, of Farmville, representing Longwood College. In the middle 1930's teachers were introduced to the "new" dance. During this early period teachers studied with such artists as Martha Graham, Doris Humphrey, Hanya Holm, and Charles Weidman in their studios. Longwood, Randolph-Macon College for Women, and Sweet Briar combined in sponsoring a master class for students of all three colleges.

Mrs. Landrum states that the period of the 1940's saw an "induction to the dance." During a three-year period, according to Mrs. Landrum, Longwood was active in teaching dance in 15 public schools within a radius of 50 miles of Farmville.

"In those days Longwood teachers and students demonstrated the 'new dance' on dusty stages and in dark corridors without adequate heating. In those days - 1940 and on into the 1950's - there were dance days on Saturdays for all high school pupils and teachers interested in folk, ballroom, and modern dance. In the 1960's dance forms developed at all levels - in elementary, secondary, and college levels," according to Mrs. Landrum.

Dance aids in unifying all three areas of physical education - sports, aquatics, and the dance. At Longwood when a student is learning skills in one area she learns to relate to other areas in the opinion of Mrs. Landrum.

According to Mrs. Landrum, "the goal for the dance section in the future depends upon a state appointed committee who will represent all levels of education and who will constantly aim for a dance section paralleling the division of girls-women sports." She states that in her opinion dance is basic in all education.

Mrs. Landrum has accepted the job analysis of surveying Virginia Dance forms as suggested by the National Division of Dance-recreation. A similar survey last year did not include dance forms.

As state chairman of the dance section of Virginia Mrs. Landrum has sent forms to 25 colleges of the Commonwealth through freshmen women in order to have a sampling of the whole state. Mrs. Landrum reports that she has received reports from six colleges listing folk dance, square dance, social ballroom dance, modern dance, exercise and modern dance, and exercise-gymnastics - ballet as being taught in grades 7-12.

The anticipated forms of exercise - dance, exercise - gymnastics - ballet and modern dance for junior and senior high schools are lagging as compared to other dance forms. In the opinion of Mrs. Landrum it is evident that the exercise and gymnastic concepts are overshadowing the real meaning and understanding of dance in all education.

Following the conclusion of this survey a questionnaire will be sent to key public school teachers.

Mrs. Landrum has also been appointed to the national nominating committee of the Aesthetic Section of the National Division of Dance of the American Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation.

Representing the southern district of AAHPER, Mrs. Landrum states that all four nominees suggested by her have been accepted by the national division of dance. The new chairman of the aesthetics section will be elected when the executive council of the dance division meets during the 15th Annual Convention in Las Vegas in early March.

Mrs. Landrum has also been asked to assist in nominating members for the theatre section of the AAHPER.

Stoffer, Gusset Score;

Lead Faculty To Win

By DONNA CRAMER
"Hot Shot" Stoffer and "Go-Get 'em" Gusset were in high gear Wednesday night when Longwood's men faculty defeated L.C.'s Varsity Basketball Team by a score of 40 to 25. The game was held at 7 p.m. in the Old Gym and a donation was taken up to raise money for the purchase of a new clock and perhaps a scoreboard.

Starting for the faculty were Bob Stoffer, Joe Scolnick, Paul Hughes, Jim Gusset, Earl Rubley, Randy Webb, Robert Wu, and Jimmy Helms. Mr. Stoffer led the faculty with 19 points. Mr. Gusset followed with 9, Mr. Scolnick and Mr. Hughes had 4 each; Mr. Webb had 3, and Mr. Wu had 1.

"Elizabete" King, Becky "the Blood Bomb" Bonardur, Judy Turner, Anna Pettis, Betty Reynolds, Connie "Blaze" Gallahan, and Jean Hendrick played for the Varsity. High scorer for L.C. was Connie Gallahan - she had 11 points, Judy Turner swished through 5 points, and Anna Pettis and Betty King had 4 each.

Officiating at the game were Arlene "Dink" Cundiff and Pat Ingram - both are Juniors majoring in Health and Physical Education. Since the men had to follow the established girls' basketball rules, they must have had quite an experience - seems they had a little trouble lining up for foul shots! The girls felt that playing against men for a change was - different! Right girls? They're hoping for a rematch very soon. Seems there are a lot of girls who want to guard Mr. Stoffer!!

Harris, Huffman Attend MBC Tennis Clinic

Longwood College was represented at a weekend tennis clinic at Mary Baldwin College. Longwood representatives attending the two-day event were Miss Phyllis W. Harris, assistant professor of physical education, Miss Ann Huffman, instructor of physical education, and Miss Angie Smith, physical education major.

Some 80 tennis coaches, teachers, and physical education majors, were in attendance at the clinic that was jointly sponsored by Mary Baldwin and the U. S. Lawn Tennis Association.

Play Festival Judged

On Wednesday, March 8, two drama majors at Longwood, Freda Richards and Suzie Holsclaw, and Dr. Lockwood, professor of speech and drama, traveled to Amherst County High School to a One-Act Play Festival.

At this district festival nine plays were presented by high schools throughout the state. The three-member delegation from Longwood served as judges for the plays, rating them as superior, excellent, or good. The plays rated as superior will go on to the state festival.

Two of the plays were directed by Longwood graduates, Julia Lookabill, and Mary Lynn Lanier, whose play received a superior rating.

Sirc Spectates

The springy weather has really brought the girls out of the dorms and onto the tennis courts. Class tennis singles will be starting soon after spring break, so you'll better get in some practice - if you can find a time when no one else is using the courts. Good Luck!

Congratulations to the H20 Club, the Corkettes, Miss Bush, and the many behind the scenes people who presented an excellent Watershow last week. Their long hours of practice really paid off for everyone who attended the performance - the house was packed every night.

One Junior Physical Education major whose initials are Betty Reynolds seems to have had some problems with the sink falling off the wall in the locker room as well as with her chair at a recent Sunday night supper!

This weekend four L.C. gymnasts and their sponsor, Miss Andrews, will be judging balance beam routines at the State High School meet at Kenmore High School. Judges for beginners and intermediates will be Donna Tribby, Angie Smith, Pat Halstead, and Tommie Stone.

Last Saturday Miss Bush and four members of the H20 Club attended a swimming workshop at Westhampton College in Richmond. The workshop dealt with the techniques of synchronized swimming. Of course they made it back in time for the Watershow!

Congratulations to the Varsity Basketball teams and their coach for a fine season's record of 9 wins and 5 losses. The guards often didn't get the credit they deserved when our news stories were written, but they really did a fine job of holding down the opposing offense. L.C.'s opponents scored only 493 points while our Blue and Whites racked up 571 points. Many times only the high scorers were mentioned, but without the teamwork, timed passes, and assists from the other players they could not have scored all those points.

This week we salute the team members for their fine illustration of teamwork - a necessity for a winning team.

I understand that Becky and Koonie have taken up "Crow watching". How about it, girls? Did you learn anything new?

Don't forget that you can get the keys to the bicycles from Carol Blythe in Stubbs 412 - have yourself a shirtleavin' good time on some Sunday afternoon. Remember, you can wear bermudas out to the estate for your bike ride!

Be sure to check the AA board for a schedule of Badminton games which begin this week.

Seems that quite a few Freshmen have been sunburning - oops, I mean sunbathing on the roof tops recently. How about it, Kris and Donna? Just wait 'til the weather really turns warm and the sunbathers cause half of the dining hall to be closed - Fun, fun, fun!

Last Saturday an archery clinic was held in the Student Building Gymnasium - representatives from Madison, Hollins, Westhampton, and Mary Washington Colleges attended the demonstration. Many professional archers were on hand to demonstrate the techniques of archery, and then experienced students were allowed to participate. The clinic was followed by a tea hosted by the Athletic Association.

Intramural Games End;

'Great Eight' Undeclared

The Color Basketball games are about to get underway! A Color practice will be held tonight and will be followed by the Color games on Thursday and next Monday night in the old gym. Game time is 7 p.m.

Should the first two games be split, a play-off game will take place on Tuesday night. Come on out and give your favorite team a little extra pep!

The Intramural games ended with the Great Eight in first place, being undefeated. Highlight of these games was the game between the Jolly J's and the Great Eight. The Great Eight (Sophomore team) got off to a great start and had what seemed to be a pretty good lead. The game was fast and furious. The Jolly J's just couldn't seem to sink the ball until the last quarter. They had a job cut out for them to catch up. The game ended with the Great Eight hanging on to a two point lead to win 14 to 12. High scorer for the Sophomores was Stephanie Du Ross. Susan Davis and Margaret Lawson had most of the points for the Juniors. The Sophomore defense was set up in the triangle with Cathy Haas playing man-to-man on Susan Davis. Both teams played a great game which really went down to the wire.

We take this opportunity to say "Thank-you" to the Juniors who officiated these games and to the basketball managers, as well as Miss Huffman and Dr. O'Neil.

Best of Luck to everyone in the Color games. Let's see lots of that true Color Spirit!!

Southside Va. FBLA Members Meet At LC

The annual regional meeting of the Future Business Leaders of America was held March 11, 1967. Students from approximately 25 schools in Southside Virginia attended.

A social hour was held at 9:00 a.m. in Student Building. Meetings were in Jarman Hall until noon, at which time the Mr. and Miss contest took place. After the meeting, the students were guests in Longwood dining hall.

The First National Bank of Farmville offered a $25 Government bond to the winner of the public speaking contest. Dr. M. L. Landrum, Chairman, Department of Business Education, said that this is the fifteenth consecutive year that the First National Bank of Farmville has donated a $25 bond.

Plays Ferrum;

Va. Beach Clubs

Last Saturday at 11 a.m., the L.C. Freshman Basketball team played host to the Cox Independents of Virginia Beach. The Cox Independents are sponsored by Hicks Beauty School and their coach is Larry Riggs.

The game got off to a slow start and continued that way for L.C. The Cox players began making some beautiful outside shots. Both teams kept up a fast pace once they got going, but Longwood just couldn't make the ball go through the hoop. Their shots kept bouncing off the rim. Chris McDonnell was high scorer for L.C. Kathy Parker, Robin Atkinson, and Shorty Marconi played fine offense as well as defense.

Other members of the team include: Donna Cramer, Betty Layne, Dianne Bradley, Carolyn Cummings, Judy Phillips, Brenda White, Carol Anson, Susan Gilham, Sue Spence, Penny Smith, Mary Jean Harold, and manager, Betty Boylan.

The Freshmen played another game earlier at Ferrum Jr. College. Although Ferrum won the game, our girls gained much experience. This should prove to be a real asset to L.C.'s future Varsity teams. The Freshman team was started and coached this year by Dr. O'Neil, head of the Department of Health and Physical Education.

Lambda Iota Tau Hosts Creative Writer

By VIVIAN GALE
Thursday, March 16, at 1 o'clock in the student lounge, Mr. George Garrett will speak to Longwood students on the subject of creative writing. His visit is being sponsored by Lambda Iota Tau, formerly Boerch Thorne, Longwood's honorary Language fraternity.

Mr. Garrett is a professor of English at the University of Virginia. He received his B.A. and M.A. degrees from Princeton University. He has also taught at Wesleyan University, Rice University, and Princeton University.

Mr. Garrett's topic is a well-chosen one, indeed, for he is a prolific writer himself. His works include poetry, novels, short stories, and plays. Among his books are "King of the Mountain," "The Sleeping Gypsy And Other Poems," "In the Briar Patch," "Abraham's Knife," and "Which Ones Are the Enemy." He has also published stories in such journals as "Mademoiselle," the "Sewanee Review," and "The Virginia Quarterly Review." His latest work is the editing of "The Girl in the Black Raincoat," an anthology of short stories composed by his creative writing students.

Longwood is in store for an extra treat Thursday, because Mr. Garrett is bringing with him two former students, Mr. Richard Dillard and Mr. Henry Taylor, both of whom have published books of poetry this year. Mr. Dillard, now teaching at Hollins, will read selections from his book, "The Day Stopped Dreaming About Barbara Steele." Mr. Taylor, a professor at Roanoke College, will read poems from "The Horse Show at Midnight."

Lambda Iota Tau cordially invites all Longwood students and faculty members to attend this interesting session.

LSU Coeds Win Battle Of Sexes: Seek Education

(ACP) — Coeds eked out a 251-244 victory over male students at Louisiana State University last month as they managed to vote down the proposition that LSU coeds came to college seeking husbands rather than an education, reports the "Daily Reville."

The vote was taken at the third speed forum of the semester, which turned out to be a battle of the sexes. Men seated on one side and women on the other side of the union ballroom volleyed vehement comments back and forth for some 45 minutes.

Denise Engenar, principal speaker for the winning coeds, said women 10 years ago might have been just looking for husbands but that, in 1966, women's "career drive exceeds their mating drive."

She noted that women make up one-third of the 79 million laborers in the United States and earn three-fourths as much as men do. Four of five coeds she interviewed, Miss Engenar said, knew what career they were going into.

Vincent Hazleton, speaking for the affirmative, argued that females are trained to get husbands from the minute they leave their diapers and get their "Betsy Wetsy" dolls.

"Females are hunters," he said, claiming that at the age of 18 they are ready to stalk their future mates and that the universities are their hunting grounds. Women know the best catches are made on university campuses, he said.

The main reason women drop out of college, Hazleton continued, is to marry and have a family, "hopefully in that order."

While the coeds contended they are in school to get an education, one male countered by asking, "Can you see yourself 20 years from now, working eight hours a day, instead of caring for a husband and family?"

Young Republicans Attend Convention

The Young Republicans Club has just returned from a Spring Convention in Arlington, where they participated in the election of the Young Republican State Executive Board officers.

The club is now working on the revision of Virginia state election laws. They hope to add to the national party's proposals for revision of who may vote and who may run for public office. They have been conducting discussions of the Virginia registration laws on campus and will climax their study in a full-fledged local registration drive. They will soon commence a Spring Registration in Farmville.

Mrs. Garrett, Registrar of the Prince Edward County Court House will be speaking before the club in April. The Young Republicans will then go to the scene of activities at the Court House and observe the process of registration.

Set for "The Chinese Wall," designed by Dr. Patton Lockwood.

"The Chinese Wall" Opens Tomorrow Night

By JOAN HARRUP
Tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m., the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs will present their first play of this semester, "The Chinese Wall," written in 1955 by the Swiss playwright Max Frisch. Different from any presented so far this year, the play is a kaleidoscope of characters as Brutus, Cleopatra, Napoleon, Ben Joon, Pilate, and Columbus appear during the play. The variety of costumes which have been made for the some thirty performers promises to make this play one of the most colorful ever produced here.

The play, itself, is a farce which offers an insight into contemporary man's problems. Although the action takes place in China during the completion of the Great Wall, time is suspended with the entrance of the many characters who each states what he believes to be the essential of life. The single contemporary man later discovers that the Chinese Wall is an attempt to hold out time and history.

The set is typically Chinese. It was designed by Dr. Lockwood after he had read books on Chinese architecture and simplified some of the designs for stage purposes. There is a circular entrance on stage left, and the Forbidden Peking was used as a model for the main roof.

The play will be presented on the nights of March 16, 17, and 18. Students are reminded to bring their data processing card for admission.

"Seated Official," the oldest object included in the Artmobile IV presentation, "The Human Figure in Art."

College Artmobile Theme: "Human Figure In Art"

Artmobile IV of the Virginia Museum returns to Longwood College on March 13 with an exhibition illustrating a diversity of artistic periods, styles and mediums.

"The Human Figure in Art," containing 25 objects from the Museum's permanent collection, demonstrates how artists over the centuries have treated the human figure.

Artmobile IV went on its maiden tour of 16 Virginia colleges and universities last September with an exhibition of ancient art from the Museum collection. The current presentation contains paintings, prints, drawings, and sculpture from ancient Egypt to modern times.

Contemporary art is represented with drawings by Amedeo Modigliani, Pablo Picasso, and Henri Matisse, an oil painting by Raul Dely, lithograph by the Mexican artist Diego Rivera, and a cubist sculpture by Jacques Lipschitz.

The oldest object is a granite statue, "Seated Official," which was executed in Egypt between 1878 and 1842 B.C. The exhibition also contains a gilded copper mosaic crucifix from the 12th century, a 15th century German wood sculpture, a Pre-Columbian ceramic figure, and a 16th century Saxon tapestry.

Giovanni Battista Tiepolo's painting, "The Ascension of Christ," is included, as well as "Scene from the Greek War of Independence" by Theodore Gericault, a portrait by Thomas Eakins, the 19th century American painter, and a 14th century Italian diptych, "Eight Scenes from the Life of Christ."

Beloit Adopts New Grading System

BELOIT, WIS., (I.P.) — The letters D and F, less popular members of the academic alphabet, have a less ominous meaning for students under a new grading and probation system adopted at Beloit College. The new regulations allow students to: (1) study their first year without fear of being placed on academic probation; (2) drop the two lowest grades from the total grades earned in figuring a cumulative grade point average, according to Dean William L. Kolb.

Under Beloit's graduation requirements a student must pass 30 courses and have a "C" average or better in his major field and in the final two terms. He must maintain a "C" average over all four terms discounting his two lowest grades. The adjusted cumulative grade point is counted only at Beloit. All grades, including the two lowest ones, are entered on the transcript which is sent to an graduate school to which the student may apply.

Student Activities Bldg Opening In September

The Student Activities Building will be completed and equipped with a minimum of furnishings by September '67. The postoffice, bookstore, bank, and possibly the snack bar will open this summer. Other areas will follow in phases until this fall. A current misunderstanding is that the building failed to pass its inspection. This was only a pre-bank. Today, bids were open in the President's office for construction of an addition to the back of the Stevens Science Building. The architects who will be handling this work are Thompson and Payne, long-time Longwood dorm planners. Also an octagonal lecture hall is planned on the Cunningham side of the Science Building. The second and final inspection was undertaken and passed last Tuesday, March 7. The contractors have done an excellent job and this building, when completed, will be one of the most beautiful and modern on campus.

Other areas of the school which will be renovated this summer are the first floor of the student building and the old site of the itec, Ben Johns of Richmond, has been given the signal to start drawings on a new Fine Arts Complex.

Plans also have been made to landscape the area between Stubbs and the Student Activity Building. Perhaps this area can be equipped with benches and planted with flowers.

The administration has been working hard, planning a beautiful campus for Longwood. One of the problems they've encountered, however, is removing

SRO Audience Response

Illustrates Series' Needs

When we were much younger our eagerly inquisitive minds were filled with many tall tales. Our curiosity was dispelled by many "Once upon a time..." stories, lest we learn any of the real "facts of life." We were extremely curious about how we came into the world. We learned that the stork brought us, or that we came from the doctor's little black bag, and we were perfectly content with this explanation of our arrival.

However, as we were nearly trampled to death in the stampede on our way to the recent birth film on campus, we wondered whether we, as college coeds, really know today about our birth. This tremendous mass of eager, inquisitive coeds (which, incidentally, far exceeded the mob at registration or even the throngs of students at the burning of Chi) was provoked to thought. Classes were cut, labs suffered in attendance, and other speakers on campus were being neglected in order that students might view the film. Originally scheduled to be shown in Hiner Building, the crowd made it imperative that the film be shown in Jarman Auditorium. An enthusiastic, standing-room-only audience filled Jarman, far exceeding any crowd drawn by the compulsory programs here at Longwood. The film, "Modern Obstetrics," of the American Medical Association, was shown by Mr. Louis Padavano, a visiting Jesuit priest, to an auditorium of attentive, awed students.

Mr. Padavano, also a gynecologist, was visiting the campus with The Reverend Walter J. Burghardt and Dr. Louis Savary, a cultural anthropologist. The trio spent the day on the campus speaking to classes and taking part in informal discussion groups with interested students and faculty members. The enthusiasm at these well-attended discussions was tremendous. Students zealously made use of the opportunity to express themselves, and were pleased at having an interest taken in them. Indicating the great success of the series, many students were grieved to see the threesome leave the campus.

All evidence points up the basic fact that Longwood is definitely and desperately, judging from the frenzied migration to Jarman, in need of a program for preparing its coeds for an informed entrance into married life. We believe that it would be extremely beneficial to have more programs of this nature on the Longwood campus.

Congratulations to Dr. Rosemary Sprague and the Jarman Series for bringing to Longwood a truly informative lecture series pertinent to the interests and needs of the student body.

Usual Liberal Education:

"Half-Smart" Students

ED. NOTE: The following is a guest editorial by Mark D. McGahey, a member of the editorial staff of "THE RING-TUM PHI" at Washington and Lee University. This is the first in a series of guest editorials to be printed to present a broader scope of editorial views at colleges and universities throughout the United States.

America is presently the wealthiest country the world has ever known. Just as affluent as our economy is our productive educational system. Education now reaches out to grasp everyone and turns them into useful and appreciative citizens. No longer must a man be lost in the darkness of ignorance for the light of education will seek him out. This "light" guides us out of our innocent childhood and gives purpose and direction to our lives. When we finally reach the higher levels of education, we are in a purer light where we can not only see everything clearly, but we can understand it.

A liberal education is designed to elevate man to a high plane. It not only provides him with a vocation, but it teaches him to admire and respect the finer things in life. The student is supposed to learn the ways of society — why it exists as it does and why it changes — and is supposed to learn man's role and then go on to find his own. The undergraduate, however, usually places more value on his major which will dominate most of his time. So, even with these great opportunities, the student soon finds that time is his real enemy.

Many students do take a semester or two in such fields as philosophy, sociology, fine arts, music, and literature. They learn the 'big names' and their major works. The student is able to recite these names with a mastery test, but that is as far as it usually goes. Very few go out into the world with a true understanding or appreciation of the humanities. They learned and have been programmed to remember why they are supposed to like or dislike something. They act in reference to other sources to the point that their taste and comments should and probably could be footnoted to avoid plagiarism. The student does not understand; he has rather memorized and categorized everything into a present socially acceptable role. The student may read a philosophical essay on whether or not there is a prime mover, and he may be able to reproduce it in toto. What happens, however, when he falls into an argument where the dialogue does not follow the steps of the book he read? Or, if a student learns why one of the great masters' paintings is considered great, can he tell why others are or are not; or why one book is considered greater than another? Maybe not, but he knows because he has been told so.

The point is that with the new, high level of education we are taking off the dark cloak of ignorance, but there is still a mist between where we are standing and the pure light above. It is nice to be able to know what is good and bad, but would it not be better yet to explain why and what it means to the individual? There is a beautiful realm at the other side of the mist, but it is still cloudy, vague, and distorted, and it will probably stay that way for most people. Who has time after college for such things? There is work to be done. It is a pity that the learning experience cannot start earlier or last longer — but then, one can always say, "Yes, I read the book in college — brilliant, wasn't it? Of course, I never really understood what he was trying to say."

Then, for one brief moment, he is struck with the despair of the half-smart. He knows it was good and worthy, but he never quite got around to finding out why. But then, it is only for a brief moment, for he has work to do.

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

(Ed. Note: A change this week from the humorous to the serious, as I speak out on a favorite Longwood myth.)

Several weeks ago in this column, I made a crack about the University of Virginia and its empty Jack Daniels bottles. It seems that one lowly Longwood student is not the only one who equates UVA with liquor. In a recent "McCall's Magazine" article, 96 (out of 97) college newspaper editors named the University of Virginia as the number one drinking school in the nation.

The Cavaliers were quick to retaliate. They said "bah, hump," and raked it up to the influence of stereotypes. The University, they believe, has been stereotyped as the "Drinking School," hence the idea that all Cavaliers are sots. Their argument is backed up by some valid points. For instance, the survey noted that Vassar girls are number two on the "most promiscuous girls" list, but rated the first position for "best wives." Harvard was the poll leader for would-be presidents, with Southwest Texas State in the second slot. This is due, no doubt, to the Kennedy-Johnson influence.

The Cavaliers have made this point. Perhaps UVA is not the nation's drunk center; perhaps we ARE unduly influenced by stereotypes. It is my belief that we, often unconsciously, are. Longwood is the number one example on a "misplaced image" list.

As hard as some try to make the "Longwood Lady" image the Longwood image, a number of people will refute this. They use sound arguments. The Longwood Lady image is only in the mind of the administration and some student government leaders. It is, at best, consciously considered only by a minority of the students. If this is true, what does the majority think about themselves? The general consensus is that most girls think of themselves as "Longwood Students" rather than "Longwood Ladies." They dislike being thrown into the classification that has lately taken on rather obnoxious connotations. They consider themselves ladies, but not "Longwood Ladies." They would be themselves rather than a part of the herd.

The Longwood Lady is a stereotype. She wears a hat to church, dresses neatly but not quite "well"; she is courteous and never, questioning. She is a typical middle-class girl whose one goal in life is to be a teacher. There is nothing wrong with this image, except that it is just that—an image. The young women who ARE Longwood College today do not enjoy having themselves put into such a singular category, nor do they want to be considered a "Longwood Lady." The image is not a BAD one; it is only incorrect. Call it the influence of a stereotype; give it any explanation you want. The fact remains: it is simply not representative of Longwood College. I am not suggesting that Longwood College is a collection of model hippies, swingers, or any objectionable characters. I believe only that there is more to the Longwood student than the limitations imposed by this stereotype. And I believe it is time to discard this image, and become what we REALLY are — Longwood College in the TODAY sense of the term. Perhaps if we concentrate on this — and let others know about it — we can be ourselves, instead of hiding ourselves beneath the "Longwood Lady," and give Longwood not another stereotype but an individualism. That, I think, is what Longwood really is. Let's not hide it any longer.

Oleg Cassini Says

BRIDES, SAVE YOUR MONEY

If you are in that euphoric yet nerve-shattering state of suspension between engagement and marriage, you've a lot on your mind. You are quite sure it will be the biggest thing in your life. You are equally sure that you must look devastating. So — what will you be wearing when the first bars of Mendelssohn ring out?

As you're probably learning, orange blossoms in your future cause turmoil in your home and perhaps bankruptcy in the end. And of course the wedding dress is one of the crucial decisions to rack a bride during the trying months of pre-wedding planning. It is hard for the novice to know where to begin.

Begin with some practical considerations. The odds are this is a dress you will only wear once, and that is the most important single thing that can be said about a wedding dress. It means you really don't want to spend a fortune, especially if you don't possess one. On the other hand, the sentimental side of you will consider breaking all of its sober rules in favor of this once-in-a-lifetime expense by suggesting various solutions.

For instance, you can always dye the white dress later, you tell yourself, and wear it to cocktail parties. Well, you can dye it, but more often than not it comes out as something less than the glorious gown you expected. And it may shrink.

Okay, says your romantic self, forget that. But if you buy a costly and resplendent gown, you can have it treated and save it for your daughter to wear. Well, you can throw good money on top of good money, and it can idle in someone's attic, either waiting for a daughter, or for a daughter who will consent to wear it. And even those who do are often less than enthusiastic. It has become just a little bit tacky to embalm a wedding dress. After all, your daughter may want to look current when it is her turn, too, you know.

Well, when you've completed rounds one and two with your romantic self, it may be reason's turn to take a round. For instance — one sort about weddings is that it is hard to find an ugly bride, as sugary as that may sound. Not nearly so many people will be scrutinizing your dress as you'd like to think, and white is singularly flattering to everyone.

And that is not all. Things are going great for the less-than-loud bride, because the key to today's successful styles is stark simplicity — and this is true for wedding gowns too, in spite of what some diehards think as they struggle with their buttons and fret about trains.

Now it is a fact that by and large those dresses that are simpler are less costly to make. And there is the key to your salvation. A simple princess dress in a classic pseudo style may be very reasonably priced. Or little organza tent. Or a long, empire column of silk. They need less in the making and may cost less in the buying. They are perfect solutions for the girl hovering between a full-blown formal ball gown and a wedding-white vinyl minidress.

The last one to suggest that you forfeit beauty and stylishness for the sake of a little money, especially on so important an occasion. But today's styles mitigate against such an expense. It's really hard to spend as much as your mother may have spent. Of course, if your conscience would bother you, you could always have it custom made. . .

FASHION MIRROR

Versatile knits are following the sun and are big on the resort scene this season. From this you can logically — and doubtless correctly — conclude that they will also be big in the regular spring and summer lines. And well they should be. They no longer cling uncomfortably (except when you want them to); they're apt to be washable; they're cool; they're simple or fancy; they're light-colored or dark, expensive or modest — they're anything you want them to be, and that's saying a bit, isn't it?

Patterned or banded in contrasting colors, they sparkle under sunny skies. Dark and delectable, they glide through balmy evenings with an elegance that ennobles even the humblest cotton knit and rises to a crescendo of loveliness in knits of silk and silk blends.

FASHION TIP

Perfume, that luscious sublime and divine, may soon appear new and improved. In England there exists, they say, a new aromatic perfume ingredient. It is said to be longlasting (the crucial adjective), to blend well with almost all fragrances, and to lighten the smell of heavier perfume. Its use in the whole field of cosmetics could be substantial if indeed it can add the virtue of long-lastingness to your favorite scent — whether soap, dusting powder, or whatever. And think what it will do for other products such as room fresheners and scented drawer liners.

Letter To The Editor

Dear Editor: How many times has each of us students said to each other, "I can't play intramural sports, it's only 'majors' that participate and make the class and color teams." I, myself, have made this common numerical times until this week when I stopped and made a little evaluation. What I found was really funny. . . of the ten members of the Freshman class basketball team only TWO are physical education majors. Of the ten members of the sophomore class basketball team, only FOUR are

Sophs Beat Freshmen; Take First Class Game

The Sophomore class team came out on top in their game against the Fresh Girls (Freshman class) by a score of 17-11, for the freshmen were Linda Driver and Dillard Vaughan.

Both teams got off to a slow start and at the end of the first quarter, the Sophomores were leading 6-2. The game picked up as the Sophomores doubled their score before the end of the first half. Their defense kept the Fresh Girls from scoring at all during the second quarter, even though the Freshmen held a height advantage.

During the second half the Fresh Girls warmed up and made a come back with nine points while holding the Class of '69 to only four points. It was too late in the ball game for the Freshmen to catch up with the Sophomores and the game ended 17-11.

Leading the Sophomore team to victory was high scorer, Jane Tibbs with 6 points, followed by Stephanie Dufoss with 5, and Kathy Hass, Cathy Jester, and Becky Easter with 2 points each. The Fresh Girls were led by Suzanne Turner with 6 points, and Carolyn Thompson had 5. Showing a fine aggressive game man class) by a score of 17-11, for the freshmen were Linda Driver and Dillard Vaughan.

The Student Education Association has placed sign-up sheets in the smokers for those girls interested in becoming members of the S.E.A. Lists will be taken down and turned into the Registrar's Office on Friday, March 24, to make sure all those interested have the proper grade average (Sophs - 3.0, Juniors - 2.5).

Grades will be checked April 5-7 and invitations sent out to all those eligible.

Henry G. Chesley Appointed To Visiting Board

Henry G. Chesley, Jr., of Richmond, has been named to the Longwood College board of visitors. He was appointed by Gov. Mills E. Godwin to fill the unexpired term of Judge Ernest P. Gates, of Chester, who resigned from the board following his appointment as judge.

A prominent Richmond businessman and civic leader, Mr. Chesley is president of the Wilson Paper Box Division of Dowling Paper Company, Inc. He is vice president and director of Dowling Paper Company, of Dowling, Pa. At one time he was president of the Richmond firm of Starke Foundry and Manufacturing Company.

Chesley is a former campaign general of the Richmond Community Chest and served as president of the organization in 1947 and 1948. Since 1957 he has served as president of the Richmond Memorial Hospital.

A past director and president of the Richmond Kiwanis Club, Chesley is a director of the Southern Industrial Relations Conference. He is a member of the Richmond Chamber of Commerce, National Association of Manufacturers, The Common wealth Club, First Presbyterian Church, and Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. In World War II he was a member of the state appeal board of Selective Service.

The outstanding Sophomore defense was led by stationary guards Tommi Stone, Jane Erdman, and Ann Bowles. Both teams played a fine game and both had the spirit and enthusiasm that should be shown by every member of our student body.

Officials Nancy Moxey and Betty Reynolds really called a great game.

Juniors Hit 54%: Win Decision Over Sophomores

Last Tuesday night the Junior Class basketball team won 10 points toward their Class Cup by defeating the Sophomore Class team. The Juniors won by a 3 point margin, 18 to 15.

The Juniors took the lead and at half-time the score was 12 to 8 in their favor. In the third quarter the Sophomores held the Juniors scoreless and took the lead 13 to 12. During the fourth quarter the Juniors put in 3 baskets for 6 points and the Sophomores only managed 2 points which came from the free throw line - it was a decisive quarter.

A number of fouls were committed by each team. From the charity stripe the Juniors shot for 54% while the Sophomores hit for 42%. The Juniors scored only 1 more basket than the Sophomores, and the game was really a close one with the offense and defense of both teams playing a good game. The scoring was spread out evenly among the players of the teams with no one player getting more than 4 points. Congratulations Juniors!

Officials for the game were Pat Ingram and Elinor Umbdenstock.

MENC (Music Educator's National Conference) will sponsor a bake sale at 9 a.m. on April 8, 1967 at Baldwin's Department Store.

"Do-It-Yourself" European Adventure

Principality of Liechtenstein - job opportunities are made available all year-round throughout Europe by the International Travel Establishment and no strings attached. You receive prospective employers' names and then you apply direct to the employer. Job categories vary as they would in the USA and wages will be identical to the European co-worker.

This is an opportunity for students not only to save but actually earn money while seeing and learning Europe. ITE has been placing students throughout Europe for the past five years.

For a complete prospectus listing job opportunities (with a job application) and also low minute.

Grass Suffers Abuse; LC Stompers Beware!

"Well students, it's now or never... either listen to your own kind, or murder some of your closest, yet lowest, friends."

"We do not deny that we are lowest, perhaps biologically and physically, and when you stand, walk, hop, skip, jump, sit, or, bluish, recline, on us we are closest, too. In the physiological sense, you understand?"

"Don't be gradu, have some consideration!"

The speakers overheard in the above conversation are some that we all tend to ignore - the grass here at Longwood. Faced with the possibility of extinction, and already weakened in some areas (such as between Cox and Stevens, the Rotunda front) they demand consideration, for they are vitally concerned that Longwood stay Longwood - not Mud-flat Sem, or College of the Dusty Plain. But they want to be livable too. They say it's fine to relax with them, lounge on them, stroll with Dates on them. But, in order to eliminate paths, and not start any new ones, do not take any short cuts. Just start out for classes, etc., in time to arrive on time.

Now signs are going to be put up, and, since this is a college, the grass feels all will be able to read and follow their ideas. More grass is being put down, but it will never grow unless the students stay off it.

So, remember, if you cooperate, soon Longwood will need several new lawn mowers. Just don't slight the sidewalks - they're sensitive too. Use them!

First Color Game Won By Red & Whites

The Red & Whites defeated the Green & Whites in the first Color basketball game last Thursday night by the walling score of 37 to 10. The Red & Whites led through the entire game. Leading her team with 18 points was Susan Davis. Judy Nevitt followed with 7 and Jane Powell had 4. Dink Cundiff, Ricky Howard, Suzanne Turner, and Dillard Vaughan had outstanding.

Gerg Manson led the losers with 9 points. She was assisted by Ann Bowles who scored the other point. Out of 15 foul shots the Greens only sank 4 as they could not find the range.

The Red & White victory may be partially attributed to their cheering section. At half time they proudly marched in with Sally Red & White and did a few cheers. Of course the Greens chanted back "Wait till tomorrow, we'll bring you sorrow like you've never seen before". It is hoped that more spirit will be shown in upcoming sports.

Congratulations Red & Whites on the first win in the Color play-off. Thanks are extended to the officials, Dr. O'Neil and Pat Ingram for calling a very good game.

Pi Delta Epsilon Elects Officers

Thursday, March 16, Pi Delta Epsilon, honorary journalism fraternity, elected the recipient of the PDE Medal of Merit to be presented at the Honors Assembly.

New officers for 1967-68 were also elected: President, Martha Wilson; Vice-President, Priscilla Farmer; Secretary, Sally Whiting; Treasurer, Bunny Somma; and Representative to Honors Council, Margaret Lawson.

Sire Spectates

Now that basketball season is over and spring is here, (well, some of the time) thoughts are turning to the outdoor sports - tennis, archery, golf, softball, and of course, swimming at the pool. Be sure to listen for announcements about Varsity and intramural tryouts. Pat Ingram is the Spring Sport's Chairman.

There has been a noticeable lack of participation in intramural sports recently. As Longwood continues to grow in size, the athletic participation should also increase - instead it seems to have dwindled. There has also been a lack of Color spirit, particularly on the part of the Green & Whites, although the Red & Whites are involved too. We, the student body, must keep up the spirit and participation that is so much a part of Longwood College. It means a lot to a team to see and hear a lot of people cheering them on. The A.A. has done everything it can to provide a variety of activities so that everyone can find something they like. Let's see more enthusiasm and spirit in our spring sports program (See this week's Letter to the Editor) Help to make your Class and Color the BEST!

To Joan West: You spell Boyd-BOY, not BOYD. The Badminton intramural tournament is slowly drawing to a close. There have really been some fast and furious matches with lots of smashes, flicks, and drop (sneaky) shots. The winners of the tournament will contribute 5 points toward the Class Cup. Anna, did you really clobber Connie's hand with a badminton racket?

I understand that after the recent Driver's Education test given in the classroom of the new gym, they had to turn the room into an indoor salt water pool. How about it, Pat? Thanks to Cathy, we all know where the vastus medialis is located.

Have a really great spring vacation - I think we all need it!

Conferences Held For Pocono "Hockey Camp"

It's almost time to sign up for the Mount Pocono Hockey Conferences - better known to L. C. students as "Hockey Camp." A very brief meeting will be held on Thursday, April 6, immediately after lunch in the Freshman Parlor. Anyone wishing to go should attend this meeting or see Mrs. Bobbitt, as the $10 registration fee will be collected and applications will be filled out. This fee and application form must be received by the Hockey Conference before April 15 for reservations and to insure the reduced rate for participants.

The date for Hockey Camp will be the week of September 5 through 11. Freshmen will not arrive at Longwood until September 13, so upperclassmen working with orientation will be able to return in time to assume their various responsibilities. One week at camp costs $40 - $10 of which is included in the prepaid registration fee. The other $30 is to be paid upon arrival at camp. Transportation will be provided by Longwood (the only college in Va. that helps its students).

Enjoyable dining hall work at the camp pays $30 a week. Some money has even been made through tips received. If you're interested, contact Mr. James O. Lynch, Director Camp Tegawitha, Toboyhanna, Pa. 18466. Do this immediately!

Hockey Camp means Friendships (from all over the state and eastern coast). Fitness and skill not only in hockey, but also Lacrosse, and of course, Fun! Just ask anyone who has been to camp - they can't wait to go back!

This year marks the 49th season of Camp Conferences. It offers a great opportunity to learn more about the techniques and skills of hockey and lacrosse from English coaches and our own United States team members. The weekly schedule includes practices, match games, strokes, tactics, and discussion groups on coaching, playing, and umpiring.

There's free time when one can go for a dip in the lake, or take a dive to the Tastee Freeze, or into town for a movie. The Hex Shop and General Store at Memory Town, U.S.A. were quite popular with the L. C. players. At night the colleges often get together for sings and marshmallow roasts and parties. There is lots of hard practice, too, and the cabins literally reek with the smell of Ben Gay - everyone comes back with a bump or a bruise, of a sore muscle, but they also have better knowledge, understanding, and skills of "the greatest game ever" - HOCKEY!!

Wesley Bldg. Consecration Set For April 13

On Thursday, April 13, at four o'clock a service will be held for the consecration of the Wesley Foundation building. The address will be given by Rev. Robert A. Davis, a representative of Bishop Gum, Rev. Davis is a member of the General Board of Education of the Methodist Church.

Taking part in the active consecration service also are Dr. Ruth B. Wilson, chairman of the Wesley Foundation Board, Miss Ayres, the Director of the Wesley Foundation, and Nancy Young, President.

The Wesley Foundation Choir, under the direction of Miss Lois Wiley, will sing two anthems. Invitations are extended to all Longwood students.

Faculty Cites Faults; Proposals Under Study

KENT, OHIO, (I.P.)—"We have some lousy professors in our as the faculty literally washed college and there's not a thing we its 'dirty linen' in full view can do about it."

But the truth is, we don't teach them how to teach."

The two-day retreat was built around three prime student complaints: Their "right" to take part in curriculum planning, lack of student-faculty contact outside of bringing in "experts" to tell the classroom, and "in loco parentis."

The third question engendered the most heated debate among the 15 students and 30 faculty members and deans participating in the retreat.

"We talk about letting students sink or swim in the classroom, instead of spoon-feeding them, to toughen the tissue," said one department chairman, "but we chaperone their parties. It's not consistent."

The three statements above, and many others, were the result of a two-day retreat at Kent State University's first student retreat, but nobody suspected they would come from the faculty themselves.

The three statements above, and many others, were the result of a two-day retreat at Kent State University's first student retreat, but nobody suspected they would come from the faculty themselves.

Campus Tripping Across Virginia Reveals Activity

By CAROL SKELLEY

If you happen to be in Richmond, April 25-29, the fourth annual Spring Arts Festival for the Longwood College is in process. The program will include various forms of creative arts: music, drama, choreography, films and painting. Sounds swinging.

Seems as if there has been a touch of Berkeley on Old Dominion's campus. A Student's for a Democratic Society has been formed on the campus to protest American action in Viet Nam. The demonstrators didn't seem to get the best end of the deal, however, when their fellow classmates pulled them with raweggs.

And now to the home scene (or is it front?) LC has proved again a main close to our own hearts - Sex will never be replaced by night baseball. Wednesday afternoon one of the visiting Jesuit priests showed the film "Modern Obsessions" to a packed house at Jarman. The film showed three actual deliveries. But mama, what about us girls?

"The Chinese Wall"

The Chinese Wall" promised four thousand years of history. The Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs tried their best of make that promise stand. In a production highlighted by top-rate performances from both Players and Jongleurs, it was indeed a disappointment that the script would allow such credible action to come only in bits and snatches. Areas of interest were sandwiched between monotony. The audience kept hoping for a change, but in vain. It was the great order, the true order, the final order" to the great, true, final, bitter end. John Adams and Jim Rodes, whose brilliant performances were the best on any of the three evenings, were rivaled only by Diana Coleman as the Chinese princess. With her portrayal of Mee Lan, the freshman proved she could hold her own among the old pros on the Jamon stage. Never did a Chinese princess achieve so much as Diana Coleman.

Of the Maskers, some were a welcome addition, some vent the way of the Great Wall. They crumbled. What Sonny Peterson as Juliet lacked in emotion, she made up with tender innocence. Jay Maynard as Romeo may as well have been the Great Wall, which his performance remarkably resembled. Tom Bradley as Pilate was certainly the most convincing of the Maskers, so convincing, perhaps, that he seemed misplaced. All these characters had their little problems. Waverly Land needed practice smoking a cigar. Even in a force, a Gentleman in a cut-throat turn green on the second puff. Karolyn McAdoo's Cleopatra was not the most enjoyable of the Maskers.

The acting, here and there, was admirable, the play itself was firing. What a shame that the actors had to suffer not only the inevitable crumbling of the Great Wall, but the inevitable crumbling of the play.

Aside from individual performances, credit should be given to the backstage workers for a striking set, gorgeous, if not quite authentic costuming, and especially to Pat Quinn for her hauntingly beautiful musical theme.

Announcement was made during the Founders' Day celebration of the establishment of an award to be presented each year to the rising senior at Longwood College majoring in physical education, who emulates the personal qualities, high ideals, and professional ethics for which Miss Her is known.

Music Dept. Presents Double Voice Recital

The Music Department will present a recital with voice students Phala Leggett and Ann Flesman, April 9 at 4 p.m. in the Small Auditorium.

Phala Leggett, a Music Education Major specializing in Voice, is a lyric soprano. Phala, who is now a Junior, participated in group recitals in 1965 and 1966. She had a role in the Spring of 1966 in the Choir opera, DIDO AND AENEAS. Among other activities, Phala is treasurer of Sigma Alpha Iota, a member of Music Educators' National Conference and the Choir, President of the Madrigals, a Colleague of 1968, and an apprentice of the Longwood Players. Phala's recital selections, accompanied by Rosemarie Walker, will be: "Die Mainacht," "Stanchen," "Es hing der Reif," and "Der Jaeger" by Brahms; "Depuis le Jour" from LOUISE by Gustave Charpentier; and the CYCLE OF HOLY SONGS including "Psalm 134," "Psalm 142," "Psalm 148," and "Psalm 150."

Ann Flesman, a Sophomore, is also a Music Education major who sings Contralto. Ann is a member of Sigma Alpha Iota, Concert Choir, the Madrigal Singers, the Jarman Singers, and the Music Educators' National Conference. She won first place in a contest sponsored by the National Association of Teachers of Singing in 1965. GIOCONDA by Ponchelli; and "Duty," "Vita," "1,2,3" and "Luck and Work" by lives.

LC Astronomers Visit UNC Planetarium

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Are you fascinated by planetary movements? Did you ever wonder why the date of Easter constantly changes? If your answers to the above questions are "yes," then you will be interested in the Morehead Planetarium, where the answers to these questions and many more may be found. On March 14, Mr. Curley's astronomy class had the opportunity to go to the University of North Carolina and tour the planetarium, as well as several other points of interest on the campus. The planet room or Copernican Observatory of the planetarium is 35 feet in diameter, moving model of the sun and the six planets nearest it. The time scale is condensed so that a year consists of 12 minutes and a day, two seconds. There are only two exhibits of this kind in this country.

The class was able to see one of the planetary programs, "Easter the Awakening." This presentation depicts the earth as a timekeeper, and explains why the date of Easter changes from year to year.

Other special features of the trip included the science exhibits, showing various aspects of astronomy. The "IBM Mathematics and the Computer exhibit" is one of the more recent additions to the display. The students also visited the Morehead Art Galleries, containing exhibits of the works of both old masters and contemporary artists. Another feature of interest was the sundial, one of the largest of its kind in the world, set in a garden of roses of 25 varieties.

The field trip proved to be both enjoyable and inspiring to Longwood's astronomy students.

Lambda Iota Tau Brings Lecturer Robert B. Downs

Lambda Iota Tau, the International literary society at Longwood, is sponsoring a visiting lecturer, Mr. Robert Bingham Downs, on Tuesday, April 18, at 1:00 p.m. in the Student Lounge.

He is a well-known figure in the field of library science, as is evident by looking at some of his former positions. ## Freshman Rita Matthews Captures

The "Miss Longwood Of 1967" Title

By IDA MAYE SIMMONS

Rita Matthews won the title of Miss Longwood College, 1967, Saturday, April 8, at the Longwood Pageant in Jarman Auditorium. First Runner-up was Janet Gordon; Betty Thomasson was second Runner-up.

Rita Matthews is a Freshman from Bluefield, Virginia. She is a member of Sigma Kappa Sorority, Legislative Board, and May Court. Sponsored by Sigma Kappa, Rita entered the competition because she likes performing and dancing. She presented an oriental jazz ballet to the music of "Kismet Melody." Rita has had thirteen years of dancing instruction. When contest judges asked Rita about Legislative Board, she replied that as a member of Legislative, she learns the problems of students, what new rules students desire, and how Longwood is operated. Miss Longwood received a $250 Scholarship, silver bowls and a silver star, several dinners for two, clothes, and jewelry. Rita will now go on to the Miss Virginia Pageant. Her first reaction to winning the Longwood title was "gumminess." "I was astounded," she said. Rita also won the Miss Congeniality Award.

Janet Gordon is a Freshman from Richmond. She is a member of the Delta Zeta Sorority. Janet was sponsored by her sorority. She entered the contest because she felt it was a good opportunity to develop poise. Janet's talent was singing an original song, "Love Is Blind," and accompanying herself on the guitar. The judges asked Janet about her selection of music. Janet loves music. The guitar is her instrument because most guitar music is slow and sentimental and enables Janet to best express herself. The First Runner-up received a $125 scholarship, a silver bowl for first runner-up, and a silver bowl for the most talented award. Janet plans to enter the pageant next year. She said, "I was surprised! I thought if I won the talent award, I wouldn't have placed as First Runner-up. This is the first pageant I was ever in."

In commenting on the Pageant, both Rita and Janet agreed that the girls on their hall, Third Floor Ruffner, played an important part in their success in the Pageant. "We are very proud of our hall," they commented, "They're the best bunch of girls on campus." The two also agreed that each could not have been successful without the help of the other. They were impressed by the absence of jealousy among the contestants. Both felt the pageant was "more fun than work." They noted that the contest judges were very helpful. "They made us relax, put us at ease. They organized a very professional pageant." Rita and Janet felt they could not have won without the honest criticism and help of their personal sponsors, the Sandy Jones and Margaret Moore. The two girls also agreed that the Pageant Committee has done an outstanding job. Their only regrets were the sore feet, the cracked smiles, and the quarter turns.

Betty Thomasson, second Runner-up, is from Clarksville, Virginia. She is President of Alpha Sigma Tau Sorority, Vice-President of the Sophomore Class, and a member of Collegues, Lynchons, SEA, and May Court. Betty was sponsored by her sorority. She entered the Pageant because she was in the contest last year and enjoyed it. She felt it was good experience. Betty played a piano solo of "Theme from The Apartment." The contest judges asked Betty about the advantages and disadvantages of an accelerated student. She replied: "The disadvantages lie in the area of limited participation in extracurricular activities. The accelerated student must skip the preliminary minor offices and run for the higher offices. The advantage of acceleration is that it makes the student work harder." The Second Runner-up received a $75 scholarship and a silver bowl. After two years in the Pageant, Betty does not think she will enter again. Betty said, "Speaking for all the contestants, I'd like to thank Nancy Maxey and the entire Pageant Committee. I'd like to congratulate Rita and Janet and give a special big thanks to my personal sponsor, Sandy Chalmers." In commenting on her participation in the Pageant, Betty reflected, "There were so many talented people who are specialists in their own field, it made me very proud to be a part of Longwood."

Baptist Student Union Presents Tech Led Revival

Following the theme "Call to Commitment," the Baptist Student Union will sponsor a Youth-Led Revival during the week-end of April 14-15. A team from VPI consisting of Chip Burnette, Bob Moore, Bryan Tallaferro, and Welford Tiller will be leading the activities.

Many events for the week end include fellowship, singing, and inspiration. One of the highlights of the program will be the showing of the film, "The Parable," at 1:30 Saturday at the BSU Center. A discussion will follow the showing of the film.

VIP Press Conference

Enlightens Students

(Ed. note: The following article is a "Rotunda" report on the recent press conference held at Longwood.)

The Presidential Press Conference that was held before spring break was quite enlightening in many respects to the student body. Dr. Newman, Dean Wilson, Mr. Carr, Dean Brooks, Mr. Thomas, and Linda Gardner were present to answer any questions that students had concerning Longwood.

The question was asked whether Longwood as it grows will employ the system of pre-registration. Dean Brooks commented that the administration has tried this in the past, but that especially in a girl's college, the students change their minds concerning courses and therefore this program was not advantageous. However, there will be one registration for the ten-week summer session.

Dean Wilson answered the question concerning the possibility of showing a movie in Jarman on Sunday as well as on Saturday evening. She found no objections to this and said that if students were interested in this change they should talk with Mr. Rubley, who is in charge of the movies.

When asked why the administration raised objections if a student wished to change the date of an exam, Dean Brooks said that with 1500 students this would create too much chaos. He said the schedule has been loosened up however, and that this time there will be three half-days off with no exams scheduled.

Concerning the possibility of future parking lots at Longwood which would allow more students to have cars, Dr. Newman said that we have space on the campus provided for parking but that funds have not yet been obtained from the General Assembly.

Dr. Newman was ready to listen to any comments concerning the possibility of allowing Long-

Green And Whites Lead Color Cup Competition

On Monday, April 10, at 7 p.m., the Athletic Association invited the student body to come by the Games Room and see how many points the Reds and Greens had toward the Color Cup. For a quick run down: Green and Whites — 20 points and Red and Whites — 10 points.

Points are also awarded for the Class Cup. The classes rank as follows: 1. Sophomores with 20 points, 2. Juniors with 15 points, 3. Freshmen with 5 points, 4. Seniors with no points. The Sophomores won class hockey and volleyball, the Juniors have won class basketball and badminton, and the Freshmen took the class tennis doubles.

Class sports coming up soon include tennis, archery, golf, swimming, and softball. The archery, golf, and swimming will depend upon the number of participants. If there are not enough students participating, the sports will have to be cut out of the schedule completely, so come out and support your class! Watch and listen for announcements about these upcoming activities. Check this page for the tentative dates on these sports. Remember, intramural and class competition is for everyone!

The winner of the song contest to be held on April 18 at 7 p.m. in Jarman will receive 5 points toward the Class Cup. Here's a good chance for your class to really take the lead or catch up — whatever the case may be!

Swim Meet Awards Ten Color Points

Here's a great way for you to help earn 10 points toward the Color Cup — the upcoming intramural swim meet will include the following events: 25 yard Butterfly, Backstroke, Breaststroke, and Freestyle, 100 yard individual medley, 100 yard medley relay, 100 yard freestyle relay, form swimming, and diving. A student may enter a maximum of 3 events, and each color will be permitted only two persons entering in each event.

The meet, to be held on April 26, is dependent upon the number of students who are willing to participate and get in enough practice. The minimum practice requirement is 6. You need not have been a member of a high school or varsity team to enter. All it takes is interest and a little of your time.

Practices are scheduled at 5 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays, 7 p.m. on Tuesdays, and 10 p.m. on Thursdays. Judges for the meet will consist of some of the members of the department of Physical Education. Five points will be awarded to the winner in each event, 3 to the second place, and 1 to the third place. The Color having the most in total points will be the winners and receive the 10 points.

Manager of the intramural swimming is Elinor Umbdenstock. Please see her in Wheeler 113 if you have any question. Dive in and SUPPORT YOUR COLOR!!

Hope everyone had a really terrific vacation and that you're now ready for all those great spring sports that will soon be coming up. (See this page for a list of tentative dates for these.) Seems that all the girls who didn't get a tan over spring break are out to get one now — in the dining hall seems a little empty. Watch out for those low flying airplanes girls!

To recap a little, just before spring break, the Red & Whites won Color Basketball and added their first 10 points toward the Color Cup. The Greens were defeated by a 5 point margin in what was an excellent game on everyone's part. The Junior Class, thanks to Pat Ingram and Joan West, added 5 points to their Class Cup. Pat and Joan won the last match in the Badminton tournament by defeating Seniors, Connie Gallahan and Pat Thrift, who were the runners-up. Congratulations girls!

Last week Donna Tribby got soaked in the eye with a tennis ball — she hasn't learned the basic skill yet, Duckling!

Orchestra will present a concert on May 16, at 7 p.m. in Jarman. Orchestra members as well as dancers from Mrs. Landrum's modern dance classes will participate. This year there will be more costuming and special lighting effects will be used. One special feature will be a number titled "LSD" — it should prove to be quite unusual. A tea will be held after the program for all participants.

It seems that Jinx Washington left something in West Virginia when she attended the House Association Convention — how about it Jinx?

It's about that gysmuit Tibbs, I thought Mrs. Harris told you to leave it at home after spring break. And now you've ripped the sleeve out of another one? Last Friday was declared by some as Wild Shift Day — of course the rest of the school had to wear sunglasses! Britton's been wearing her shifts kind of "short" recently, wouldn't you say?

It's about those aching muscles — 3 laps around the field, push ups, sit ups, isometrics, isometrics, sprints, etc. — remind you of any class you've had recently? Quote for the week, "Don't get hurt!"

Remember, you can check out recreation equipment such as pool clubs and tennis rackets in the locker room and bicycles from Carol Blythe in Subbs 412. Prediction of the week: Jean Hendricks will become the champion archer of Longwood College — if she ever learns to string her bow correctly!!!

LC Tennis Prospects Begin Net Practices

"It looks like we have better prospects this year than we've ever had," declared Varsity Tennis coach, Mrs. Phyllis Harris. She has at least 15 girls trying out for the team this spring, and she seems quite pleased with the way they've been working. The Varsity team will consist of nine players and will be chosen the week prior to L.C.'s first tennis match which is on April 22.

Last year the L.C. netters were hampered by what seemed to be Farmville's monsoon rain season which provided practice cancellations and some very soggy and wet courts. This is the first year the newly topped courts will be in use for Varsity games.

Two other matches other than those listed in the printed schedule will be added. One of these will be a home match with Ferrum. Be sure to come out to the courts and support our players at their first home match on April 26 at 4 p.m. All spectators will be welcome.

Final Jarman Speaker Discusses Filipino Woman

The First Secretary in Charge of Cultural Affairs of the Philippine Embassy in Washington, D. C., Dr. Julie Palanca, spoke to an audience of Longwood College students, faculty, and guests on April 11, at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium on the college campus.

Dr. Palanca is the fifth and final speaker of the 1966-67 Jarman Series. She discussed "The Filipino Woman of Today" and showed a film on the Philippines.

A former vice consul of the Philippine Consulate General in San Francisco, she has been a delegate to conferences in Asia, Europe, and the United States. Formerly Secretary of the Philippine Delegation, she attended the Brussels International Fair, and the United Nations meeting in New York in 1965.

Dr. Palanca has served in the Department of Foreign Affairs in Manila as chief, Association of Southeast Asia (ASA) Division, and special assistant to the Secretary of Foreign Affairs. She is a writer of short stories, feature articles and plays. She received her bachelor of literature and the masters degree in English from the University of Santa Tomas, Manila. She has also studied at the University of Wisconsin and Columbia University.

Dr. Palanca was recipient of the Philippine Women Writers Association scholarship for study at Sorbonne University in Paris.

Richmond Symphony At Longwood

The Richmond Symphony, under the direction of Edgar Schenkman, will appear in concert in Jarman Auditorium on the Longwood College campus Thursday, April 13, at 7:30 p.m. Any available tickets will be on sale at the box office the evening of the concert. Price of admission will be $1.00 per person.

Appearing under auspices of the Artists Series committee at Longwood, the program will consist of Mendelssohn's "Overture," Ruy Blas, Opus 95, Shostakovich's "Symphony No. 5, Op. 47," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 3, Op. 55."

Draft Solution: Women In The Ranks

(ACP) — Although Selective Service Director Hershey's call for a draft for women was based on a need for nurses, the editors of the Xavier University News Cincinnati, see certain advantages of giving women a more active role.

The Xavier News said: Can you imagine the devastating effect to the morale of the Viet Cong, some of whom have been living in jungles and underground for years, suddenly being confronted with a GI version of the playmate of the month looking over the sights of a M14? It is almost enough to destroy a man's faith in apple pie.

Think of the interesting use of which a general could put this, up to now, untapped source of man-err, womanpower. Turn a battalion of women loose on the front line and they would immediately talk the enemy to death. That is, unless the enemy countered with its own women's corps. In that case, military history would be presented with the first case in which troops refused to fight because their hair wasn't dry.

THE ROTUNDA wants to hear from YOU! Drop any suggestions, gripes, or ideas you have in THE ROTUNDA box in the New Smoker.

These and other questions marked this frank interchange of ideas between the administration and students.

'Sing-Out South' Group Performs Thursday

On April 14, 1967, at 8 p.m., Virginia's "Sing-Out South" will perform in Jarman Auditorium. "Sing-Out South" is a group of over 100 college and high school students from Richmond and Williamsburg. Their group is one of many across the nation; they pattern themselves after "Up With People" or "Sing-Out '66," which first appeared on a national television network last summer. There are now over 50 such groups in the United States who are showing that today's youth do care about the unrest in our society. They are singing about their concern with beat, rhythm, and tempo that are definitely up and moving. The Sing-out groups are made up of distinctive young people. Their fresh approach and real talent have made them popular wherever they have appeared; their sincerity and the significance of their message in music have been recognized and commended by such public figures as former President Eisenhower, the national columnist Henry J. Taylor, and the late Walt Disney.

"Sing-Out South" has packed houses all over the state since last summer in such places as Staunton, Richmond, Petersburg, and Virginia Beach. Their appearance here is being sponsored by the Longwood College Y.W.C.A. Admission will be 25¢ at the door.

Students Attend IAWS Meeting; Consider Joining

Cam Thomas from Legislative Board, Sally Heilman from Judicial Board, Jim Washington from House Council, and Miss Androvich, House Council Sponsor went to the University of West Virginia at Morgantown on March 23 to attend the Inter-Collegiate Association of Women Students which is a Women's student government organization. They went to observe and to evaluate the Association because Longwood is considering membership in this organization.

There were 600 girls present representing 47 states at the convention.

The organization was explained at a meeting on Thursday night. On Friday afternoon Dr. Edward Eddy, President of Chatham College, spoke on the theme of the convention which was "VALUES: MORALS OR MASKS." After the speech the girls formed small discussion groups and talked about campus problems.

The Longwood representatives left Friday but the meeting lasted until Monday. They brought back much information and now it is up to the Legislative Board to decide if Longwood will join I.A.W.S.

quests were turned down because of difficulties in preserving an adequate safety factor. That's really too bad.

At East Carolina College five cases have been reported where attacks were either approached, attacked, or followed by a Negro man fitting the description of an "ambush attacker." The President of the college has urged all girls to stay away from wooded and isolated areas and girls have been cautioned to always walk in groups. In addition, Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity has offered its services toward protecting coeds. They will wait outside the library at night and escort girls back to their dorms. What a pleasant way to end an evening of studying.

Campus Beautification Underway?

A campus beautification project is currently underway at Longwood. Shrubs and flowers have been planted in the vicinity of Granger Building, and between Stevens Hall and Cox Dormitory. Mr. Henderson, Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, hopes that these attractive additions to the campus will ward off all contemplative "short-cutters." Students will be courteously reminded by "Please" signs placed at strategic locations on the campus.

Student Education Assn. Honors Teaching Career

By KAREN MAHER

In accordance with the National Education Association, the Student Education Association of Longwood is observing April as Teaching Career Month. The National Education Association established April as Teaching Career Month in 1958. The National Education Association Handbook states that the purpose of Teaching Career Month is "to focus public attention on the importance of teaching as a career and the need to select, prepare, and retain the best possible teachers for America's schools and colleges." This month focuses on the challenges and achievements found in the teaching profession.

In compliance with the National Education Association, there will be a display on first floor of Hiner Building from April 7 to April 14 featuring books, pamphlets, and other types of literature on every phase of education. The subject matter includes topics concerning current issues in education. Also this month, there will be a Student Education Association Convention at Old Dominion College in Norfolk, Virginia, on April 22. The four present officers, Kathy Stone, President, Patsy Morton, Vice-President, Paige Winegar, Secretary, and Chris Dixon Burkett, Treasurer, and the four new officers plus Mr. George F. Elliot, the adviser, will attend from Longwood.

Coming up also is the awarding of the John Peter Winn scholarship of $100 at the Awards Assembly. This is a new scholarship that has only been in effect for about three years. In order to apply for this scholarship a student must submit a short paper on her need and qualifications. She must also be a member of the Student Education Association. These papers will be reviewed by the SEA officers and adviser.

Original Tunes, Lyrics Highlight Annual Contest

The Song Contest will be held on Tuesday, April 18, at 7 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. It will be a required assembly for all students.

Each class has already submitted their school color song to Peggy Wilkens before spring break. Peggy has turned them over to the three anonymous judges, who will look for such qualities as originality of tune and participation and enthusiasm of each class.

At the assembly Tuesday, each class will present their song as well as a song they've written in the past. The winner will receive five points toward the class cup.

Each class will be seated in a designated area of Jarman. Sophomores will sit to the right, Freshmen to the left, Juniors in the center, and Seniors on the stage.

FROM THE BOARD

Announcements At Meals

The following criteria will be used concerning announcements at meals:

- There will be no announcements of meeting times for any groups or time changes.
- There will be no announcements made concerning "Please read the wires." Each organization should have a folder on some bulletin board. Its members should be encouraged to read it, and it should be kept up to date.

The following types of announcements will be made:

- Notices from the Administration.

- announcements which launch the beginning of such things as athletic tryouts, yearbook pictures, elections, fund drives, etc.

If you wish to make an announcement yourself, please see someone at the Head Table before the other announcements are made.

When you do put an announcement at the Head Table, please follow these rules:

- Write out, sign, and date all announcements or they will not be read.
- Put them in the basket by the Head Table. Announcements will be made at lunch for the most part. Only very special announcements will be made at dinner.

This does not pertain to club presidents only but to the entire student body.

- Phone calls and callers will no longer be announced at meals unless it is an emergency.
- No lost and found articles should be put at the Head Table, nor descriptions of lost articles be read. Such things should be put in the Home Office.

Chemistry Professor Speaks At Seminar

On Wednesday, April 19, 1967, Dr. James F. Wolfe, Assistant Professor of Chemistry at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, will be guest speaker at a chemistry seminar. The title of Dr. Wolfe's talk will be "The Chemistry of Some Triations."

Professor Wolfe is a native of York, Pennsylvania. He received the B.S. degree in chemistry from Lebanon Valley College, Annville, Pennsylvania, in 1958 and the Ph.D. from Indiana University in 1963. During the period 1963-64 Professor Wolfe was a post-doctoral fellow at Duke University where he worked with Professor C. R. Hauser.

Dr. Wolfe's research involves the synthesis and stereochemistry of bicyclic molecules related to steroids. Since 1963 he has been pursuing research involving reactions of active hydrogen compounds with strong bases to produce multiple anion intermediates. These intermediates have subsequently been employed in the synthesis of new compounds which could not be prepared by more conventional methods. At present his research is being sponsored by grants from the National Institute of General Medical Sciences and the U. S. Army Research and Development Command.

Dr. Wolfe is the third guest speaker from other institutions to lecture at the Chemistry Seminar this year. Earlier this year Drs. Smith and Porterfield from Hampton-Sydney College presented talks. On May 2, Miss Debra Smith, a student, will present a seminar on and May 9, Dr. Oscar Rodig of the University of Virginia will speak. Each member of the chemistry staff has presented a seminar during the semester.

The chemistry seminar is a course open to junior and senior chemistry majors for one credit per semester. Each student who takes the course for credit is required to present one talk per semester on a topic of her choice which is acceptable to the instructor in charge of the course. The talk may be based on personal research which the student has conducted at Longwood College or it may be based on literature research. Participation in the seminar course provides students with an opportunity to gain research and speaking experience which is of value to those who go on to graduate work as well as to those who enter the teaching profession, when they leave Longwood. All students and faculty are invited to attend the seminars which are held in room 304 of Stevens Hall.

HAROLD REEVES

Harold Reeves Concludes So. Institute Lectures

The presentation of a popular Southern humorist, who is a nationally known raconteur of Gullah stories, will conclude this year's series of lectures sponsored by the Institute of Southern Culture at Longwood College.

The public is invited to join Longwood student and faculty on April 21 at 4 p.m. in the Student Building lounge to hear Harold S. Reeves, of Charleston, S.C. speak on "A Breath of the Carolina Low Country."

Mr. Reeves is an expert on picturesque patois-Gullah of the South Carolina low country. He has lectured in some 10 states. Producer of an LP Gullah record of world-wide circulation, he has conducted a radio program called the "Gullah Network" and devoted much time to keeping alive the Gullah dialect.

He is a graduate of Randolph-Macon Academy and the University of South Carolina. He served as an officer in World War I. For a number of years he held an executive position with the Social Security Administration. An Episcopalian, he is a leader in the civic, cultural and religious affairs of Charleston and the Society of the Cincinnati.

"Geist" Tapping Recognizes Leadership, Scholarship, Service

Geist, the local honorary leadership organization, will hold its second Recognition Assembly on Tuesday, April 25 in Jarman Auditorium at 1:00 p.m. At this time new members will be taken from the rising senior class.

Geist, its name based on the German word meaning "Spirit, imagination and intelligence" is a relatively new organization on the Longwood College campus. In its first year of functioning as the honorary leadership organization, Geist has presented several new ideas and activities to the student body. Dedicated to promoting college loyalty and preserving the ideals and traditions of the college and to fostering a spirit of mutual cooperation between the students and faculty, Geist sponsored the Geist festival in the Fall. In recognizing and encouraging scholarship as a vital part of leadership and service, Geist plans to award its first annual scholarship to a deserving member of the student body in the Honors Assembly in May.

Membership in Geist recognizes these three outstanding qualities in the student-leadership, scholarship and service—these qualities tempered by humility, integrity and intellect, the true measure of the individual. Outstanding scholarship, leadership and service not only in school and class activities, but within an individual field of study—these are recognized by membership in Geist. This membership is a challenge and should be accepted as such—A challenge to constantly strive for those beliefs and ideals that will strengthen the individual member, the organization itself and the college as a whole.

SAI Sponsors Highly Tighties' Concert At LC

The Concert Band of the "Highly Tighties," the Virginia Tech Regimental Band will perform Saturday, April 22 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium under the auspices of Sigma Alpha Iota. Directed by Mr. Thomas Dobyns, The Highly Tighties will play a variety of selections ranging from show tunes and march music to symphonic pieces. School attire may be worn to the concert, and there will be no admission charge.

The band, originally ten men in 1883, consists of approximately 60 cadets, all volunteers, since there is no established music department at Virginia Tech. This is the first year that their director, Mr. Thomas Dobyns, has been a member of the Virginia Tech faculty. Their name, "Highly Tighties" comes from an incident at the victory march in Richmond after World War I. The drum major inadvertently dropped his baton and picked it up, seemingly unaffected by the experience. An onlooker shouted "highly tighties" meaning stuck-up. Band honors include, among many, being the only band to have ever won three consecutive First Place awards in the Presidential Inaugural Parade. Sigma Alpha Iota will host the Band at dinner in the dining hall. After the concert, a party will be given in their honor.

Phi Beta Lambda Wins Va. "Outstanding" Award

By KAREN CAMPBELL
On April 7, 8, and 9, representatives of the Longwood chapter of Phi Beta Lambda attended the State Phi Beta Lambda Convention at Natural Bridge, Virginia. Fourteen state chapters were represented at this convention, consisting primarily of the election of state officers and various competitive activities.

Several Longwood students were the recipients of awards at this convention: Mina Koons won 2nd place in extemporaneous speaking, Nancy Harris placed 3rd in the contest for the title "Miss Future Business Executive" and Betty Hynson received 2nd place in the competition for "Miss Future Business Teacher." Carol Anthony was elected as one of the state officers, Reporter. Also the Longwood Chapter was selected as the most outstanding chapter in the state for 1967, thereby capturing the title from R.P.I., longtime holder of the award. Representing Longwood at this convention were the following girls: Betty Hynson, Joyce Harris, Nancy Harris, Jean Oakley, Janice Chapman, Elaine DeAtley, Carol Anthony, Mina Koons, Mrs. Mary Thomas, Rose Mary Street, and Linda Thrasher. Mrs. Francis Hamlett, sponsor of Phi Beta Lambda, and her husband also attended the convention.

Upcoming events in Phi Beta Lambda include the annual Spring Banquet; preparations are now being made for this event.

The Honors Council is sponsoring a Tutorial Program at Longwood and encourages all interested students to take advantage of the tutorial system. The council feels that it can help you with your academic problems. Forms may be obtained in the Office of Admissions, and these forms should be completed and turned in to Sandra Melvor in 218 South Cunningham as soon as possible. No forms will be accepted after May 15.

'Wonderful Wednesday'- Self-Education

"Giving students an incentive to educate themselves" — this is one of the greatest challenges facing undergraduate education, according to Dean John Stephens of Atlanta's Emory University. Emory and Dr. Stephens think an answer to this challenge may have been found. It's called "creative Wednesday," and it is a day during which there are no classes or student activities. The school's 2,187 undergraduates are left free to pursue any activity they choose, whether it is studying, reading, taking up hobbies or independent study, or just resting. The result of this midweek break is a higher classroom attendance, and 24% of the student body on the Dean's List, as compared with 21.1% before the change was instituted. No one was really surprised when the faculty legislative committee council voted overwhelmingly to continue "Wonderful Wednesday" — as it is now popularly known — for another year.

"Giving students an incentive to educate themselves" — this is the key to "total education," the ominous problem faced by every institution of higher learning. For many years administrators, professors, and students alike have contended that learning is not confined solely to the classroom, the laboratory, or the study carrel. It is here that lectures are given, notes rapidly scrawled or transcribed, ideas discussed, theories formulated. It is here that the complicated process of learning begins. The knowledge a student acquires in the classroom is only the basis upon which he begins to build his stock of total knowledge. And it is this "total knowledge" toward which "total education" strives.

"Giving students an incentive to educate themselves" — how does one do this? There is no set formula, no standard rule by which professors or students may judge whether or not they have given or have been given this incentive. Just as there is no formula, so there is no standard measure. Dean Stephens thinks he may have found part of the answer in "Wonderful Wednesday." This midweek break was established with one idea in mind: to give students a free day to use in any way which they wish. Not all students take advantage of the day, but the majority do. Emory students pack the library, work on independent study projects, many of which have no connection whatsoever with the student's major, and one group spends the day in an Atlanta Negro slum tutoring children. These activities will probably not help students to bring up their grade in Math 368 or Philosophy 240, but these activities are helping the students to acquire that much-sought-after "total knowledge." Outside the classroom, Emory students are working on their own — understanding how a Negro child thinks and feels, studying the distribution of histories in chromosomes, reading Goethe, going to concerts, visiting museums and other campuses for lectures. They are learning.

"Giving students an incentive to educate themselves" — the biggest challenge facing undergraduate education. Dean Stephens and Emory University think "Wonderful Wednesday" is a good beginning. They could be right. — G. A. M.

Duke Graduate Advises: Influence Prof For A's

Ed. note: The following is reprinted from "The Duke Chronicle."

A man who scored straight A's through Duke has given some cunning advice on how to make the dean's list.

"Remember that the reason you are in school is to influence your professors to give you the highest possible grades. You can become a great lawyer or doctor afterward," said Dr. William J. Bryan, Jr.

"Examinations are not the time to present your original thoughts or write a treatise on how the world ought to be. Just give the professor what he wants to hear."

"Never ask a question in class unless you are absolutely sure you know the answer. If you don't, you may appear stupid and that will not help your cause."

Bryan, 40, is both a lawyer and a doctor and is head of the American Institute of Hypnosis in Los Angeles.

Bryan attended Duke and made Phi Beta Kappa. He earned his law degree at the University of Southern California and was elected to the Order of the Coif, national honor society for law students.

He obtained his medical degree at the University of Illinois, where he had somewhat less than an A-average because "I wasn't following my own advice."

Bryan said he wasn't suggesting that a student should not study, do assigned reading or take notes.

"But you need to do more. For one thing, before school starts, you should research every professor you'll have. Learn where he's from, where he went to school and read everything you can find that he's written."

"Put your answers in his words, even if you don't understand them. . . . Accept anything he says verbatim. If he says black is white, that's fine. Put it down, quarrel with him after you get your A."

"Cape up at him in class and never take your eyes off him. If he makes a point that you think he thinks is important, not your head.

"Ask a question only if you perceive that he wants it asked, to advance the discussion. He'll probably say, 'I'm glad you asked that. There's a man who's paying attention.'"

If you don't know an answer, improvise. Bryan said, citing his own experience.

"Once, on a physiology exam, I had to describe a test for the adrenal cortex function. I didn't know the answer, so I made one up. I said, 'Inject radioactive sodium in the veins and measure the body's retention with a geiger counter,' as reported in the East Africa Journal of Internal Medicine."

"It was a 25-point question. I got back my paper with one point taken off because I didn't give the dosage."

Sweden Reports Faculty Member Publishes Article

Dr. Alexander Berkis, Associate Professor of History and Social Science, recently received a book in which his article, "The Rule of Ernest Birn in Russia and Courland (1730-1769)," was published. It came out of Stockholm, Sweden at the end of last year.

His article dealt with the dictatorship and political acts of the Duke of Courland, Ernest Birn, in Russia.

Dr. Berkis, who received a Master of Law degree from the University of Latvia at Riga and a M.A. and a Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin, has a new book, "The History of the Duchy of Courland 1561-1795," in the process of publication.

He is also co-author of two other books which were published in Sweden during the last year.

Michigan Coeds Rebel: Stick Up For Rights

(ACP) — Coeds at Michigan State University struck back at a masquerade recently at Hank Kiskern, undergraduate, after he wrote a letter to the "State News" saying that women should not be allowed to "take up space" in colleges and universities.

Asking a submission to "the glory of being a plain, old-fashioned, loving woman," Kiskern had written: "Every time I look up from a book and see a girl in a high-high skirt and skin-tight sweater, with bleached hair, holding a half-burnt cigarette (that has not touched her lips), as she casually gazes over the boys passing by, I shake my head at the feeble arguments which favor a college education for women."

Coeds ranging from freshmen to married graduate students responded with a deluge of letters to the "State News." Even a few males joined the attack.

Many analyzed Kiskern's motives. One junior speculated that he was "shot down for a date last weekend by your thigh-high skirted, skin-tight sweatered, bleached blonde, and you had to blow off some steam." Cora Hendricks, classifying herself as "one of the nine out of ten who graduated and then got married — but without even waiting the appropriate year or two first," couldn't decide whether Kiskern "had recently been jilted by a coed, had flunked a class in which a girl excelled, or just plain hated his mother."

Her education, she continued, "did not exactly gone down the kitchen sink. At present, it is helping my husband gain a Ph.D. degree, and even if it weren't it has not been in vain, since I sincerely believe an educated populace, male and female, is important."

"What really disturbed you?" asked sophomore Carol Koch. "Were you splashed by a bus? I feel sorry for a young lad whose interest and incentive to

Oleg Cassini Says

IT'S A SENSUOUS REVOLUTION

Madame, if you ever had any doubts about which sex is the most influential, look around. While it is true that you may see or wear — epaulets, blue jeans, man-tailored shirts, or links — your cuffs, that is not half so significant as what they are starting to wear — and do. Why, it is a veritable revolution, inspired by the female of the species, for a change and at last.

Primarily, it is the preening instinct that is being reawakened in men, the desire to look desirable and to smell thusly. It is an indulgence in sensuousness, the pleasing of the senses. While this seems to be an innate and timeless quality in women, it is more of a sometime thing in men.

There are generations and epochs in which this kind of masculine vanity is everywhere and paramount. It seems particularly tied up with royalty and the courtly life, from which it filtered down to the various lower strata of society, getting more and more diluted, the lower it got.

It is also tied in perhaps less closely with the power relationship between the sexes. I am sure that a good case could be made out for the gradual decrease of male preening as the female ascended in strength, power and influence, both legal and domestic. And in the United States, where women have reached perhaps their zenith of dominance in this century, the masculine urge to beauty and refinement has been submerged almost entirely.

Until recently, Europeans (both male and female, who know how to enhance themselves) decided to invade the American market and glamorize the men. They know what to sell, and we know how to sell it (how to package it, promote it and make it seem desirable "in"). So, while some Europeans are exporting flowered shirts, others are cosmetics, men, which is really not the same thing at all.

There is a certain class of men, to be sure, who have always equipped themselves with fragrant toiletries, emollients, salves, and so on. As a matter of fact, there have been two such classes of men: a small number of upper-class men who, in other times and places, were called aristocracy, and an equally limited number of any-class men whose masculinity was suspect. Only a fool or an innocent could tell one group from the other in spite of their smell.

But that numerical limitation is no more. Today sense-gratifying products are every man's, whether older staples such as shaving soaps, or new products which you have to adjust to, such as men's "stable bath."

Now if that should strike you as a less-than-masculine idea, give second thoughts to your appraisal. Why should not a man wish to smell pleasant, to keep his skin as youthful as yours, to relax in a warm tub — or for that matter to have his hands clean, attractive, or his hairline intact or his gray stayed off until such time as he feels old enough to accept it? Why should his values be any different from yours, when it comes to looking young and attractive? And why should you persist in equating masculinity with callouses and cracked fingernails and an abhorrence of the very things that would make him more attractive to you?

FASHION MIRROR

The waistline isn't just returning, it is returning with a vengeance, both here and abroad. And along with it is coming that old counterpart, the full skirt. It can be gored or gathered, but sure enough there it is sitting right below the fitted bodice and the belted waist — just as if it were fifteen years ago. There is much to be said for this line: it is comfortable for walking and moving about, it swings saucily when you do, it has a certain carefreeness about it when short and bouancy. And of course it accommodates a delicate waistline. Also, it tends to come with a fairly fitted bodice, so while hips are obscured, the bosom is not (unlike a shift, where the hip ratio may be obvious, but the loose midriff minimizes the bosom). That alone will receive applause in some quarters.

FASHION TIP
There are several products available now for women who want to impart a stiff or wrinkle-proof finish to clothes or fabric. Some claim to leave the material relatively soft, while others stiffen or vitalize your material (for such uses as tote bags, tall skirts, children's bibs, place mats, etc.) I can think of one advantage to compensate for your having to permanent press your own clothes: you can alter or adjust them before immortalizing their condition. It is very hard to alter or in any way change any sort of a crease that has been permanently pressed into a garment at the manufacturing stage. . . . as many of you already know.

Varsity Tennis Matches Begin Sat. At Madison

The Longwood Varsity Tennis team, coached by Mrs. Phyllis Harris, will play their first matches this Saturday when they journey to Harrisonburg to meet the Madison College team. Our L. C. netters will host Lynchburg College this coming Wednesday at 4 p.m.

The Longwood girls have been hard at work in concentrated practice since spring break. Members of the team include Gay Rice, Dee Dee Holdren, Marsha Franklin, Jean Hendrick, Pat Ingram, Anna Pettis, Judy Turner, Jane Tibbs, Suzanne Turner, Debbie Haller, Betty Laine, and Linda Driver. Sharon Williams and Chris McDonnell are the substitutes.

This year Longwood will play an eight game schedule, 4 at home and 4 away, plus a tournament at Mary Baldwin College. Four or five L. C. girls will represent us at this tournament. Added to the previously printed schedule will be two matches: April 24, at 3 p.m., Longwood will host Ferrum Junior College and May 16, at 4 p.m., Longwood will play at Mary Washington College.

Mrs. Harris has already started planning for next year. She would like practice to begin much earlier (many of the colleges L.C. will play have already played 2 or 3 games). Mrs.

Harris would like to carry more Freshmen on the team and perhaps expand the game schedule.

Here's wishing you the Best of Luck at your matches with Madison this Saturday! Come out and support our tennis team when they play Lynchburg on Wednesday — see Longwood tennis at its best. See 'Y'all At The Courts!!

First Round Tennis Singles Start Sunday

Class Tennis singles will be starting on Sunday, April 23. This will mark the first round. The second round is scheduled to be played by Friday, April 28. Semi-finals will take place at 2 p.m. on Saturday, April 29, and finals are to be held on Sunday, April 30.

Anyone interested in playing Class Tennis Singles is urged to sign up on either the Athletic Association or class bulletin board on April 17 through April 19. Be sure to check the A.A. board later for the master schedule. Since the winner of the finals will receive 5 points toward the class cup, it is hoped that many of you will sign up. SUPPORT YOUR CLASS!

Take one last look. The new bus station may be quite different — if you ever find it.

Bus Station Relocates; Train Schedule Changes

By GWYN MUSE

The cries of horror heard recently around campus, because of the alleged removal of bus and train services, can be silenced. Longwood is not to be left stranded as some of the rumors implied. The Norfolk and Western Railway has revised its passenger train schedule; the schedule of one of the Greyhound buses has been changed, but these changes will result in no serious impairment in traveling.

Effective April 30, two trains will be discontinued: the west-bound train which departs Farmville at 8:25 a.m., and the east-bound train which departs Farmville at 10:19 p.m. Trains 15 and 16 have been combined with trains 25 and 26, but this will result in no great deviation in the arrival-departure schedule as it now stands. The schedule for these trains is effective May 1. It will be altered only very slightly, perhaps about 10 minutes for departures. When the complete revised schedule is received at the Farmville station, it will be made available to Longwood students.

The eastbound Greyhound bus which departs Farmville at 9:50 a.m. will no longer go through Cumberland. The bus will go to Richmond by way of Burkeville, where it will be possible to change buses for all points south, including Danville, Greensboro, Winston-Salem, and Chapel Hill. This same bus will also discontinue its stop at Midlothian, but will now stop at the Southside Plaza, just outside of Richmond.

The bus depot has been sold, but will probably remain at its present location until the end of the current school session. The stationmaster expects to move this summer, although the move may be made as early as June 1. The depot will probably be moved to the present site of the Taylor Manufacturing Company, located on North Main St., although this is not definite. The stationmaster says he wants to find another location which will be more convenient for the college students.

Thank goodness for the rain last Thursday at 10 a.m.

Get you didn't know that Brenda Holly had super-strength — all she has to do is draw her bow and the arrow just breaks in half!

The classrooms seem a little empty from 11 a.m. on — there's seems a little more crowded.

Don't forget intramural swimming. You needn't be an expert to enter. The swimming manager reports that no Green & Whites have been attending the practices.

Get in there and help your color with color cup this year. Check the A. A. board for full information.

Mystery of the week: Why isn't there any grass under the second target from the right on the archery range? Well Jane?

Congratulations to the winner of the Song Contest! Chances are 10 to 1 that Chi will burn in the mud again this year — if they haven't already!

Archers Practice For Coming Tournaments

All those interested in participating in Varsity Archery are asked to come to practice from four to five o'clock on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

The first match will be the Intercollegiate Archery Tournament lasting from April 10 to May 19. Participants will shoot during these days and mail their best scores to the National Archery Association. Eight girls make teams for this match and two Virginia D.C.W.S. Intercollegiate girls are used. This allows 16 girls to participate, and Miss "B" is very hopeful that she will have enough girls for both teams.

Other matches include a dual meet with Westhampton on May 1, and a dual meet with Hollins on May 12. There is also a meet scheduled with Randolph-Macon Women's College, but the exact date has not yet been set.

On May 8, 9, and 10, a Telegraphic meet will be sponsored by the National Collegiate Archery Coaches Association. The Virginia D.C.W.S. Intercollegiate Telegraphic Archery Tournament for Girls will be held on May 18. In both of the telegraphic meets the scores of the girls will be telegraphed to be compared with other girls' scores from different areas of Virginia.

Miss "B" urges all girls who are interested to please come out and support the Varsity Archery team!

W-hampton Holds Lacrosse Clinic

Twenty girls accompanied by Miss Anne Huffman of the Physical Education Department attended a lacrosse field day at Westhampton College Saturday, April 8.

Lacrosse is a relatively new sport at Longwood and therefore Longwood does not have a team, but enough interest was shown by the girls for Longwood to accept the invitation to attend the tournaments at Westhampton. The purpose of the field day was to pick the best players from the surrounding colleges to play the Lacrosse team from Great Britain which is touring the United States.

The teams who took part in the field day were: Westhampton College, College of William and Mary, Longwood College, Mary Washington College, Sweet Briar College, and the Virginia Club Team. Longwood and Mary Washington combined to form a tri-team since the girls from Longwood were inexperienced.

Longwood had as many girls as possible playing in three of the six games. Miss Huffman commented that she was very pleased with the girls' playing and if enough interest is shown, lacrosse could become as popular at Longwood as field hockey. From comments made by Westhampton and William and Mary Colleges, the Longwood girls made a good showing. Longwood was invited by these two colleges to play them again and build up their experience so that later on Longwood might have a varsity lacrosse team.

Wesleyan College Hosts Intercollegiate Meeting

Thursday, April 6, marked the departure date for Longwood's student government officials, Linda Gardner and Carolyn Hingerty, President and Vice-President of Legislative Board; Eleanor Walnes and Myra Boone, Chairman and Vice-Chairman of Judicial Board; and Sharon Bannon and Susan Wolts, President and Vice-President of House Association — for Macon, Georgia. They attended a student government convention, the Southern Intercollegiate Association of Student Government, at Wesleyan College, in Macon.

Driving down naturally required a goodly amount of time, so the first night was spent in Charlotte, N. C. The next day they proceeded on to Macon, routed through Athens, Georgia, home of the University of Georgia. Upon reaching Macon, and finally finding Wesleyan, accommodations were found in their senior dormitories, with a lake and insects in back. Discussion groups and general sessions were held in the following evening and next day, and many good points were discovered by our delegates, about Longwood and about other schools, too.

Saturday afternoon, after the convention closed, the delegates decided to move on to Atlanta. So, off they went, spending Saturday night in Sherman's second home. They enjoyed the sights and accommodations — Peachtree Street, Georgia Tech, and Schwoilts, Bums.

Unfortunately, Sunday rolled around all too fast. They started the homeward journey and safely arrived back in Farmville Sunday evening.

Now, about the experiences...

Prince Edward Academy was host on Saturday, April 15, as ten schools competed in the Virginia Academy Athletic Conference's nine - event Forensic Tournament. Eighty-seven student contestants vied in speaking, prose and poetry, reading, spelling and debating.

The annual 4-H Club Tournament was held on Saturday morning, April 15 in Jarman Auditorium. A public address portion of the tournament was held in Granger Building.

Why Worry?

Editor's note: The following poem was forwarded to "The Rotunda" by Dr. Alan Rhodes of the Chemistry department of Cleveland State University. The staff feels that it is an eloquent expression of the sentiment of the war.

Why should you worry or give a damn about what happens in Viet Nam? Why is it any of your concern if men and women and children burn?

Only a pacifist, saint or fool believes in stuff like the Golden Rule. . .

You know the answer — you know it well —

"This is a war and war is hell!" Yes, war is hell for the men that fight,

Pawns on a chessboard, brown and white:

War is death in a sea of mud To the sound of bullets and stench of blood:

War is madness told as truth, Torturing women and crippling youth. . .

But you know the answer — you know it well —

"This is a war and war is hell!" Try to project what your thoughts would be

If you left your home as a refugee:

Try to imagine the sense of fear When the napalm scatters and flames appear. . .

What kind of feelings would it inspire

If you watched a child with its flesh on fire?

Could you find words for the pilots above

who boast about morals and Christian love?

War is a gamble played with Fate Where the stakes are high and the hour is late:

War is the writing seen on the wall

Which threatens to come and engulf us all. . .

It's time to worry and time to care,

It's time to pity and time to share;

It's time to consider the Human Race

And see ourselves in the other man's place.

learn are stifled by the lures of evil and seductive coeds." Sophomore Suzanne Thaler thought she summarized the views of many coeds when she asked, "What kind of a wife do you want, Mr. Kniskern, a dumb broad who has a neat red XK-E or one who can balance a budget and discuss intelligently with you the psychology of behavior and the Viet Nam situation?" And from senior Barbara Mueller, "Mr. Kniskern seems to be looking for a woman who will be no more than his housekeeper and bed partner."

Senior Michael Shier wrote that Kniskern sounded "like a man who has lost a satiated security object." Apparently seeing himself as the Paul Revere of the onrush, Shier proclaimed, "Take arms, take arms, the women are coming!!!"

New Senior Class Officers: Ginny Daugherty, Margaret Bridges, Sarah Wright, Eloise Jacobs.

Rising Seniors Elect New Class Officers

By CAROL JOHNSON

The month of April marked a conclusion for the Class of 1968, for the last time in their college years, they chose their class officers. The four girls chosen will be responsible for leading the members of the rising Senior Class through their final year at Longwood.

Selected for the office of Presidency was Eloise Jacobs, who also filled the position for the class as Juniors. Eloise is from Richmond, and has served as a Sophomore Assistant and as Assistant President of her dormitory in her Sophomore year. She is a member of Sigma Kappa social sorority.

Also from Richmond is Margaret Bridges, who will assist Eloise as Vice-President of the Class of 1968. Margaret served as Treasurer of the class in her freshman and sophomore year and as Vice-President in her Junior year. She was Chairman of the Colleagues in 1965 and is now a member of Kappa Delta social sorority.

The job of keeping the records of the Senior Class was given to Ginny Daugherty of Chesapeake. Ginny has served on Freshman Commission, House Council, and also the May Day Court. She is a member of Sigma Kappa social sorority.

The financial status of the class will be determined by Sarah Wright, who will serve as Treasurer. Sarah is from Norfolk and served as Assistant Treasurer of the class in her sophomore year. She was also a member of the Freshman Commission and is now a member of Sigma Kappa social sorority.

The selection of the four girls has created a milestone for the Class of 1968. They have chosen the girls they feel the most capable to lead them through their greatest and most rewarding year at Longwood. We wish the very best of luck to the Class of 1968 and to their new officers.

These students were Ann Flesman in the Preparatory Division, Linda Pritchard in the Intermediate Division, and Judy Rester in the Advanced Division. James McCombs of Longwood is the Vice-President and Program Chairman of the Association.

All Classes:

- If your suite is composed of girls from different classes, the highest in rank carries the lower classmen in her number.
- As soon as rising seniors are placed, I will post on the current sophomore bulletin board floor plans indicating which places are available for rising juniors.

Dr. Lane Attends Two Educational Meetings

During the past week, Dr. Charles Lane, Chairman of the Social Science Department, attended two conferences: one concentrated on the teaching of history, government, and geography, and the other was concerned with resource use education.

On April 14 and 15, the Ingleside Motor Inn, Staunton, Virginia was the site of the Second Annual Conference on the Teaching of History, Government, and Geography. "Teaching World Cultures through History and Geography" comprised the theme of the convention. Several prominent men in the field of social science delivered addresses to the delegation. Dr. Preston E. James, Professor of Geography at Syracuse University, spoke of "The Teaching of World Cultures: A Geographer's Point of View," an address approaching the same subject from an historian's point of view was delivered by Dr. Joseph R. Strayer, Professor of History at Princeton University. A representative of NASA, James V. Bernardo, director of the educational procedures division, also spoke at the convention; his talk was entitled "Implications of the Space Age for the Humanities." In addition to the general sessions, at which time the addresses were delivered, the delegates to the convention, including some of Virginia's leading educators in the field of social science, participated in group discussions on pertinent topics.

The Virginia Resource Use Education Council sponsored a conference at the Virginia Institute of Marine Science, Gloucester Point, on April 17 and 18. The convention consisted of a field trip, and a tour of the Marine Institute, including visits to selected laboratories where researchers explained their projects. Following the tour, there was a seac haul in nearby waters and a discussion of shallow water organisms in the Bay.

The Virginia Resource Use Education Council sponsors several conservation workshops and programs each year and assists in education television. Several years ago, the council sponsored the governor's conference on conservation of resources. The council is presently thinking of revising its publication, "Natural Resources in Virginia;" this was also discussed at the convention.

Foreign Language Dept. Assistants

Entertain With Highlights Of Home

Two girls at Longwood College from France and one from Mexico told some of the highlights of their native cities at the American Legion Auxiliary meeting Tuesday night at Mrs. R. B. Crawford's. The girls are assistants in the Foreign Language Department at Longwood College.

Marie Claire Charon, of Lyon, France, is in the United States on a one year visa. She showed pictures of some of the most interesting things in her city of a million people. It was the capital of France when France was known as Gaul in Roman days.

May 8 is a day of celebration and merrymaking, she said, as it marks the anniversary of the completion of the cathedral built as thanks to the Virgin Mary for freedom from Roman domination. There are still the ruins of a Roman amphitheatre and market place there.

It is described as the silk manufacturing center of the world. There are two universities at Lyon, one for the first two years of college, the other for the last two years. They also have an artificial silk slope, she added.

Nicole Thomas is a Fulbright scholar here from Toulouse, which is approximately equidistant from the Pyrenees mountains and the Mediterranean sea side. Both of these are near enough so that residents can enjoy either. A city of around 600,000 residents, many of whom are Algerians who came during World War II, 5,000 of them are Spanish refugees who fled the Spanish revolution.

An art and commercial center, the "Caravelle" is made in the aircraft industry there. There is also a fertilizer factory.

The city is sometimes called "the pink town" on account of the number of pink houses, or "the city of violets" because of the flowers grown for perfume making, bouquets, and candy.

She told an interesting story which happened during World War II. Gen. Charles de Gaulle, hearing that Toulouse was to be bombed by the Germans, got on the radio and not wanting to give away the fact that the Allies knew about it, mentioned that the "violets would be withered" on such and such a date. Residents caught on and made preparation as well as they could.

Toulouse is also a university city and has 25,000 students, Nicole said, adding that a new university is being built. Nicole expects to teach at Mary Washington College next year.

Presents Fashion Show

A fashion show keyed to the theme "Around the Clock with Fashion" was presented by the Home Economics Club of Longwood College in Jarman Auditorium, Tuesday, April 25. Seventy girls modeled clothes made in all of the clothing construction classes. The garments ranged from Sunday attire to casual sportswear representing the typical attire of well-dressed young ladies for all occasions. Outfits included some accessories made to match the garments.

Mr. Robert Woodburn, professor of speech at Longwood, was the moderator for the show. A feature of the program was Miss Monique Fawcett, two-year-old daughter of Professor and Mrs. Louis R. Fawcett, Jr., who modeled a dress made by her mother. The purpose of the club is to promote and create a more vital interest in home economics among students and a better relationship between the college girls and townspeople.

Following the show a reception was held in the Home Economics Building. Exhibits were displayed of other garments made by the students.

Future Teachers Make Preliminary Visit To Center

A tentative schedule for visiting student teaching centers has been set up for the girls who are planning to student teach during the summer session from June 12 to August 5, 1967, and for the Block I session which is from September 18 to November 10, 1967.

The purpose of this preliminary visit to the student teaching centers are to meet the principals of the schools and the supervising teachers, to observe classes, to secure information on the philosophy and objectives of the schools, to learn the names of the textbooks used by the school, and to acquire other necessary information.

The schedule is as follows: 53 girls will visit the Roanoke area on April 25, 1967; 20 girls will go to Danville on April 27, 1967; 5 girls to Charlotte County on May 2, 1967; 20 girls to Lynchburg on May 9, 1967; 18 girls to Richmond on May 10, 1967; 20 girls to Colonial Heights on May 11, 1967; 38 girls to Henrico County on May 16, 1967. The total number of girls who will student teach in the summer session and the Block I session is 172. Fourteen girls will teach during the summer and the remaining 158 will teach in Block I.

Time For Basking... And Cutting Classes

"O Wind, if winter comes, can spring be far behind?" Percy B. Shelley
Spring has sprung according to the calendar, and with the presence of spring there is an advent of new spirit and energy in almost all coeds.

The sun shines warmer, leaves and flowers are in full bloom, the grass is green about the lifting campus. The "Please" signs are still pleading, and grass shoots are appearing 'neath the beds of straw strewn around campus. Layers of clothing peel off and time lets coeds lie and dream in the golden light of the sunroofs.

Spring on the campus is that time of year when it is most difficult for students to tear themselves away from extra-curricular activities and go to class. Freshmen, by now, feel pretty much at home. Sophomores and juniors commend themselves on getting through another trying year and seniors are in a state of shock over what the future may hold.

Warm weather and sun, or clouds and chilly breezes, Spring is affirmed in all actions about the campus. Spring is a time for colors and out come the hot pink skirts with even hotter green polka dots, the teeny-weeny bikinis, the skinny strapless sandals. Skirts get shorter, knees get rosier, mini's get minnier, blondes get blonder, tans get tanner, and professors realize that the hour for basking in the delightful rays is at hand.

The pressures and aspirations of studying are often forgotten when the sun sends out its warm rays. Meantime, as coeds flock to the sunroofs their education is at stake. Everyone, sometime during Spring is tempted to let work slide and put off doing things until tomorrow. But we fail to realize that this is the busiest time of the academic year. It is so easy to let our studies slip behind us. Not only does the work get more involved, but new activities are springing up in full bloom. Everything we have worked so hard to attain may result in disaster.

"Nothing Shines Here," is the sun yellow days, that Time will take Her up to the Flunkout thronged left over. Oh, as she is gay and trustful in the cunning of her means, Time holds Her tan and laughing, though She sings in her quizzies like a crow."

A Sick American

Editor's Note: The following was written by a resident of San Francisco, and has enjoyed wide publication in newspapers throughout the country. We believe it to be something that should be shared with all proud Americans.)

I am one of the Americans who heard Mr. Khrushchev tell our nation that my great-grandchildren will grow up in a Communist world.

For some time now, this has bothered me. I am not a brave man — not even a big one. . . I am now fifty I paint my own house, repair my own car, grub my own devil grass, and nurse a modest savings account. I am a low-obiding man on the quiet side who simply doesn't have it in time to fight anyone ever.

My wife had me cleaning out an old trunk in the storeroom the other day, and I ran across the huge, old family Bible that I hadn't thought about for years. My great-grandmother had kept a journal of the trip across the Great Plains with a wagon and oxen when she and great-grandpa were youngsters coming out to settle in California in the great migration.

On the trail she wrote of sickness, dust and thirst, and the deaths and hunger, and heat and cold, and births like beads strung together on a thread of hope — hope of freedom and a land of plenty for their children yet unborn. As I read, I began to think about America and what it all stands for; and I thought about our enemies and what they intend to do to America — to its freedom and hope.

And, suddenly, I realized that I am a sick American. I mean really sick. I am sick of bureaucrats who tell me that my enemy is not really my enemy and that I should live together with murderers and tyrants. I am sick of government that hasn't got the guts to clean traitors out of its own offices. And I am sick of being a nice pleasant guy about it. I am sick of my country being ridiculed all over the world. I am sick of pink-fingered diplomats and lily-livered politicians who place personal career above the fate of the flag.

I am sick of forty years of relentless, creeping, cancerous, Communist Godlessness that never once has quavered from its avowed purpose of conquering that flag and seeing it trampled into the mud under Russian boots. I am sick of genteel desire to stand pat and pray while the enemy advances. I am sick of educators who teach tolerance of subversion of clergymen who would have me quail at the spectre of battle and turn my cheek in fear of what our Government can do.

In all honesty, the thing of which I am sick is the man who lets these things come to me; myself. And by the living God who made me, Sir, I am a sick American who intends to get well.

The Student

Under the rustling glens his separate path,
Crossing and recrossing life's separate paths.
Oh others like himself: whose aimless feet
Weave some invisible pattern on the grass,
Takes him to his classroom, to his seat.
Where he walks on words toward a drowning man.
He dimly imagines, or pictures in vague dreams,
A sliver man whose face he thinks familiar.
As his own yet cannot be exactly.
Who calls to him when he walks out again
Onto the solid earth to tread his way.
Under the rustling glens leaves, which float down.
Like net through water seeking the vagrant school.

Letters To The Editor

To the students at Longwood College:

I would like to write a letter expressing my opinion on the subject of the closing of tables. In the first place, I think it is unfair and in the second, it's unkind.

As a student at Longwood, I paid for my meals. I feel that this payment meant not only food to eat but also a leisurely eating atmosphere to be shared with people you know and can talk to.

After a half day or a full day of attending classes, I hardly have the energy to walk to the dining hall, much less go to every table and then be turned away because half the dining hall is closed and the other half is overflowing.

Some people may argue that tables are closed because many people do not come to a meal. They don't come because they know their table is closed and they don't feel like searching around for fifteen minutes and then taking "pot luck."

Sometimes there will be a vacancy at a table. This would be no problem. Some people have no assigned seats at all in the dining hall. They could sit there, or, I'm sure the people at the table would eat up any leftover food or another table may use it for seconds.

If the waitresses want time off, they can hire a substitute. They aren't paid when their table is closed so they aren't losing any money.

Personally I'm tired of candy and cokes as our table has been closed six times in the past week and a half, and that doesn't include the week-end.

What can we, as students, do? Table 39

Dear Editor:

As interested members of the student body of Longwood College, we would like to state our feelings of the upcoming opinion poll concerning the value of the color competition. The display of spirit and competition brought about by the color events makes Longwood unique, and without it the spirit of Longwood will die. The red and white and the green and white spirit not only separates the classes in competition, but this same spirit unites them as blue and whites. We feel as long as there is an interest in the color competition that it is essential to the spirit of Longwood. If you feel as strongly about the color competition as we do, support it in the upcoming opinion polls. When you are ready to vote, take into consideration that the red and green and white and red and white colors, circus, color cup, color shirt, and all color events will eventually be lost.

Sincerely,

Oleg Cassini Says

THE WELL-DRESSED WORK HARD

Now that we know who the best-dressed are, do you have any idea who the worst-dressed might be? Let us hope that is not a personal question, for an indictment of personal taste is a serious matter, and I never like to lose a friend over a serious matter.

Best-dressed, of course, is a matter of being in the public eye and being dressed in current, acceptable fashions—with the former perhaps much more important than the latter. Well-dressed has a different definition all together, and it actually involves more taste-making decisions than the so-called best-dressed have to make. For to be well-dressed requires much more selectivity, in terms of what is precisely right for that woman in your mirror, and the woman within her. The well-dressed woman may very well reject a new style that a best-dressed woman is wearing, because it doesn't really suit her. It may not suit the best-dressed lady either, but somehow that isn't her factor here.

A woman can easily be well-dressed in a six or eight or ten-year-old dress, although that is not what I am recommending. If she selected rightly to begin with, and if her taste runs less to vanish short-term fads than to classic cuts and colors, she will probably look just as good in it today, with a few alterations here and there.

Now "badly dressed" is an interesting designation because it really isn't too easy to be badly dressed — it is almost as if you have to work a little at it. To me, badly dressed includes several different elements, but they boil down mainly to a noticeable lack of harmony either among the wardrobe parts or between the clothes and the wearer.

Furthermore, in my catalog of sins, wearing something for the shock value alone is also something less than good taste. This could include a season's hottest new look, with an emphasis on the newness. After all, things that are new are not pretty per se, or even progressive, and you do have to exercise a little personal discrimination in evaluating a new suggestion — which is, after all, that a designer's newest style is: a suggestion for you to consider, not a mandate to buy.

A woman badly dressed can be under-dressed or over-dressed, too loud or too quiet, too old-fashioned or too avant-garde. It all hinges on the way the clothes harmonize with the lady and her psyche. She is and must remain the given, the focal point, the object to be enhanced. The clothes are merely supposed to be the enhancers, much as seasoning flavors the roast. When you can't taste the food for the spices, the balance is lost and the meal unsuccessful. And when the lady does not shine forth like a beacon light from within the clothes she has chosen, then she has not chosen well. Or else she has chosen too well, and lost the point of the whole thing.

Believe me, it is probably easier to be best-dressed than it is to be truly well-dressed, and not relying on wealth, press agency, and the shocking newness of the style to carry the day. To be well-dressed is to exercise in personal selectivity; it means making a statement, and it is very hard to get a good clear statement these days, whether about Viet Nam or good dressing.

FASHION MIRROR

If an invitation reads: "Black Tie," then I know I have no choice but to wear a dinner jacket — my favorite for spring being a pin-striped, double-breasted dinner jacket in black and white.

I like my companion to dress accordingly, however, you women have more choice in style. You may select a short or long evening dress, as bare or as covered as you like; for a change, I suggest a pants suit in wool, velvet, silk, an extravagant fabric, man tailored, with perhaps an extremely feminine blouse underneath; or, you could choose long culotte pajamas in swirling chiffon, silk, satin or whatever. Take my advice, it's no longer just the perfect little long or short evening dress for black tie evenings. Use imagination in what you will wear.

For a black tie dinner, try a silk culotte dress flaring out like a tent from its halter neck, one side closed from neck to hem in stone buttons. (One of my favorite looks for evening).

FASHION TIP

Now that you girls have also taken over men's racing gloves, don't lose your perspective. They are rather charming, but they are very sporty and casual. Anyone who wears them with anything but the most informal wear is running the risk of looking ridiculous.

And here's another thing, . . . as long as all of those knuckles are catching the light, at least try to have them look as untired, unchapped and unnoticeable as possible.

Language Assistants Entertain

An assistant in the Spanish laboratory at Longwood College, the student from Mexico is Cristina Torre. She pointed out that her city and country are very similar to the United States. She spoke of the great improvement in the educational facilities of her country, then, donning a native costume, she danced a dance performed in festivals and times of merry-making, there.

"Children are our most challenging responsibility and in order to prepare today's children for tomorrow's world, we must concern ourselves every day with the welfare of children," Mrs. Grace Gordon of the child welfare committee, told members in another part of the evening's program. "They must be taught a sense of responsibility."

Miss Carrie Bliss, child welfare chairman, said she found the work very interesting. Each child given for adoption or foster care is tested mentally and physically before being placed. Those under ten years of age come from broken homes and the foster home is investigated before the child is placed, she pointed out. Each child is desirous of "belonging" and having a sense of security. When visited by welfare department members they usually use the phrase "I'm" telling of their home life.

Athletic Association Poll Reveals Students Favor Present Competition

Through the results of the Athletic Association poll taken last week, the A.A. found out the student body's opinion of the present A.A. program on our campus. The results of the poll were presented to the A.A. board last night for a thorough study. Many students added their own comments to the ballots. In answer to question 2 concerning the continuation of Red & Green competition one Freshman added "Always" to her ballot. One Junior suggested cutting out red and green and just having class es. Another Junior said that the competition as it is now is not effective.

Comments on question 3 were as follows: Never, definitely not; it would lead to cliques; try this. As far as basing the competition on sororities went, two Juniors stated "especially not" and "definitely not." A Senior gave it a flat "No." One of the Freshmen argued that there would be too much intraschool friction and disunity. A member of the Class of '69 would like to try it based on sorority, dorm or groups but would like to keep color competition too.

In answering question 4, many students said yes, only if there was nothing else. "Yes, but I would rather it be Red and Green." A member of the Senior class answered yes, but said that it would not mean as much to her. One sophomore replied yes to the question and then added that she would participate for the activity part, but that it wouldn't be as enjoyable. Another Sophomore answered yes, but "I won't be Longwood." One of the Fresh summed up her ideas on the subject by saying, "When entering Longwood College, the Red & White and Green & White competition really added to my spirit here."

"I am in favor of Blue and White only, Red and Green does not promote school spirit; it destroys it," commented a Sophomore.

"I feel that class competition is all right for those who want to participate, but such things as song contests should not under any circumstances be required," explained a member of the Junior class.

Another Sophomore added that "sorority, dorm, and group competition would be effective in the beginning but the color cup should be the final goal."

It seems that most of the students who voted were in favor of continuing Red and White and Green and White competition and most of them felt that a program based on sorority, dorm, or group competition would not be effective. As the program now stands, a group of girls from one sorority or mixed sororities can enter the intramural competition as can a group of girls from the same dorm. Perhaps a new system of choosing class teams could be worked out.

The Freshmen and Sophomores seem highly in favor of keeping the competition as it now stands. Be sure to check next week's "Roundup" for the A.A. board's decision.

Playing vs The Elements

L. C. Loses First Match

The Varsity Tennis Team played their first match of the season at Madison College last Saturday. It was a bad day for tennis with the wind reaching high speeds and making the balls hard to control.

Playing first position in singles for Longwood was Marcia Franklin, who gave her opponent a fine match, losing the first and last set. Anna Pettis, Dee Dee Holden, and Gay Rice played the other three singles, with none of them winning their matches. Jean Hendricks and Pat Ingram played number one doubles, winning their match by going three full sets, with their Madison opponents.

In second position for the double matches were Suzanne Turner and Debbie Haller, and playing number three doubles were Linda Driver and Jane Tibbs. Both of these matches were hard fought, but the wind and Madison opponents came out on top in the finals.

Mrs. Harris, tennis coach, commented that all of the girls tried hard, and now that the girls have gained the experience of playing against the elements as well as their opponents, perhaps the future matches will be a different story. "We all have to lose one," Mrs. Harris said, "and now that we have our loss out of the way, we can win the rest."

Longwood plays three more matches this week. The first two are at home: Monday against Ferrum Junior College and the second is Wednesday against Lynchburg College. The third match is at Ferrum on Saturday. Come on out and support your tennis team!

Oriental Art Display Dominates Art Dept.

The Oriental aspect of art is dominating the art department. Currently there are two exhibits of Japanese art on display.

There are twenty-six traditional Japanese watercolors on display in the exhibition room of the Library. They are arranged to show something of the nature of Japan and man's place in it. "You see first the mountains and streams in various seasons and moods; next you see details of plants and flowers and then at the beginning you begin to see man - a small insignificant in a way, yet deeply a part of his surrounding. Finally you come to note spiritual life nurtured in the Buddhist tradition." All of these paintings were done by amateur Japanese artists. They are on loan to the Japan Society of New York for exhibition in the United States from the men of the Hojusha in Tokyo.

There is also an exhibition of Tokaido prints in the art department on second floor of Granger.

Both of these exhibits will be here until April 30.

LC Newman Club Delegates Attend Conference

Six representatives from Longwood attended a Newman Club Leadership Conference at the Shenandoah Hotel in Martinsburg, West Virginia from April 14 to April 16, 1967. The girls were Patti Pavi, Lannie Pavi, Joanne Wilson, Sharon Dietz, Janet Sullivan, and Karen Maher.

The purpose of the conference was to train officers to develop greater competence as leaders. A professional leadership program was provided by Leadership Resources Inc. Among the activities were general discussion sessions, a film, a personal growth inventory, a Folk Mass, and a dance.

Various other colleges and universities from Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, and Virginia sent representatives to the convention.

Class Softball Practice Draws 32 Enthusiasts

Class softball practice started last week and about 32 girls came out for the first practices. This sounds good, but actually 18 of the girls were from the Freshman class, leaving only 14 girls to represent the other three classes combined. The Sophomores had about eight, and the Juniors and Seniors had about three each.

Eight practices are required in order to be eligible for the class team. Each class must have nine players, and each class must participate in order to have the class and color tournament. The class team will, as usual, be chosen by the members of each class who have eight practices. Color teams will be chosen by a selection board composed of students from each class.

Practice times are as follows: April 24 through April 28 at 5 p.m. and May 1 through May 5 at 5 p.m. and at 6:45.

Class games will consist of five innings and the Color game will be seven innings. The class tournament will be on May 8, 9, and 10. The color tournament will be on May 16 (was previously announced for May 11, but a color team practice will take place on this date.)

C'mon out and get some good exercise and have fun at the same time. You can help your class win class and color cup. Don't be OUT, be SAFE - accumulate those points for your class and color!

Bondurant Runner-Up, UNC Golf Tournament

Last Saturday four Longwood golfers participated in the U.N.C. of Greensboro Golf Tournament which consisted of 18 hole medal play. Becky Bondurant, L.C. sophomore, was runner-up in the tournament with a score of 65. Candy Still of Salem College was the winner of the low gross scoring (lowest overall score) with a

64. Becky also had the lowest number of putts for the first 9 holes (12 putts), but each player was limited to one award only, so the prize went to another L.C. player, Brenda White who had 15 putts for the first 9 holes. Linda Walsh of L.C. was the runner-up of the lowest score on the back 9 holes with a 36, and Becky shot a 28 on the front 9 which made her score the lowest in that category. Judy Nevitt, who was playing in her first tournament, also made a fine showing.

Ramsey Presents Piano Recital Classical Music

Susan Ramsey, Longwood College music major, will present a piano recital on Sunday, April 30 at 4 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

Sue is a member of the Class of 1967, President of the Concert Choir, a member of the Madrigal Singers, Secretary of S.A.I., and secretary of Sigma Sigma Sigma social sorority.

A pupil of Robert Blach, her piano recital will consist of selections from Bach, "English Suite in F Major"; Beethoven's "Sonata in E flat Major"; "Barcarolle" by Chopin; and "Six Dances in Bulgarian Rhythm" by Bartok.

Longwood has two students who are winners of auditions for members of the chorus of the "Common Glory" summer stage play in Williamsburg: Tullita ("Pledge") Owen, Class of 1970, and Christine Mannina, Class of 1968. The summer company is made up of 68 members who perform for a summer season running from June 12 until September 2.

Becky, Candy Still, and Sharon Williams, U.N.C. representative, tied off at 10 a.m. and then the rain started to pour. It continued during the first 9 holes and Becky said she wished it had kept on through the last 9, too! The course was quite challenging and it required a lot of accuracy. Our girls came through it pretty well. It was a good tournament and a worthwhile weekend for the L.C. team.

Congratulations to our L.C. golfers who did a splendid job at the UNC golf tournament last weekend!

Have you noticed any students riding around on skate boards lately? Tommi Stone took a spin on Jo Davis' last week and decided that she didn't like it too much. I had already made up my mind when I saw Jo riding it - I'm a chicken at heart. Borrow a skate board and try it, if you've got the nerve!

'The Red & White Spirit' Captures '67 Song Contest

The Freshman class won the annual song contest with their song, "The Red and White Spirit." Pat Quinn wrote the words and the music for the song. Also assisting the class to victory were Janice Austin, who played the piano, and Jackie White and Sherry Marconi, who led the singing. The Freshman class received five points toward the class cup.

Second place went to the Senior Class who performed on the Jarman stage. They were dressed in their traditional caps and gowns. The words of their song were written by Judy Bateman, Betty Meade Jones, Diane Twilley, and Ann Quaff.

"Stand Up for the Red and Whites" was the title of the Junior class song. The authors were Elaine Jacobs, President of the class, and Carol Copland.

The Sophomore class song had an Irish tune which represented their class color of green. The words of the song were credited to Emily Gillespie, Linda Harmon, and Pat Armentrout.

The first week after returning from spring break, twelve ASA girls representing Alpha Chapter, attended the State Day held at Radford College. ASA sisters throughout the state met to become better acquainted and to exchange ideas. A coke party was held Friday night, and at the banquet on Saturday, each chapter was responsible for presenting a skit. The 1968 State Day will be held at Longwood next spring under the chairmanship of Kathy Grizzard.

The ASA's are planning a bake sale to be held in all dormitories on May 10. The money which is raised from this sale and the one held on April 19, will be used to send two elected delegates, Kay Hall and Betsy Rice, to represent Alpha Chapter at the 25th National Convention in St. Louis, Missouri, on June 26-30. The time and place for the bake sale will be announced in each dorm the evening of May 10.

This past weekend the Alpha Sigma Tau's were at Madison for a State Day with their sisters from Madison and Radford. One group went up Friday afternoon, while the other group followed on Saturday morning. The sorority was also busy Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday with their National Inspection. Mrs. Martin C. Dwyer, National Vice-President, District III, visited the chapter for the inspection. A tea was held for Mrs. Doyle Monday afternoon.

Alpha Chapter of Kappa Delta will hold its annual spring banquet to honor its new initiates on Saturday, April 29, in the banquet room of the Wyman Hotel. The Gamma Theta-Kappa Delta Scholarship will be dedicated to Mrs. Herman W. Richardson, an alumnus of Alpha. The $100 scholarship is presented to the school annually to help a deserving freshman. Dr. Newman will be the guest speaker for the banquet. Other guests will include Mrs. Newman, Dr. Frances Brown, Miss Florence Stubbs, sponsor of Alpha; Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Morris. Miss Emma Robinson, and several alumnas.

Sigma Kappa social sorority will hold a "Show Back Party" with Phi Kappa Alpha fraternity at Hampden-Sydney College, Saturday afternoon, April 22. Dressed in colorful and interesting costumes, the social was highlighted by a band and the most colorful hillbilly costume.

State Day is on Thursday at Zeta Tau Alpha Fraternity was held at Kenwood Golf and Country Club in Bethesda, Maryland, on April 22. The chapters present were Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia.

A luncheon was served with Dr. William S. Zerman, Executive Secretary of Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity, as speaker. Following the luncheon all chapters participated in "frag sessions" featuring songs, poems, and pep from all chapters.

The Zetas attended from this campus were Anne Smith, Sherry Grimes, Stacy Dodge, Judy Owens, and Maureen Luby.

On April 19 the new initiates and pledges of Zeta presented the members with the annual pledge party. The event began with dinner and was followed by a skit. Climaxing the evening, the chapter was presented with a console television from the new initiates and pledges.

Society Installs 27 New Members

In order to be a member of Alpha Lambda Delta, a freshman must attain a 3.5 average during the first school semester or an overall cumulative average for the entire year of 3.5. The purpose of Alpha Lambda Delta as stated by the local chapter charter is to "promote intellectual living and high standards of learning and to encourage superior scholastic attainment among women of Longwood College."

The 27 new members are: Claudia Cunningham, Martha Reynolds, Marsha Wine, Betty Powell, Beverly Ryder, Anna Wholey, Beverly Johnson, Bonnie Kearney, Andrea Myers, Linda Thacker, Martha Doffmeyer, Phyllis Cole, Emily Sallie, Dudley Gustafson, Denise Vase, Marcia Bowman, Jeanne Powell, Susie Elliott, Betty Boylan, Judith Kibler, Carolyn Spence, Betsy Rice, Vivian Whitted, Ann Patterson, Nancy Parsons, Sharon Bourne, and Sharon Moses.

The officers for the 1967-1968 year are: Beverly Johnson, President; Vivian Whitted, Vice-President; Susie Elliott, Secretary; Betty Powell, Treasurer; Claudia Cunningham, Historian; and Emily Sallie, Editor. Dr. Sprague presented the membership certificates to the members. Ruth Wilson, Dean of Women, presented the membership pins to the girls and installed the new officers.

With the advent of Spring and sunshine, Longwood students engage in a mass exodus to their favorite locations of escape, thus avoiding the pressures of classrooms and studies and 8 o'clock, 9 o'clock, 10 o'clock classes.

Some Longwood Seniors are inspired to return to their playground days.

French Club Farewell Picnic

The French Club sponsored a "farewell" picnic on Wednesday, April 19, 1967 at Longwood Estate for the French Foreign Exchange students, Marie-Claire Charon and Nicole Thomas, and for the Foreign Exchange teacher, Miss Michele Reynoud. Also, the new officers of the French Club were introduced. They are: Mary Lee McKeever, President; Janet Sullivan, Vice-President; Ann Erman, Secretary; and Linda Pelikan, Treasurer. Miss Judy Luxford and Mrs. Anita Ennoff of the foreign language department, and Christina Torre, the Spanish Exchange student, attended the picnic.

"Big Bands" Spectacular Proves Disappointing

By MARIAN BORISEVIC

The band "spectacular" Friday night, April 21, didn't seem very promising as it began. Several members of some of the groups didn't show and the disappointingly small crowd belied one another in comment. The show began an hour late with a combined group comprised of two "Sideshower's Band" members playing bass guitar and drums, and a talented lead guitar player who sings with the "Radiants."

"The Satisfactions" followed with such popular numbers as "Mojo Working" and "I've Been Hurt." J. J. Gay and his fellow band members succeeded in bringing some life back to the audience. It's easy to understand how Billy Johnson does so well in trumpet competitions after hearing him perform. Drummer Danny Richards also did an outstanding job, particularly in the "finale." Who said Farmville was dead? Certainly not by the talent of these boys!

The four daydreams, Liz, Paul, Romell, and Brenda sang next. During their performance they announced they had just recorded four records in New York last week: "Bin Ready for a Long Time," "Whip It on Me," "Sit Down and Think," and "Baby Take It Off." These four girls met in Greensboro while attending college there, two at A&T, and two at Bennett, Liz, 22, majored in Business Education and was graduated last year. Pauline is also 22 and majored in Home Economics. Her husband, James Cheek, is the daydream's manager. Brenda is 21 and majored in Psychology and Sociology. She loves the piano and plans to change her major to music when she returns to school. She is married to the show's m.c., James Norwood. Romell, 21, majored in Physical Education and loves singing, dancing, motorcycles, and "fellows." The daydreams are anticipating the success of their new records and hope to tour Europe sometime this coming summer.

Paul Forster, one of the "Sideshower's Band" who was present for the entire performance that night, explained that their seven members had also met in Greensboro. They will have a new release soon, "With These Hands." Darrell Banks and Bobby March followed, concluding the entertainment as the dwindling, spirited crowd clapped and shook shoulders to such songs as "Shake Your Money Maker."

Bridge games are right in keeping with roof top atmosphere.

L. C. Business Dept. Packs Full Schedule

During the upcoming weeks, the Business Department will be facing a full schedule, for both faculty members and students will be engaging in a variety of activities.

On April 28 and 29, Dr. Landrum will attend the State Convention of the Future Business Leaders of America in Roanoke. While at the convention, Dr. Landrum will be charge of the State Public Speaking Contest; other scheduled activities include attendance at the Executive Board Meeting on the night of the 28th and the Annual Awards Dinner on the night of the 29th.

Mr. Leeper will attend the 19th Annual Meeting of the Southwestern Section of the American Accounting Association; the convention will be held at the University of South Carolina April 28 and 29. The theme of the convention will be "Accounting: Retrospective and Prospective." The major conferences which Mr. Leeper will attend are "Trends in Accounting Curricula, Graduate and Undergraduate," "Professional Developments: Bringing Accounting Professors Up to Date," and "Integrating Computer Training into Accounting Courses."

On May 3, Phi Beta Lambda will hold their Annual Spring Banquet in the Tea Room. At this time the new officers for the upcoming year will be installed. They are as follows: President - Miss Koons, Vice-President - Peggy Priode, Secretary - Jean Oakley, Treasurer - Nancy Harris, Reporter - Elaine DeAtley, Historian - Janice Chapman.

Phi Omega Pi will be auditing the books of all organizations receiving money from the Student Activities Fee from May 1-11. In preparing for the audit, the treasurers of the organizations are asked to bring their records up to date, secure a bank statement and canceled checks through April 30, 1967, and present audit business papers representing total expenditures. In addition, treasurers, in consultation with their faculty advisor are asked to prepare their budgets for next year. Appointments for the audit may be made by contacting Mr. Leeper in Rufner 126; any organization who has not already made an appointment is urged to do so immediately.

Phi Omega Pi will award two textbook scholarships of $50 each; any business major is eligible to receive one of these scholarships. Application forms are attached to the bulletin board outside of the typing room in Rufner. Completed forms must be returned to either Mr. Leeper in R126 or Paige Wineberger in B-5, South Cunningham, by April 30, 1967.

Annual Orchestis Concert Combines Eastern, Western Cultures In Dance

Modern dance students and Orchestis will unite with approximately 100 students in a concert at Jarman Auditorium on May 16 at 1 p.m. Orchestis members, apprentices, advanced class students, intermediate class and three freshmen beginning dance groups will perform. Betty Patterson, president of Orchestis has appointed members of the organization into committees behind the scenes.

The first work titled "Arche-tonics: Reflections of the Times" relate to symbols in dance form for understanding the feelings and sensations of people in a world of tension, and which clarifies western civilization as compared to the calm of Eastern cultures.

This five part work involves the freshmen groups. Structured into architectural forms or a mass of people on stage, various aspects of tension reflect the changes and the times.

Group I clarifies "Group Tension". Group II as "Group Focus" introduces those searching meaning beyond selves. Both groups - I and II unite the symbolic circle of all cultures as form for ritual.

Group III breaks the circle as the "Individual Enigma of the Self" reflects angular lines or patterns of movement as another force disturbing the human elements in a changing world.

In Group IV, the spectator envisions himself as "Depersonal-

izing Selves" who are caught within a vise that represents an angry mass of stealthily, frightened and belligerent humans whom have lost their faith in fellow man, self and the light beyond all selves. The song of life is lost through the harsh tones of electronic music into a modified St. Vitus Dance of the medieval period.

Group V titled "The Search and Meaning" unites the symbols of the broken circle. Frustrated human elements form groups to search beyond reality. Patterns of agony, fear and apathy lead to awe of the cross within the symbol of the circle of mankind. Symbols of the cross hanging high overhead re-unite groups who find peace, love, and faith.

The second work entitled "Pentatonics" reflect aspects of Eastern civilization. Three studies relate basic ballet as a form not only in Western civilization but originally from Eastern cultures. The first attempt of understanding combines the "pie" of ballet and the "hand" as a choice for human gestures as a delightful pattern of two forms. Using sculptural forms as the base, the development of movement patterns merge into set positions, then unbalancing positions or patterns reflecting the asymmetry of movement in space, and medieval aspects of the Orient that more or less parallel that of European cultures. Moving forward in space leads to forming sets or positions of the body as cultures develop. In another sense, one may visualize human sculptural forms as arrested or frozen movement.

In the second study of Pentatonics, one sees "Buddha Figures" move from symbolic opposition to movement patterns. From positioning the body the

VATE Sponsors Memorial Fund; Honors Simonini

Many of the friends of Dr. Simonini in several departments of the college remember him with admiration and affection, appreciative of his services to Longwood over a period of fifteen years.

It is the wish of the English Department to inform the faculty and other friends that the Virginia Association of Teachers of English, which he served so faithfully for many years, is undertaking to raise a memorial fund in his name. The next issue of the "Virginia English Bulletin" will carry further information on the subject along with an article of appreciation.

It seems appropriate to suggest that the faculty and alumnae friends who grieve over Dr. Simonini's untimely death take some part in assisting in this memorial already in the plans of VATE. Those who wish to make a contribution may send their check to Mrs. J. C. Bristow, Treasurer, Virginia Association of Teachers of English, Saluda, Virginia. Make checks payable to Virginia Association of Teachers of English and indicate "Simonini Memorial Fund."

If preferred, the checks may be placed in the faculty mail boxes of Mary P. Nichols, Mildred D. Davis or Foster B. Gresham.

"May Day Around The World" Features Dell Program, Dance

"May Day Around the World," theme of May Day 1967, will recreate spring festivals in various countries around the world. Included in the program will be dances from the festivals of England, Sweden, Peru, Russia, Mexico, and France. The May Court, made up of representatives from each class, will represent the United States. The conclusion of the program will be the traditional dance around the May Pole, performed by all the dancers, signifying the coming together of all countries to celebrate the coming of spring. Scenery for each country and dance will be provided by a large representation of a travel poster. These are being made by Barbara Lewis, Kay Collins, Dianna Johnson, Marilyn Bates, Dillard Vaughan, and Ginny Padgett, Leslie Sedgwick and Mary Virginia Hurt are making the backdrop, which will be the Statue of Liberty.

This year May Day is being given a new look and new ideas, according to Carolyn MacAdoo, May Day Chairman. She and the May Day Committee have tried to plan a weekend of fun and enjoyment on campus. This, she stated, does not include the old "fairies and elves" idea of a May Day celebration, but a day that is marked by enjoyment - with a touch of sophistication. The May Day Chairman cited Open House as an example of the new idea of May Day.

The May Day activities will begin at 12:15 with a special luncheon in the dining hall. Guest tickets will be sold in the Home Office. The price is $1.05 and students are being asked to buy them early. The crowning of the May Queen, Linda Carr, and presentation of her court will begin at 2:00 at the Dell at Longwood Estate. The "Around the World" program will be presented at this time. Following the program, a reception will be held on the lawn of the Estate. From 4:00 until 6:00, Open House will be held in each dormitory. A semiformal dance, to begin at 8:00 and last until 12:00, will be held in the Senior Dining Hall. "The Soul Masters" from Danville will be featured. Tickets for the dance are now on sale in the Rotunda. The price is $2.00 per couple.

Preparations for the last play of this school year to be presented May 11, 12, and 13 have been in progress for several months. This particular play is quite different from those formerly produced by the Longwood Players.

Last spring the executive council of the Players and Jongleurs chose to produce the famous Broadway musical, STOP THE WORLD I WANT TO GET OFF.

"Stop The World I Want To Get Off," famous Broadway musical will be Longwood's last production this year.

Under the direction of Mr. Dale Melness and assisted by Shirley Timberlake, the play features Ed Baker, a law student at the University of Richmond and Nancy Parsons, a freshman music major. Also featured are Scot Pugh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sumner Pugh of Farmville, and Maria and Miraxa Silveira, twin daughters of Mr. Silveira, engineer in charge of the educational T.V. and Dr. Silveira, professor of Spanish. A chorus supports these leading roles. Members of the chorus are: Pat Armentrout, Cam Beckwith, Sharon Bourne, Diane Bowling, Martha Drummond, Courtney Fox, Lynn Gardner, Judy Hedrich, Liz Keffer, Margie Lantz, Pat Linamen, Marian Mowbray, Beth Rothges, and Marcel Woodall.

Drama Groups Prepare "Stop The World"

The chorus has been hard at work under the direction of Judy Lang and they are assisted by the choreographer, Carol Croxton. They are accompanied by an orchestra composed of students from Longwood and Prince Edward Academy under the direction of Pixie Owen.

Cookie Moore Chere Weeks, Andrea Myers, Janice Austin, and Toy Douglas will lead the Class of 1970. Not pictured is Jeanne Kay.

Class Of 1970 Elects Sophomore Leaders

The new officers for the class of 1970, as a result of elections last week, are: Andrea Myers - President; Chere Weeks - Vice President; Cookie Moore - Secretary; Jeanne Kay - Treasurer; Toy Douglas - Historian; and Janice Austin - Representative to the Elections Committee.

President Andrea Myers, also president of Freshman Class, resides in Penington Gap. Her accomplishments at Longwood this year include membership in Zeta Tau Alpha, Alpha Lambda Delta, Colleagues, the May Court, and executive member of the Freshman Commission.

Chere Weeks of Arlington attended Wakefield High School where she was co-captain of the cheerleaders, Homecoming Queen, Feature Editor of her newspaper, and a member of SCA, GA, and Quill and Scroll. This year Chere was president of the Freshman Commission, captain of the class hockey team, and a member of the color hockey team. She was elected to the May Day Court and the Colleagues, and just named a member of the Social Standards Commission.

Cookie Moore is from Winchester and attended Handley H.S. Cookie has had quite a bit of preparation for her position as secretary of next year's Sophomore Class. She was Secretary of her class from 10th through 12th grades, as well as being a member of the Glee Club, the Executive Council, the Yearbook Staff, Chairman of the Junior Jay Commission, and named 1 Who's Who, at Handley. Cookie's comment upon winning the election is "Flabbergasted!" Jeanne Kay lives in Colonial Heights where she attended Colonial Heights H.S. She was active in sports, particularly basketball, attended Girls State her junior year, was a member of Student Government, and also sang with the Sometime Singers in the Junior Variety Show. As a Freshman at Longwood, Jeanne was one of the class members elected to the Legislative Board. Richmondite Toy Douglas, the class of 1970's Historian for next year, was also very active in her high school, Manchester. She was Treasurer of the Junior and Senior Y-Teens, News Editor of her paper, the "Communicator," Chaplain of the Quill and Scroll, and a member of Quill and Scroll and the French Club. Toy has also been chosen this year as the co-chairman of the Membership and Visitation Committee for Wesley.

Janice Austin has been chosen to represent her class in the Elections Committee. Janice has been extremely active here at Longwood. She is a member of the Freshman Commission, Sigma Alpha Iota, Sigma Kappa, Geist, and the Colleagues. Janice is also playing for the Longwood-Hampden-Sydney upcoming production, "Stop the World, I Want to Get Off."

Congratulations to all the new officers! The Sophomore Class of 1970 is already planning many new activities for next year. Tentative plans have been made for a Sophomore Production next fall, a Sophomore Weekend, and a Sophomore Road Show next Spring.

Summer School Session For 1967 Begins June 18

Longwood is seldom without her girls and this summer will be no exception. There will be two terms of five weeks each this summer.

Summer School is held for those teachers who are working towards their Bachelor's or Master's degree, for those who wish to renew their teaching certificates or be certified to teach again, for those students who want to finish early or to improve

May Day: 1967 Style

Traditions are charming but with the passing of time they lose their appeal.

Such is the case with our annual May Day at Longwood. There was once an era when Longwood Ladies anxiously awaited that first Saturday in May when they could romp and cavort around the maypole, bedecked in festive costumes. Much anticipation preceded this special day when all coeds could frolic in the Dell.

That era has ended. Longwood girls of the 1960's have shied away from such antics, and in several cases, have suggested that Longwood revamp its May Day festivities.

This year we will still have "Around the World" in the Dell, but the May Day committee has heeded your advice and added some new attractions to this May celebration. A special luncheon has been planned, a reception will follow the festivities in the Dell, an Open House will be held in all dormitories, and a semi-formal dance will climax this May of 1967.

The May Day committee has asserted much effort to include these attractions in this year's program to please you, the students. Your interest and participation in these activities can best express your appreciation.

The Aim Of Education . .

(Ed. Note: The following is a guest editorial from "The Keystone," the student newspaper at Kutztown State College in Kutztown, Pennsylvania.)

The aim of education is to mold men, not to produce knowledge. The aim of a college student is to learn how to live, to learn how to think, to become civilized, not to become a scholar. But the aim of today's education must be to make the student a scholar.

The aim of today's college student, after not being fulfilled in four years of undergraduate school, remains the same. The student still wants to learn how to live and how to think. In hopes of fulfilling this aim, the student with the bachelor's degree goes on to graduate school where he undergoes processing the end result of which is the production of a professor whose aim is to know rather than to be.

The college student who yearned to live and to think is now one of those who in undergraduate school did not help him fulfill his aim. With such a cyclical progression, how can the aim of education, to mold men, be accomplished?

Take note of today's college professors. How many are there who know any tidbit of factual information and who yield this information from their learned lips in response to any questions? And how many of these same professors, when asked an opinionated question, become a machine that ticks off everybody else's opinion — every critic's opinion, every writer's opinion, every philosopher's opinion — everybody else's opinion but their own? Do they not have their own opinions? Have they nothing to say for themselves? Are they not allowed to say what they think? What has become of the free-thinking, free-living, free-speaking undergraduate who, after graduate school, was going to teach on the undergraduate level and was going to mold men, not process scholars.

Many have become the victims of the process of education. Many now have nothing to say. They can say only what others have said or what others have taught them to say. Many are now satisfied with the obvious and irrelevant. They are afraid to dig into the less obvious and, perhaps, relevant.

They now yield the typical trivial discoveries which are usually of a laborious nature. Many have just become conservatives, traditionalists and are afraid to be different, no, not radicals — just a little different from what they used to regard as "the educator."

But education should be proud for it has succeeded in squelching the free-living, free-thinking minds into the "educated" person willing to import his knowledge unto free-living, free-thinking young people. This will provide for the best of all possible means of processing a student into an "educated person."

This is the last issue of THE ROTUNDA this year. Good luck on exams, have a pleasant summer, and we'll see you in September.

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

Once upon a time, at a state teachers college trying to toe the mark with the "in" schools — or at least trying to catch up so as to be only five years behind — the annual spring celebration was marked with an innovation: Open House in the dormitories.

"Great idea," purred a wide-eyed teacher-to-be, "I won't really know what to do with myself at first," she cooed, "but we'll think of something." Well, of course.

"Ghastly!" cried Maudie Frump. "Men! In my dorm? Well, they're not coming in my room. I don't clean up for anybody."

Obviously, the days passed, and with Maudie's coaching, the school split into two factions: those who wanted men, and those who did not. Clever enough. The breach widened, and before anyone realized how serious the situation had become, the Dean of Prudence made a major decision — maybe Maudie had a point. Perhaps men shouldn't be allowed in the rooms. After all, one couldn't just ignore Maudie. She WAS rather sloppy (also ugly), but she was a member of several influential campus organizations. That made Maudie a campus leader, even if no one was sure of the exact functions of those organizations. Maudie was a politico not to be ignored.

But the time for action had come. Open House was the next day! In a secret midnight session, the Future Teachers' Morals Committee (or was it Teachers' Future Morals Committee?) met and began a discussion that lasted well into the next day. They weighed all the pros and Maudie's cons, but the more they talked, the more involved the discussion became.

It was the morning of the big day, and the situation seemed quite hopeless for the eager young ladies who had invited dates to come for the weekend. The festive activities began not so festively. The committee was still shut away in their den of debate. What was going to happen? Faces were still wearing question marks when the appointed time for Open House arrived. Just then a savvy student rebel leader jumped a recently planted thorn bush and sprinted across the lawn. At the door of her dorm she turned and motioned for her date, who, on cue, took two rows of thorns at once. Stares of amazement turned into smiles and nodding heads. At once the crowd dispersed; in two minutes flat (a P.E. major timed it with a stop-watch she just happened to be carrying) Open House had begun — officially or unofficially.

The day was a tremendous success. Everyone had a grand time, and not one rule was broken — well, not many rules.

But what happened to Maudie and the committee? No one knows. They were never seen again. Most people think they just forgot to come out. Perished in their own thoughts, you might say. Don't cry now. A stick-in-the-mud never dies; she just fades away. The Dean of Prudence was so grieved at the loss of all her supporters that she resigned. According to legend, she left the U. S. to establish a normal school in Uganda.

And what happened to the others? They lived happily ever after, of course, having Open House and other radical social events more often.

And the moral of this story is: when progress marches forward at a state teachers college, it has to sprint across a row of thorns.

The Courage To Be

Harsh, hard-glaring light spills a ring
In my dark world.

Shrill, loud-piercing plaintive music
Cries for late loves.

I am bound to life by narrow wires
And to love by nothing.

Because living is to know emptiness and
Close-reaching pain.

But life remains still close, so near;
And hope of love yet leads me on.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

As a waitress of three years standing, I would like to make a reply to the student who feels that the dining hall policies are unfair to her. Has she ever tried to feed 1600 girls? Has she ever substituted in the dining hall?

Apparently, there are some "students" at Longwood who think that they are guests at a resort or something. The main reasons tables in the dining hall are closed are:

1. people do not come to meals—
- a. they don't like the food
- b. they are on the roof, sunning
- c. they are studying
- d. they are away from school for some reason or another
2. they have been excused early—
- a. Longwood Players, Circus, Variety teams
3. another reason your table may be closed is that it has been reserved for guests.

If the student who wants all the tables to remain open all the time will pay for the extra food that will have to be thrown out, I'm sure the dining hall people will try to arrange this. Of course, if every student who is living in the dorms will attend every meal and eat all the food at that meal (NO PEANUT BUTTER AND JELLY), then the food waste at Longwood would be cut down greatly and all the tables would have to be opened. If this can't be arranged, then if those who would like the tables to remain open all the time will pay an extra $100 to $200 for the food that will go on tables that will not have people at them I'm sure something can be arranged.

As for substitutes, they cost money. Waitresses get paid by the block, and if they get substitutes for some meals they must pay for them out of their own pocket.

The student stated that she hardly had the energy to drag herself to the dining hall. How would she like to work in the dining hall for two meals a day and breakfast every other day? How often does she get up at 6:00?

Would the student like to Longwood to have cafeteria style? Can you picture 1600 girls going through two lines for every meal? Remember the lines at breakfast during exams?

Finally, I want only to say that most girls here probably realize that this is a college and one can't have everything as one would like it. And I think those who want everything their own way, I think it's time to take a good look at themselves and see whether they are mature college students or spoiled children who must have everything they want.

Eva Tinsman
Tables #3 and #

Dear Editor:

This is in reply to the letter in last week's Rotunda concerning the closing of tables. It is quite apparent from the letter that the authors have never worked in the dining hall and have no understanding of the system under which the dining hall operates. This, however, seems to be the cause of the mistaken impression which the majority of the student body is under. So I will try to explain briefly the system.

For each meal the manager gives a count of the number of tables to be opened to the supervisor. She in turn takes this number and subtracts it from the total number of tables in the dining hall, thereby ascertaining the number of tables to be closed. The supervisor then, for example, starts with table one (1) and closes in succession the number of tables to be closed.

For the next meal she goes through the same process and closes the tables starting where she has left off the previous meal. Therefore, all tables are closed in succession and not at random. However, the student body must realize at times it is necessary to reserve tables for special groups. Most of you have probably at one time or another been a member of one of these groups. Also, occasionally a waitress may become ill at the last minute and the supervisor, having not been notified, is unable to obtain a substitute.

tute. These additional things may account for the tables being closed to the regular occupants.

The majority of the student body does not realize that in the entire dining hall was open for every meal, there would be a tremendous waste of food thereby increasing cost. Neither do we think that the most of us would enjoy the cafeteria style under conditions similar to those which we experience every Sunday night.

Another misunderstanding seems to be the substitute system. If a waitress desires or needs a meal or weekend off she is responsible for obtaining her own substitute and pay her. However, if the substitute should fail to work for the girls for the meal or meals she has agreed to work, the waitress is held responsible and is required to make up the meal. Table are by no means closed to accommodate the waitresses!

It is our hope that this letter will clear up some of the gross misunderstanding on the part of the majority of the students concerning the operation of the dining hall.

Dear Editor:

Since the letter to the editor about closing tables in the dining hall in last week's paper seemed to represent somewhat the feelings of so many L.C. students, I believe several of the misconceived comments should be clarified. For one, the waitresses have nothing to do with what tables are opened or are closed. When they do have off it has no relationship to their salary. Waitresses are paid by semesters or blocks and are allowed so many "offs" during the time they work. Substitutes are hired for a fee whenever a waitress needs additional time off. This fee is paid by the waitress herself.

Why are tables closed, you ask. For many reasons: because guests of the school need to be accommodated; because groups or committees need to eat early and the tables are used then, because students go on picnics and trips; because at almost every meal a certain number of girls don't come, particularly on warm, sunny days. Tables are not closed to discourage students from coming to meals. They are closed to prevent food from needless waste. Everything taken of the tables, obviously, can never be used again. I realize it is an inconvenience to students to search for a seat, but believe me it's not all that of an ordeal. No one yet has been turned away from a meal because there wasn't a seat or enough food for them. If tables were left open the huge amount of additional food used would be wasted and quite assuredly L.C. students could note a rather large increase in their meal charges. The present system in the dining hall is partially what enables the school to keep college fees so low.

I feel students should think the matter over and appreciate a few of the advantages they have: plenty of good food, lower fees, and family style service. Please be patient; it's quite a task trying to figure how many girls will attend each meal, but our Slater Service is doing the best job they possibly can under the circumstances.

Longwood Social Scientists Attend Meeting

On April 29, five members of the Social Science Department attended the Fortieth Annual Meeting of the Virginia Social Science Association, which convened at Madison College, Harrisonburg, Virginia. The delegation from Longwood consisted of Dr. Lane, Dr. Berkis, Dr. Moss, Miss Ehrig, and Mr. Rubley. The convention included a general symposium, followed by sectional sessions dealing with Economics, History, Political Science, and Sociology. The topic for the symposium was "Megapolis in Virginia: Projections and Implications." This theme deals with the curious concept of considering a large portion of the Eastern coast extending from New England into Virginia as one main metropolitan area. Each of the sectional sessions was concerned with variety of topics related to each particular field. The economics section dealt with "Walter Christaller's Contribution to the Theory of Central Places," "Notes on the Long Swing," and "Changes in the Virginia Banking Structure." "Andrew Johnson versus Lincoln's Reconstruction Policy" and "Sacco-Vanzetti - International Cause Celebre" comprised the main issues discussed at this history session. The political science section concentrated on "A Critique of Prevailing Interpretations of the Constitution" and "The Indian General Elections: The End of An Era." The sociologists engaged in a discussion on "Southern Modern Immigration in North Lawndale, Chicago, and Mass Passivity," "Some Sociological Factors in Transportation Use," and "Max Weber and Twentieth Century Sociology."

Tennis Team Scores Win Over Ferrum

The Longwood Varsity Tennis team hosted the Ferrum Junior College team on Monday, April 24. The afternoon proved to be a successful outing for the Longwood team as they won four out of the seven matches by taking two doubles and three singles.

Dee Dee Holdren's match proved to be the determining factor in which college would win, since the score was tied with three matches apiece until Dee Dee won her match. Going three full sets, with a total of forty games, Dee Dee not only showed a determination to win, but also stamina.

Ferrum put up a good fight, with almost every match going for three sets. Winning the other singles match for Longwood was Anna Pettis who played in second position.

In the doubles matches, Suzanne Turner and Debbie Haller won in the number one doubles, and Betty Layne and Judy Turner took the number three doubles. Marcia Franklin played number one position for singles and went three sets before being defeated by the number one singles player from Ferrum, Gary Rice played number four singles, and Jane Tibbs and Linda Driver played number two doubles.

Orchesis Concert Combines Cultures

hands move into symbolical gestures.

In the third study titled "Ethnic Dance Patterns" one visualizes more than one culture as the students of the intermediate class are representing the native or traditional characteristics of that specific ethnic group as offerings into the next as movement and position. These ethnic dance forms may be viewed as a cumulative racial art expression through traditional style (or styles), a technical vocabulary of movement, and an academy (or its equivalent) for the schooling of the dancer. The cyclical nature of the processes of infusion and diffusion are apparent in cultural patterns. One may also title the study as a "Story of Infusion to Diffusion through Cultures."

The third division of the spring concert includes members and apprentices of Orchesis and those students in the Advanced Modern Class, "Shapes" as an abstraction of the human body become free-forming sculptural visualizations rather than the physical body. The linear designs in space are more important than the sensations and feelings of the spectator. Since this is the first attempt of abstracting the human, a humorous moment brings one back to normalcy.

"A Visual Trip" as a group work is a study of actions and reactions of LSD. Strange creatures - human and otherwise - are fellow neighbors.

The last work titled - "Lyric Song in Space" brings the spectators to normalcy as color, movement and space engulf the onlooker.

Contemporary music sets the moods of the spring concert through overtones of Malament, Copland and Lohofor.

Mrs. Emily K. Landrum, Associate Professor of Physical Education and adviser of Orchesis for 27 years is in charge of the program.

It's time to tee off! Class golf will be starting on May 8 with Barbara Matthews as manager. You don't have to be a great player to enter this competition, just come out and participate. It's a good way to get in some practice for your golf class, too. This is the first time we've had class golf offered at L.C., so let's make it really go over big. Check the A.A. Board for announcements and rules!

The bicycle keys can now be obtained in the Home Office. Students are held responsible for the keys and bicycles and for reporting any damages to the bikes. The bicycles may be checked out for only 2 hours at a time and may not be checked out after 5 p.m.

It seems that last week Betty Patterson, President of Orchesis, was demonstrating and teaching some modern dance techniques to a Freshman class when she caught her toenail in a crack in the floor and ripped the toenail off - Coordination

Plus!! Don't forget that class archery begins this week. Each class must have at least 2 representatives - let's see some true L.C. spirit.

Remember class and color softball games will be coming up soon. The race for the class and color points is very close this year, so come out and support your class and sister class with a few yells and cheers.

Congratulations to the Varsity tennis team on their two wins last week. Best of Luck in the tournament at Mary Baldwin this week end! Their next home match will be on May 10 at 3:30 p.m.; L.C. will host Westhampton College.

Please remember to observe the weekend Tennis Court Regulations printed in the last issue of the paper. They're for your benefit.

I hear that Mrs. Harris was when she caught her toenail in a little worried last week - she's been finding too many arrows up on the tennis courts!

Longwood Downs L-burg; Second Tennis Victory

In their third match of the season against Lynchburg College, the Longwood College Tennis team captured their second victory by winning two singles and two doubles out of the seven matches that were played.

Anna Pettis won the number two singles for Longwood, and played an outstanding game. Dee Dee Holdren and Judy Turner, who were playing number three and four singles, respectively, lost their matches, though both girls played good tennis.

Winning in the doubles matches were Debbie Haller and Suzanne Turner who played number two doubles, and Jane Tibbs and Chris McDonald winning number three doubles. Jean Hendricks and Pat Ingram gave their opponents a good match, but were defeated in the final set.

The Longwood Tennis team plays their next match this week, Tuesday, May 2. Four girls from the team will represent Longwood at the tournaments at Mary Baldwin College this coming week end. They are: Jean Hendricks, Pat Ingram, Marcia Franklin, and Jane Tibbs.

Committee Commends Mr. Warren O. Eyster

With a colorful and varied background, Mr. Warren O. Eyster, instructor of English, is also a novelist, and a jack-of-all-trades. After receiving his B.A. degree from Gettysburg College in Pennsylvania, he served in the Navy four years, worked in steel mills, with the Army Air Corps at Langley Air Force Base, served as managing editor for a New York publishing firm, and even sold life insurance and Fuller brushes trying to gather enough material and time for his writing.

He has published three books and one short story. His first novel, "Far From Customary Skies," was published in 1953 in the United States, England, Denmark, and Sweden, and deals with life on a naval destroyer. His second book, about life in a steel mill town, is entitled "No Country for Old Men." For his third work, Mr. Eyster drew upon his experience in Mexico where he spent five years. While there he worked for a time with the American Friends Society in the reconstruction of villages. "The Goblin of Eros" deals with the primitive conditions of Western Mexico while developing the theme of the impossibility of a successful revolution there. In 1964 he published a short story in "The Saturday Evening Post," "The Homecoming of the Children."

Next to his greatest love, writing, Mr. Eyster enjoys teaching. He taught for five years with the public school system, mostly in Bath County. Besides teaching classes at Longwood, Mr. Eyster is the sponsor of the "Rotunda." He has done graduate work at the University of Virginia, and is now working toward his Master's degree here at Longwood.

The grant will enable Professor Bird to participate in a research program in Plant Physiology at Texas A & M University. Another research grant from the Foundation goes to Joseph J. Law, Assistant Professor of Chemistry, who will do research in Neutron Activation Analysis at the Nuclear Science Center of Louisiana State University in the summer.

Both Bird and Law are teaching Chemistry in the Department of Natural Sciences. Bird has published several research papers in Infrared Spectroscopy and Chromatography and Law is experienced in Thermal Analysis and Kinetics research. They are members of the American Chemical Society, American Association for the Advancement of Science, American Association of University Professors and Virginia Academy of Science. The latter is also a member of the American Nuclear Society, a senior member of the Chemical Institute of Canada and a fellow of the Chemical Society of England.

Federal Income Tax Bill Passes Senate Approval

The United States Senate has approved by a 53-26 vote a plan to provide a federal income tax credit of up to $325 for tuition, books and fees paid by students in colleges, universities and other post-high school institutions. Final enactment of the plan probably will depend on the decisions made by a Senate-House of Representatives conference committee.

The tax credit plan was offered Friday, April 14, 1967, by Senator Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., as an amendment to a House-passed bill which would restore the investment tax credit to businessmen. Under the amendment offered by Ribicoff and accepted by the Senate, the tuition and fee credit is 75 per cent of the first $200 paid, 25 per cent of the next $300 and 10 per cent of the next $1,000. The credit is subtracted from the income tax owed the government.

Capitol observers said an important part in the final decision on the tuition tax credit plan will be played by Congressman Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. So far, he has taken no public stand on the measure which long has been opposed by the national Administration.

In offering the tuition tax credit amendment, Senator Ribicoff said there is an urgent need for tax relief for persons faced with the increasing costs of higher education. "In the long run," he said, "my amendment would serve all America. For our strength lies not just in the richness of our soil, not just in the wealth of the factories of our vast, complex physical technology - but in our minds. In our skills, in our ability to use these wisely and well."

Greek Gab

Longwood sororities will celebrate Greek Week, May 1 to May 5. This is the first time that the Panhellenic Association has had a week devoted to the sororities.

On Monday, May 1, at 5:15, the sororities will compete in three - legged races on Stubbs lawn. On Tuesday, May 2 there will be a Panhellenic banquet. Dr. Rice, Dean of Men at Madison College, will speak on "The Role of Sororities in Our Lives." At this time there will be installation of Panhellenic officers: President, Pam Stear; Vice-President, Marilyn Taylor; Secretary, Maureen Luby; Treasurer, Kathy Luneford; Rush Chairman, Kay Hall. On Wednesday, May 3, at 6:45 on Stubbs lawn there will be a powderpuff football game. The sorority girls will be divided into teams and will have their own cheerleaders. Mr. Wu and Mr. Gusset will be referees and Mr. Hall and Mr. Rubley will act as coaches. On Thursday, May 4, at 6:45 there will be an inner - sorority sing. Each sorority will sing a serious song and a rush song. A professor from the music department will judge the best singers. On Friday, May 5, the student body will be invited to hear the Nobles, a combo from Richmond, in the Senior Dining Hall. This will take place from 7 to 9 p.m. and the admission is free.

Alpha Sigma Alpha sisters are getting ready for their annual picnic in honor of graduating seniors. Everyone is looking forward to Monday afternoon, May 8 for boating, outdoor games, and roasting hot dogs. At this time, gifts will be given to our senior sisters, just as a reminder of how much their membership has meant to our sisterhood and how much they will be missed.

Newly elected ASA officers have taken their new positions for the 67-68 year. Nancy King is our President; Kay Hall, 1st Vice-President; Candy Jamison, 2nd Vice-President; Brenda Rice, Recording Secretary; Lynn Rachal, Treasurer; Ann Smith, Chaplain; Betsy Rice, Membership Director; and Joanne Black, Editor.

With growing excitement, the ASA sisters are preparing for the terrific Greek Week which the Panhellenic Council is sponsoring. With entertaining competition to be held each evening, a banquet Tuesday night at which time Dr. Rice, Dean of Men at Madison College, will be speaking, and a concluding combo party Friday night, we all wish this big event would occur more than once a year.

Cross Campus Reveals Protest Everywhere

By PHYLLIS HUMMER
Protest, protest everywhere. Maybe it is the time of year that is causing students to rebel against, well, you name it.

At Old Dominion College in Norfolk, nearly one thousand students participated in a rally to register protest against the existence of noon hour classes. Students marched to the Administration Building where student petitions were presented requesting the elimination of classes at noon. Sponsored by the Student Government Association, in conjunction with other student organizations, the rally featured a series of remarks by student leaders. The remarks included speakers centered around the detrimetal effects of noon hour classes to extracurricular activities and intramurals. It was charged in the speeches that a liberal education was not possible at Old Dominion as long as noon hour classes hampered the activities of student clubs and organizations, and that classes should be eliminated. The students won, at the end of the current academic year all noon classes will be eliminated.

At Louisburg College, in Louisburg, N. C., about 150 students protested the decision of the Women's Judicial Board to suspend two women students for coming on campus "under the influence" of alcohol. The crowd was dispelled when the Dean arrived and agreed to meet with two student representatives the following morning. The Judicial Board decided not to retry the cases, however, the activities resulted in starting a widespread drive to get the interpretation of the drinking rule clarified and reinterpreted.

At Duke University in Durham, N. C., students are protesting searches by the Student Government, which is attempting to rid all students of electrical appliances in their dormitory rooms. Oh, those popcorn poppers are causing more grief!

Geist Recognizes Junior Leaders

Eleven members of the Junior Class were recognized by Geist, the honorary leadership society, in an afternoon assembly Tuesday, April 25. The following girls were tapped in the special candle-light ceremony for their outstanding leadership in various campus organizations, of service to their college community and of intellectual integrity in all of their activities:

Donna Alison Daly, Norfolk, Virginia, a sociology major; Carolyn E. Hengrity, Suffolk, Virginia, an elementary major; Nancy Morton King, Orange, Virginia, a mathematics major; Mary Tyler Meade, Petersburg, Virginia, a mathematics major; Margaret Louise Wilkins, McLean, Virginia, a History and Social Science major; Eloise Jacobs, Richmond, Virginia, an elementary major; Susan Woltz, Falls Church, Virginia, an English major; Carolyn Ann Somers, Richmond, Virginia, a mathematics major; June Diehl Lancaster, Farmville, Virginia, a mathematics major; Jean Frances Via, Falls Church, Virginia, a business education major; Betty Louise Thomasson, Clarksville, Virginia, a mathematics major.

Longwood College, Farmville, Va., September 27, 1967

No. 1

Welcome Freshmen!

As everyone else on campus is welcoming the freshman class to Longwood, we of the ROTUNDA extend an equally cordial welcome to each of you.

You will soon find that your freshman year will be one of the most progressive years in Longwood's history as well as your own educational career.

Each of you will have many opportunities for educational and social enrichment at Longwood. All these opportunities are yours for the asking provided you take them with responsibility.

The arguments for and against extra curricular activities are sometimes controversial. Whether one should sacrifice all A's and perhaps boredom for passing grades and some diversion is a touchy subject for many.

Academic success at Longwood is not difficult if you get off to the right start. There are no short cuts to good grades. There is only one way to stay at Longwood and that is to be academically acceptable.

If you learn in the beginning to budget your time there is no reason why you should not find time for campus activities. As freshmen you are vital to organizations on campus. All clubs and organizations will welcome you and whatever you have to contribute to their well being. Many of you will become officers and serve in other responsible positions.

However, involvement in extra curricular activities does not necessarily mean seeking a prestige position or joining an "in group." Any pastime which involves working toward a goal can be considered extra curricular.

It is not too early to get involved in the activities offered at Longwood. The main thing is to do one thing well rather than sharing your capabilities too freely. You have four years here so start off on the right foot and you'll find that things will come fairly easy the rest of the way.

Set your goals high, look to the future and have confidence in your own personal worth. Good luck for the coming year.

Changing Times . . .

From time to time things must change and the Rotunda is no exception.

Many aspects of the newspaper are undergoing reorganization and we feel that the changes will benefit all of us. From advertising to proofreading we are trying to please the most students as much as possible.

Suggestions to the Rotunda are welcomed. You can help us through your suggestions and comments. The Rotunda mailbox is still in the Smoker waiting to hear from you . . .

We are not only striving to present accurate campus news but are trying to broaden student thinking with new ideas. In order to accomplish this goal student opinion is necessary. Letters-to-the-Editor and other articles are welcome.

The Rotunda office is located on the lower level of the Lankford Building. If you are interested in just looking around or in helping us with the Rotunda, drop by sometime.

A New Look

The Rotunda has a new face. In this issue you will note many changes — changes which will be beneficial not only to the staff and editors, but to the readers as well.

The long, six-column page, which we felt made for rather cumbersome reading, has been replaced by a shorter, five column page. The syndicated column, "Oleg Cassini Says" is no longer a part of the editorial page. In its place we hope to present feature stories and items written by students, and of interest to students. From time to time, The Rotunda will carry a column which emphasizes cultural, social, and entertainment and sports events in cities across Virginia and in neighboring states.

The Staff feels that the changes you see in this issue of The Rotunda are an improvement. Not every front page will be a cartoon; this is a SPECIAL welcome to the Class of 1971. The staff hopes that the changes will be of benefit to you, our readers, and we welcome your comments on the new face of The Rotunda.

TO ALL STUDENTS

"Since there is not sufficient parking space for all of the State owned vehicles in the parking area marked for this purpose, we request your cooperation not to park your personal cars in the parking area adjacent to the rear of the dining hall marked — "COLLEGE VEHICLES", even when the State owned vehicles are away from the campus.

The College cars return at various times and the space primarily reserved for these vehicles must be available at all times.

Mexican, Swiss German Students Study And Instruct On Campus

By LIBBA BALL

Ground Floor Cox, formerly called, "language hall," provides living quarters for three of Longwood's most unusual ladies, Christina Torre, Marie-Louise Schuppiesser, and Pia Solberger. These girls are the 1967-68 session foreign exchange students. Two of our guests, Pia and "Lus," are both from Swiss Germany. Cristina, however, visits our campus for her second year representing Mexico City, Mexico. All three girls either assist in the language labs during their spare time, or, as in Lus's case, teach a few courses. It is interesting to note something of the background of each of these students.

Christina Torre is earning her degree in elementary education. Attentive, she has one more year to complete at Queen Mary's School in Mexico City, to complete her degree. Her two years here on Longwood's campus, will not "count" as academic courses in completing her degree at home, but, "I've enjoyed just auditing in many classes. That way, I learn more about the English language — arts, crafts, and even tools. My typewriting course, especially, has been a great help." Her plans may include teaching English on the secondary level.

And as for the idea of a "language hall," Christina thinks that it is "a good idea because the students who are really concerned about learning a foreign language thoroughly, have that opportunity to practice it daily."

One of six children, Christina's father owns a gift shop. Her connections with English-speaking Americans is not limited to trips to Virginia alone. "Oh, we've had foreign students, Americans, to stay at our home for as long as two months in the summer."

Marie-Louise Schuppiesser, on the other hand, also comes from a large family, — five sisters and two brothers. The unique thing about the Schuppiesser family is that six of the children have been to America either to study or on tour. Lus herself has just returned from a visit to Expo '67, New York, and Philadelphia. Her mother is in charge of a children's clothing manufacturing company where she is the principal designer of tiny tot's wear. Her family occupies a small farm in Raterschen, about thirty miles from Zurich, Switzerland, where she recently graduated in elementary education. "In my village, we only have about eight-hundred people," she began. "Our farm is just large enough to feed the family with potatoes and tomatoes, and we have twelve cows that keep us with milk enough to sell."

Lus teaches French 211 and 311 here on campus. However, she speaks her native tongue, Swiss German and fluent English. "Swiss German differs from the German I was taught in school," she explains. "You see, in Switzerland, we speak the language in a different way. . . the way it was spoken during medieval times. It really gets complicated to learn another kind of German in school from that which you speak."

Lus has had seven years of concentrated study in French and commented that over one-third of the people in Switzerland actually speak the French language. "A student can (Continued on Page 4)

Honors Council Offers Students Tutoring System

The Honors Council, made up of representatives from each honorary organization on campus, is offering again this semester a tutoring system for Longwood students. Begun in March, 1966, the system has been effective in helping students in all academic areas, especially math, science, and English — age-old Longwood phobias. The system is available to any student desiring additional help in her college work. Qualified Longwood students serve as tutors. The Council hopes that instituting the program at this point in the semester will reduce "cramming" just before exams.

If you feel that you need help with any of your college courses, you may obtain an application in the office of the Director of Admissions. These forms must be completed and returned to Vivian Gale, 329 Wheeler, as soon as possible. One requests for tutors have been received, students suggested by various department heads will be approached to serve as tutors.

Almost all of you are weak in some particular subject. Don't spend fruitless hours trying to understand that impossible equation or translation assignment. Don't wait until the night before your Friday test to cram until four o'clock in the morning, only to develop a severe case of nerves. Also remember, a few hours of tutoring early in the semester will prevent unnecessary pressure at exam time. Obtain extra help now!

H-SC Frat Parties Taboo For Overnight Guests

By KAREN MAHER

A group of Juniors were walking around the second floor of the Rotunda about a week ago wearing flashy bermudas, exposed for all to see. A Freshman, evidently straight from one of thousands of orientation meetings, stopped the surprised Juniors. Obviously she thought she was giving aid to a fellow Freshman as she warned the girls of the dangers that befall those who dare wear bermudas in that area. Much to the girl's surprise, one of the group answered: "It's all right — We're Juniors!" Imagine the shock of the poor Freshman! Could she have possible misread one of those rules? The poor young green-and-white spent hours of silent meditation, mentally listing all 1,999 rules to figure out where she could have gone wrong.

The year 1967-68 certainly has its share of regulations. I had often wondered how they compared to past generations of "Longwoodian" rules for girls. After looking through some old handbooks, I appreciated 1967. I did not say it was the best, only that I appreciated it.

For example, in 1917 Longwood Ladies were allowed gentlemen visitors on Friday and Sunday from 7 to 9:45 p.m. I imagine the college was considering the health and welfare of the girls concerning the amount of sleep they got. This was confirmed when I read the next rule. "Outdoor exercise for one half hour each day is required." Students were positively forbidden to play cards, go horseback riding, driving, or automobile riding. It is hard to realize that riding in a car then could be any more dangerous than one of the many weekend drives from H-SC to Longwood. Concerning strict study hours, the only word to describe it is "strict." Students could not be seen in the halls except going to and from the bathroom or library.

Progressing to the year 1927 the one rule that made me shudder and tremble in my Weejees stated that students were allowed to go to the moving pictures on Saturday night with a chaperon!

Glancing through the 1934 handbook I stumbled on a number of interesting regulations. How would it strike you if you had to have special permission from the President or Head of the House to leave the college with "young men"? Or, "students must not be joined at the soda fountain or on the street by young men." I could see how standards have changed when I read that "students are not allowed to smoke while under college regulations".

Rules in 1943 read in the tone of "all girls with dates are expected to attend the evening church service Sunday". Undoubtedly this proved to be a very appropriate ending to a big weekend.

The rule of the year in 1947 declared that "students must not return to Farmville under the influence of alcohol". No one was ever in danger of breaking this rule; they never left Farmville in the first place. The era of the 1940's must have been swinging if "students could not go alone to the dentists or town doctors' office". And, "girls will not be given permission to attend the Hampden-Sydney fraternity dances".

As I climbed into the 1950's I came across a rule concerning the telephone. It read that "all phone booths will be locked at 11:00 p.m. Mondays through Fridays". My heart ached for all of those girls who took a course in "How To Pick Locks" only to fall for these.

Advancing into the late 1950's, I noticed the mention of some type of list. Longwood had a white list! "Young men calling on students must be on the list of approved callers maintained by the college. Such callers are placed on the list if they are approved by the parents of the students on whom they wish to call. The administration approves Hampden-Sydney students. . . ." This raised some questions in my mind, especially when I read the next rule. "Overnight guests are not allowed to attend parties at Hampden-Sydney." These two rules seemed to conflict.

Even the 1959-1960 rules started me and made me realize how times have changed. For students planning a picnic, the rule read as follows: "The student must sign out by 4 p.m. and return by 7 p.m. if unchaperoned; 9 p.m. if chaperoned". Concerning sign-in hours for Freshmen: Freshmen must be signed in by 11:00 p.m. on weekends, but may attend Juke Box dances until 12 p.m. A Juke Box dance?

After reading the rules of past eras of Longwood, I was almost perfectly willing to comply with all rules without question. But I guess one is never really satisfied which means do not panic — rules will change — eventually.

Lankford Activities Building Opens, Gilbert Wood Named Director

The Lankford Activities Building, located at the intersection of Pine and Madison Streets, is the most recent addition to the Longwood campus. It is named in honor of Francis G. Lankford, former President of the college.

Mr. Gilbert N. Wood, Jr., has been named director of the Lankford Activities Building. In this capacity, he will help to coordinate many of the student activities and will serve as an assistant to the Dean of Women.

The new director is a graduate of Farmville High School, and in 1964, received the degree of Bachelor of Arts in foreign affairs from the University of Virginia.

While serving in the Air Force, he was stationed at Langley Air Force Base in the Office of Information where he was base military historian, correspondent, and editor of the base newspaper.

Though all of the furnishings for the new building have not, as yet, arrived, some parts of the building are now in use. Mr. Wood expects the furniture to arrive within six weeks, and, at this time, the entire building will be ready for use.

On the first floor of the building is located the bookstore, the post office, a branch of the Virginia National Bank, and the snack bar. Also on the first floor is a bowling alley, under the management of Mr. Don Sequin. A definite schedule for use of the lanes has now been distributed to the student body. A games room adjoins the bowling alley. The athletic equipment and bicycle checkout rooms are located on the first floor as are the offices of the student publications, the "Rotunda," the "Virginian," and the "Gyre," and the office of the campus police.

On the second floor is the office of the building director, the Commons lounge and terrace, the day-students lounge, meeting rooms, and three color-television rooms. The offices of the Honors Council, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Athletic Association, and the Student Government are also located there.

There is, as yet, no fixed program of student activities. Mr. Wood has expressed an interest in letting the students be the "planners," as far as possible. He stated recently that he will welcome any ideas and suggestions from the student body.

NSA Building New Image; Emphasizes Domestic Policy

COLLEGE PARK, MD. (CPS)—The National Student Association will be trying to build a new image this coming year by emphasizing domestic problems rather than international affairs. In adopting the new policy, NSA is attempting to gain back the respect it lost last February with the revelation of past financial links with the Central Intelligence Agency.

Edward Schwartz, newly elected NSA president, has promised to expand and strengthen NSA's educational reform activities, which have grown rapidly in the last two years, replacing international student affairs as the primary preoccupation of the association's staff.

To be retained and developed are such programs as helping students on local campuses design course and teacher evaluation projects; the Tutorial Assistance program, which offers advice and materials for students operating tutoring projects in ghetto neighborhoods; and the "student stress" programs, which arrange free-wheeling conferences at which students and administrators discuss university life on an equal, first-name basis.

In addition to its present programs, NSA will move into new efforts related to the draft, black power, and student power.

The new NSA role was outlined at the organization's 20th annual Congress, held Aug. 13-26 at the University of Maryland. In the first national meeting of NSA members since the disclosure of the NSA-CIA link, delegates approved the national staff's recommendation for a further cutback in the association's international activity.

"Action, not words" was the cry heard from the 1,200 students from over 330 colleges and universities who attended the conference. But there was divided counsel among the delegates about just what sort of action students in general and NSA in particular should be taking to change their schools and society.

Proposals to drastically reshape the structure of NSA itself were heard at the Congress but not immediately accepted.

Schwartz, a 1965 graduate of Oberlin College and last year's National Affairs Vice-President, supported a proposal to split NSA into two separate corporations. Under the plan, local "unions" of students, growing from the "grass roots" on each campus, would be associated in regional and national confederations. At the top would be a board with a president and union organizers.

Dr. Brooks Assumes Position February 1, 1968

Dr. Richard B. Brooks, dean of Longwood College, will not report to his new position as dean of the school of education at William and Mary until February 1, 1968.

Dr. Brooks has been granted a six-months leave of absence, beginning August 1, from his new post at W & M by President Davis Y. Paschall in response to separate requests by Brooks and John L. Whitehead, rector of the Board of Visitors.

Last January it was announced that Brooks would succeed Dr. Howard K. Holland as administrator of W & M's school of education on August 1 so that Dr. Holland could devote full time to teaching and research at W & M.

Earlier this month Dean Brooks served as acting chief executive officer of Longwood until the arrival of Fred O. Wygal as acting president on July 17. Dr. James H. Newman has been granted a leave of absence by the Board of Visitors.

A former professor of psychology and director of counseling at W & M, Brooks came to Longwood in 1957 and served two years as a member of the faculty before being named chairman of the department of education, psychology, and philosophy in 1959. He was named dean of Longwood in 1964.

Holder of an undergraduate degree from Springfield College and a master's degree from the University of Pennsylvania, Brooks received a doctorate in education degree from the University of Virginia.

He has taught at Cherry Lawn School, the University of Pennsylvania, and Colby College. During World War II he was personnel consultant and classification officer for the United States Army.

Active in state and national professional associations, Brooks is past president of the department of teacher education of the Virginia Education Association.

Dr. Fred O. Wygal, now serving as President of the College.

Wygal Returns To Longwood As Interim President

Fred O. Wygal, prominent Virginia educator, has been named acting president of Longwood College, effective July 17, it is announced by John L. Whitehead, of Radford, rector of the college's board of visitors.

A former acting president of Longwood, Wygal will serve as Longwood's administrative head until a successor to Dr. James H. Newman has been appointed by the board.

In his announcement of Wygal's appointment, Mr. Whitehead stated that Ralph A. Beeton, of Arlington, a member of the board, will serve as chairman of a search committee to recommend a successor to Dr. Newman who has been granted a leave of absence.

Mr. Wygal's return to Longwood, after having served as interim president for 18 months in 1962 and 1963, adds another chapter to his 40 years of leadership in Virginia public and private education.

During 1927-1939 he held principalships in Washington County high schools and the Galax high school. He was division superintendent of the Radford city schools from 1939 to 1942. Beginning in 1942, he was for 22 years a member of the staff of the state department of education where he held the positions of supervisor of adult and secondary education, director of the division of guidance and adult education, director of division of related instructional services, associate director of instruction, director of the division of teacher education, a position from which he retired in 1964.

In the fall of 1964 he became dean of students at Ferrum Junior College. The following year he served as the college's academic dean before retiring for a second time from full-time service to education.

Upon retiring from Ferrum he and Mrs. Wygal returned to their home in Richmond where he resumed his participation in higher education as a part-time teacher of college courses. In earlier years, he had lectured in summer schools at Radford College and the College of William and Mary.

Last winter and spring he served as director of an ambitious performing arts project for the Richmond school board, working in close cooperation

Board Of Visitors Meets; Angus Powell Named Rector

E. Angus Powell, prominent Richmond business and civic leader, has been elected rector of the Longwood College board of visitors.

President of the Lea Companies, the 53-year-old rector is active in many charitable, civic, and educational groups in the Richmond area.

A leading Presbyterian layman, Powell is a member of the board of trustees of Union Theological Seminary, a former president of the Richmond YMCA, and former president of the board of trustees of the Collegiate Schools. He continues to serve as a Collegiate board member.

Powell is a member of the board of directors of the Virginia Manufacturers Association, Southern Furniture Manufacturers Association, Southern Industrial Relations Conference Board, and First and Merchants National Bank of Richmond.

A native of Richmond, Powell attended McGuire's Prep School and received the B.S. degree in commerce from Washington and Lee University prior to attending Harvard Business School, from which he received the master of business administration degree.

Powell's election to the board's top post, under an established rotation plan, came during the annual meeting here of the college's governing body, of which nine of the 11 members were present.

It was Fred O. Wygal's first board session since becoming acting president of the college in July.

The new rector, a member of the board since it was created in 1964, succeeds John L. Whitehead, of Radford, who will remain on the board.

Henry G. Chesley, Jr., another Richmond business leader, was elected vice rector, succeeding Judge Ernest P. Gates, of Chester, who resigned from the board in January following his appointment as circuit court judge.

Mrs. Mosby Phlegar, of Norfolk, a Longwood alumna who has served on the board since it was formed three years ago, was re-elected secretary.

W. E. Daniel, Jr., a 43-year-old Richmond insurance executive, has been named a member of the board of visitors of Longwood College by Gov. Mills E. Godwin, Jr.

An agency director of the State Farm Insurance Companies, Mr. Daniel will serve on the board until June 30, 1970, filling the unexpired term of Douglas A. Robertson, of Lynchburg, former board rector.

ASA sisters returning to the campus after their exciting summers were thrilled to discover a new sister, Mary Lee Daubenspeck, an initiated member from the Rho Rho chapter of Alpha Sigma Alpha at Marshall University in Huntington, West Virginia, transferred to Longwood to continue her major in physical education. After the confusion of registration and beginning classes had subsided, Alpha sisters gave Mary Lee a surprise welcoming party. We are pleased to have her join our sisterhood and are sure she will contribute much to our sorority.

Alpha sent two representatives, Kay Hall and Betsy Rice, to ASA's national convention which was held June 26-30 in St. Louis, Missouri. ASA sisters from throughout the United States gathered there for this 25th triennial convention. Elections of national officers were held, and awards were given to chapters of outstanding achievement. Alpha chapter was awarded a trophy for the most outstanding contribution to ASA's national philanthropic project.

with the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts to provide a dramatic arts program for students in Richmond and 18 neighboring areas of the state.

The Lee County native received the master's degree from the University of Virginia. A 1926-graduate of Emory and Henry College with an A.B. degree, the veteran educator was recently honored by his alma mater as the 1967 recipient of the annual alumni award in recognition of his outstanding contribution to education.

Active in church and professional groups, he has served as first vice-president of the Virginia Association of Parents and Teachers. He is a member of the Virginia Methodist Conference Board of Education and has served on the board of trustees of Ferrum Junior College.

The Wygals have one son, Fred O. Wygal, Jr., who is choral director of Fairfax High School.

When asked to comment for the "Roundup" Mr. Wygal made the following statement:

"How exciting it is to again be associated with Longwood College, five years ago I came to Longwood for a brief time as your acting president. During the period I had personal experiences that gave me an enduring impression of the fine spirit that permeates the life of both students and faculty at this institution. It was a spirit reflected in all aspects of college life—in the organization of student life as reflected through student government and the honor court, in the nonacademic activities of the college in which so many students participated, and in the friendly spirit that prevails among all groups and individuals in all aspects of college life.

"Now that I am again back with you as your interim president, I again detect the same fine spirit as I see you in your meetings, in the dining hall, and as you move to and from the classrooms. Certainly, the Longwood spirit is a tradition that you have maintained and intensified. In the years to come you will continue to reflect upon it as being one of the most valuable outcomes of your college education.

"During the brief time that I will be with you on my new round of duty, my greatest satisfactions will be the renewed opportunity to share the personal values that come from the wholesome social atmosphere that characterizes the way of life here at Longwood."

L. C. Acquires New Physician, Lewis E. Wells

The beginning of a new academic year has ushered in many changes on the Longwood campus and new faces appear at every turn. One of these faces is that of Dr. Lewis E. Wells, the new college physician. Dr. Wells is a native of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and a graduate of the University of Pittsburgh. He has maintained a medical practice in Farmville for the last ten years; prior to this he was on the staff of the Medical College of Virginia. Dr. Wells has two sons, both of whom have entered the medical profession; one is presently practicing in Richmond and the other in Danville.

Foreign Students Study, Teach

learn a lot by just sitting back and listening to others speaking it," she grinned. (Take heed, students!)

Pia Sollberger, also a twenty-one year old graduate from the same school that Lus attended, lives in the city proper of Zurich. "Actually we attend a 'middle school' until our last year. It is under the title of a 'professional school' and then we are qualified to teach elementary-age children. The main difference between university life here and university life there," she explained, "is that there is absolutely no dorm life. Each student either boards or rents. There are some free housing buildings that students use, but there are no rules or regulations as there are here. In other words, the students are free to do as they wish with their time."

Pia lived so near her school that she went home for lunch and dinner. School was not so later than six and depending on which course of study the student undertakes, the schedules are fixed by the administration and the classes run the same for those enrolled in the same school throughout the four years, much in the same way our schedules are set up.

Pia, an only child whose father is a legal secretary for an iron works, was very much pleased to be adopted by the E. L. Talbot family in Roanoke, Virginia upon her arrival to America. "I just love the farm atmosphere," Pia added, "and I am really an American. I know this because I have my own American family of five brothers and sisters!" she beamed. The Talbotts have a daughter, Susan, who is enrolled here as a freshman.

Pia also remarked on the dating systems of the United States as opposed to those of the Germans. "In Germany, a group of girls will all go out walking together and they will meet a group of boys. They then get together and go out in a large group, no one having just one single date, just having fun. Later, if two young people find they like one another, they then separate and date privately. In America though," she paused, "dating seems more like an organized game. You know—a boy will call up and ask how many girls need dates. He then makes arrangements for so many blind dates. Well, at home, we eliminate the horror blind dates. We see the boys before we go out. Otherwise, we'd get stuck quite a few times, don't you agree?" I agree!

President Of Southern Seminary Addresses Convocation Assembly

Dr. Sidney E. Sandridge, president of Southern Seminary Junior College, was convocation speaker at Longwood College on Monday, October 2, at the annual fall gathering of faculty and students in Jarman Auditorium.

Special music for the formal occasion that marked the opening of a new session was provided by the college choir, under the direction of Dr. John W. Molnar, music department chairman. The Reverend George H. Boyd, superintendent of Farmville District of Methodist Church, rendered the invocation and benediction. Acting President Fred O. Wygal presided.

Prior to coming to the church-related junior college for women in 1965 as academic dean, Dr. Sandridge served as pastor of Schuyler Methodist Circuit, director of extension, professor of sociology, dean, and academic vice-president of Ferrum Junior College. He served one year as executive vice-president of Southern Seminary Junior College.

A native of Albemarle County, he received the bachelor of divinity degree at Emory University, A.B. degree at University of Virginia, and Ph.D. at Northwestern University.

Active in numerous religious and educational organizations, he is a member of Virginia Education Association, National Education Association, Virginia Annual Conference of Methodist Church, board of directors of Council of Southern Mountains, and Phi Delta Kappa, honored organization of educators. He has also served as chairman of the Commission on Christian Vocations for the Virginia Annual Conference of Methodist Church.

A Mason and member of Lions Club, he serves on the board of directors of the Virginia Tuberculosis Association. In 1967 he was national 4-H alumni winner.

Dr. Sidney E. Sandridge, president of Southern Seminary Junior College, addressed the convocation audience in Jarman Hall, Oct. 2.

Elliot Erwit's Photographs Comprise Library Exhibition

"Improbable Photographs" by Elliot Erwit will be on view in the Exhibition Room of the library at Longwood College from Oct. 2nd to Oct. 20th. The exhibition of 44 photographs is being circulated in the United States and Canada by The Museum of Modern Art, New York. It was selected by John Szarkowski, Director of the Photography Department, for its original showing at the Museum.

Erwit, a photographer with the Magnum group in Paris, took most of the photographs in the exhibition outside his commercial assignments, for personal pleasure. He documents "a world that is ordinary, fascinating, and ludicrous." Mr. Szarkowski says in the introductory text. With a wary, uninhibited vision, Erwit deals with "the empty spaces between occurrences - with the anticlimactic non-event." In Luxor, Egypt, where a battered donkey and train tracks are their own comment, in Brasilia, the modern capital of Brazil, where a chicken crosses the street, in the Lost Persons Area in Pasadena, California, at Yale Reunion, and in numerous other places throughout the world, Erwit has found sights which speak ironically or humorously for themselves. "His subjects seem the patient victims of unspecified misunderstanding, awaiting the prompter's cue on a stage designed for a different play," Mr. Szarkowski continues. "Over their inactivity hangs the premonition of a trauma. From these unmemorable occasions Erwit has distilled, with wit and grace and clarity, the indecisive moment."

The exhibition shows photographs dating from 1950 to 1965, lent by the photographer. The prints were made by Arthur Tcholak.

Guys Invade LC Oct. 7 For Mixer: Music, Fun, & Boys

Girls, the guys are invading Longwood in full force on Saturday, October 7 for the mixer being sponsored by the Y.W.C.A. "The Satisfactions" and boys from eight schools will be there. Those schools which were invited were Old Dominion, VMI, VPI, Washington and Lee, University of Richmond, University of Virginia, Hampden-Sydney, and Randolph-Macon. It's been rumored that 150 boys are coming from UVA alone.

From 7:30 p.m. until midnight the old gym will be alive with music, fun, and refreshments - not to mention boys. 1 a.m. late permission has been granted for the occasion.

There will be an admission of fifty cents to cover the cost of the band and refreshments. Girls are to wear school attire and boys are to wear coat and tie.

In case a girl wants to bring her own date, she certainly may do so.

If this mixer is supported and is a success, then L. C. girls can look forward to more of them in the future.

The Freshman Beanie: Poorly Preserved Tradition

There are many traditions on the Longwood Campus: Red and White vs. Green and White spirit, CHL, Circus (Geist Festival), Joan of Arc and numerous other traditions of long standing. But perhaps some other traditions that have been lingering on should be examined more closely. Maybe it is time that Longwood realizes that it is no longer able to preserve all of its traditions.

Rattling used to be a tradition at Longwood but somewhere along the line this practice dropped by the wayside. No more hazing, no more forcing freshmen to do things against their will, was the word for upperclassmen. Somehow during the orientation program this year we felt that traces of the old rattling tradition were still evident.

Do we really believe that the freshmen enjoyed wearing those horrendous beanies, or was this sort of a compulsory action? Judging from the number of freshmen that were not sporting the unmistakable cap we are presuming the latter assumption to be true.

However, if this is a tradition which Longwood wishes to preserve why was the beanie-wearing not enforced? This is not meant as an argument against tradition at Longwood, it is simply our belief that the choice is up to the students — poorly preserved traditions have no place on our campus. We must either cling to our old traditions and see them carried on as traditions or abandon them in looking to the future.

Why So Many Out Of It?

Today going to college is made easy for those with the mental qualification. Money need not be a barrier anymore keeping students from enrolling in institutions of higher learning. Even the high-cost ivy league schools and universities are able to aid students. They are so heavily endowed that they offer many scholarships for students who can meet the scholastic requirements.

The U. S. Office of Education is preparing for the biggest year yet in higher education. It is helping nearly a half million students to attend college from the National Defense student loan program.

The Office has allocated about $189 million to 1,701 institutions of higher learning to be distributed among deserving students during the fiscal year that began last July 1. This money was put to use for the college year beginning in September.

Longwood received $36,000 from the National Defense program for student loans this year. An undergraduate student may borrow up to $1,000 in each academic year. A graduate student may borrow as much as $2,500 each academic year. The rate of interest on these Defense loans is nominal. What career a student chooses and the type of work he performs are taken into account in determining repayment of the loan.

There was nothing like this when our parents, or even our older brothers and sisters went to college. It was a lot of hard work to earn the education, or a rich family to help you. We cannot help wondering why so many college students are "out of it" these days. Could it be that securing an education has become so much easier and we do not appreciate the many sacrifices our parents and taxpayers have made for us?

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

If ever Longwood deserved to be called a "suitcase school," it was this past weekend. Deadwood was really dead, as a quick glance around the dining hall Saturday evening made all too clear. Those who stuck it out deserve one of two things (depending upon one's point of view): a round of applause or a psychiatric examination . . . or maybe both.

From the Great Trivia Treasury on the under-25 generation comes this piece of startling news: Some over-30 now says that 77% (which, incidentally, is described as a "modest" estimate) of all college students smoke, and that 42% of this number consume a pack or more of cigarettes per day. Also, out of the 77% comes the "modest" estimate that 31% of all collegiate smokers are enjoying those three, four, or five extra puffs to be had from the new extra-long cigarettes.

Another gent — this time the Surgeon General — is getting back into the picture with another one of his Beware The Weed manifestos, in which he states once again that cigarette smoking can lead to some rather hairy ailments. He also added a slam for the 100mm cigarette, saying, in effect, this is the way to end it sooner than you think.

So — all the over-30s who are bothered about the wielding of under-25 power in Presidential elections, dealing with the Bomb, the population explosion, love, and other drastics that will change this "best of all possible worlds" needn't worry. By some "modest" over-30 estimates, we probably won't be around long enough to do anything.

Look Out, "Proper Attire:" Miniskirts Have Arrived!

By KAREN MAHER

The new Freshmen gym suits are facing stiff competition as the mini skirt gradually puts in an appearance on the Longwood campus. As the gym suit hemlines dropped, the skirt hems soared up. Mini skirts, though not prevalent on this campus, have made their first public appearances.

The conservative old South is in for a shock as the younger Rebels have started wearing this short replica of a skirt. Never quite willing to go along with the wild and weird fashions of the North, the mod minis are threatening this conservatism. Some consider the mini a personal assault to their dignity, but most people are not as extreme as the grandmother who went up and kicked the mini clad teacher.

Opinions around Longwood vary, but most of the girls admit that they like them. When asked what they thought about mini skirts the replies ran as follows:

"They're all right if you wear tights and have skinny legs."

This seemed to be the trend of thought as another student answered: "I think they're cute if you have the right legs to wear them."

One girl giggled: "I think they're disgraceful!"

Still another: "They're cute on somebody with good legs, but I don't mean four or five inches above the knee."

Or, "As long as it doesn't cause disruption, I don't see why not."

Another student surveyed the situation and came up with this answer: "College is the place where you're

supposed to be free to think for yourself. If you want to wear one you ought to be allowed to wear one."

One student expressed the boy's point of view when she said: "My boyfriend likes them. He says they attract attention from guys."

"You're covered up more than you are in a bathing suit, so what's wrong with them," demanded another student.

Mini skirts do present problems as one girl pointed out. "The worst problem with them is trying to act ladylike. You have to remember how to bend, sit, reach . . ."

Another comment was that "they look ridiculous when a person is big — just as wide as they are long."

The only statement one student made was "SHORT!"

The situation was adequately summed up when a student remarked: "As the tuition goes up, so do the hemlines."

It may not be too long before minis become a familiar sight on the Longwood campus. Well, girls?

Betsy Steidtmann insists on a "mini" even while doing laundry.

'71 Voices Gripes; Common Complaints— Curfew, Clothes

By YVONNE LESTER

Even though freshmen have only been at Longwood for three weeks, they already have numerous complaints.

The major gripe among freshmen is the curfew, Karen Spady explains, "I would like to change the curfew to 12:30 a.m. on Friday night. Then you would at least have time to say hello and good-bye to your date."

Janet Jackson thinks the curfew should be changed to 1:00 a.m. on Saturday night for upperclassmen, and freshmen after first semester. However, Donna Gladden summed up many freshmen opinions when she replied, "I do not think that Longwood should have any curfew at all."

According to Neblett Torrence, freshmen should have blanket permission if their parents approve. She also wishes students could wear bermudas anywhere on campus "as long as they look decent."

Door restrictions puzzle Barbara Blythe. She asks, "Why do you have to walk a mile out of your way to get outside?"

Chris Jamieson wants rubber mats on her dorm's floor so that when she sneaks out after bed check, the squeaking floor won't wake anyone up.

Boys are undependable, so Maxine Stone can't understand why she should be counted late if her date does not leave by her curfew. She explains, "He may be talking to another girl."

Just think, what would Longwood be without griping freshmen?

Fall Semester '67: Beanies, Bookstore Crowds Mark Beginning Of Academic Year

Encyclopedia Skit Will Introduce LC Honoraries

Since their arrival on campus, the Freshmen have been introduced to many facets of college life. One of the most important of these introductions is that which will acquaint them with the academic rewards which await those achieving success in the study of their chosen fields — membership in the national honor societies. The Honors Assembly next week will accomplish this important objective, for at this time, all the honor societies will introduce themselves to the new students, indicating their purposes, scope and entrance requirements. A clever skit in which representatives from the various honor societies will disguise themselves as encyclopedia books will comprise the medium for the dissemination of the details concerning this vital aspect of college life. Information concerning the tutorial system and the honors paper will be interwoven into the skit and presented by Dr. Lane and Mrs. Bobbitt, the Honors Council's sponsors.

It is the hope of all the honoraries that the Freshmen's acquaintance with these organizations will be inspirational, motivating them to strive for academic excellence.

Corkettes, H2O Club Prepare Active, Varied Swim Schedule

By JANET HARMON

Last summer it was the Virginia Beach shuffle; last winter it was the filly dog and the bagaloo; this year it's the funky Broadway. But the latest thing to hit Longwood's campus is "the swim!" In order to be part of the "in crowd" at LC this year, you have to be part of the "swim crowd."

The Corkettes and H2O club have been busy since the opening of school getting organized and preparing for this year's activities.

The first activity under consideration is Corkette try-outs. This event will be held on October 12 at 7:00 p.m. at the pool. On Monday, October 2, a meeting was held at 7:00 p.m. in the Freshman Parlor for all those interested in trying out. Members of the Corkettes and H2O were present to tell about the club and answer any questions. The Rec Swim will be open every night from 10 to 11 p.m. for those who wish to practice. Girls from Corkettes and H2O will be present to assist swimmers in their strokes.

Qualifications for Corkettes include synchronized swimming to music, forward and backward somersaults, the Dolphin, skulling, and the Kip. Girls must also be capable of performing successfully a front dive and a surface dive.

One set of officers conducts business for both the Corkettes and the H2O club. These are: President, Elnor Umbenstock; Vice President, Stephanie DuRoss; Secretary, Carol Blythe; Treasurer, Barbara Carr; and Historian, Carol Skelley.

At the Athletic Association demonstration two numbers were performed from last year's water show to give an idea of what the club does. The water show, held annually in mid March, is composed of stunts which are developed by the Corkettes and H2O club.

Longwood's water sports also include competitive swimming which is composed of two divisions; the swimming team and the diving team. Try-outs for competitive swimming have already begun and will continue through Thursday, October 5. The first meet is on October 26 with Mary Baldwin at Mary Baldwin. The first home meet is on October 31 with Old Dominion. Competitive swimming lasts through December 12, and meets Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays at 5:00 p.m.

According to the instructors, the only qualifications needed for this sport are potential, interest, and lots of enthusiasm!

Blazer Awards Highlight Annual A. A. Demonstration

By SYBIL PROUSE

By accumulating the highest number of athletic points at the end of their junior year, seniors Jean Hendricks and Pat Ingram were presented the white blazer awards by the Longwood Athletic Association on September 28 at the A.A. banquet.

Seniors Carol Blythe, Vannie Gunter, Ricky Howard, Nancy Maxey, Ginny Padgett, Joan West, and Peggy Wilkins received blue blazers for earning a required number of points in athletic activities. Participation in varsity, color, or class sports, as a manager, or as an officer or committee member of the Athletic Association contributed points toward the blazer awards.

Peggy Wilkins, president of the Athletic Association, made the blazer presentations following the A. A. demonstration and banquet. The banquet, which honored the physical education faculty members, was the finale to the two-hour demonstration.

The yearly demonstration attempted to acquaint Longwood freshmen and transfers with the various aspects of athletics at Longwood. It introduced the different sports and the various opportunities a student has to participate in them.

The demonstration stressed that participation in Longwood sports is not limited to talented players, but can be enjoyed by everyone who is interested. Class sports are open to any student who likes taking part in them.

A loss of the tug-of-war by the freshmen to the sophomores caused the freshmen to wear their beanies for an extra week.

Class Of '71 Elects Festival Chairman, Elections Delegate

Four hundred fifty new freshmen congregated in the old gym on September 27, 1967 to begin the elections of class leaders and officers. Under the direction of Becky Bartholomew, junior class president, the freshmen elected their Circus chairman.

From a group of eighteen nominees, the Class of '71 elected Missy Jordan to be the class chairman for Geist Festival. Missy will work in cooperation with the junior class chairman, Diane O'Berry. Together the classes will create skits and organize the various athletic events.

Last year the green and whites won in all five categories. They hope to achieve the same victory this year. At this same meeting, Linda Shepard was chosen as the freshman representative to the elections committee. Linda will help the rest of the committee to print ballots and work at the polls.

This year's freshman class, though composed of only four hundred fifty students, was rated highly in comparison to their graduating classes. Ninety-two and four tenths per cent of the girls were in the top fourth of their class. Of these four hundred fifty girls, thirty-seven and two tenths per cent graduated in the top tenth of their class. The Longwood Class of 1971 also recognized three National Merit Commendations and a number of first honor graduates.

Players-Jongleurs Vary Performances; Comedy & Tragedy

This year the Longwood Players and Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs are working to give the student body a marked variety of performances. It has always been the policy of the drama department to try to choose plays from different periods for each production. However, the difference in the productions planned for this year seems more striking than ever.

The first production, on October 19-21, will consist of two Greek comedies: "Trojan Women" and "Lysistrata." "Lysistrata" tells of the women's efforts to end the Trojan War. Their tactics were rather unconventional, but this production promises to be one that Longwood will be talking about for quite a while.

The next production should bring quite a different reaction. The Players and Jongleurs will present Shakespeare's "Othello," December 7-9. The tragic story of the ill-fated marriage between the Moor and the fair Desdemona will be an interesting production for Longwood.

Next semester, more comedy is in store for the Players: Moliere's "Miser" will be the first production. The French play is a farce concerning an old man, his miserly ways, and how his family tries to put up with him.

The climax of this year's productions will be "The Ghost Sonata" by August Strindberg, a Swedish writer of the nineteenth century.

More Than 800 Colleges Receive Federal Aid

More than 800 colleges and universities in the United States—about one-third of the total—received Federal aid to build or remodel classrooms, laboratories, and libraries during the year that ended last June 30, announced Wilbur J. Cohen, Under Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Grants and loans totaling about $710.7 million were made to 877 colleges, universities, and branch campuses under the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963, Under Secretary Cohen said. The Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963 was the first in the series of landmark educational measures enacted during the 1960's. "The facilities made possible by this financial investment will enrich the educational experience of thousands of students in pursuit of higher learning and our society will reap the benefits of their knowledge in the years ahead," he said.

"This Federal aid, administered by the U. S. Office of Education, helped to generate nearly $2 billion in college construction needed to meet student enrollments which are at an all-time high," Mr. Cohen said.

Delta Zeta sisters are back "where the action is" and are now in the process of getting back in the swing of sorority and campus life. Our first week end back, September 15-18, we were delighted to have Linda Gruber, a fellow Delta Zeta sister from Colorado State College, visit us. We exchanged songs and sorority gab and had a fine time showing her a little of our life here at L. C.

Concerning the business world, the DZ's had a bake sale to raise money for our philanthropic fund. From this fund our sisters are pleased to announce that we will adopt and support an underprivileged child from the United States.

Our chapter would like to take this opportunity to welcome Mrs. Garnjost, the new French professor at L. C., who attended Longwood where she was a Delta Sigma Epsilon (now Delta Zeta) and was initiated into DZ while teaching in Florida. Now back on our campus, we are proud to have Mrs. Garnjost as our sister.

In addition, almost $4 million was provided for operation of State commissions responsible for setting priorities, under Title I of the Act, for Federal grants to undergraduate schools.

'Esquire' Reports Life On Campus Changes Drastically

According to a magazine article, published August 15, college living habits have changed drastically over the past few years.

On campuses throughout the U. S. boys and girls, in ever increasing numbers, are living together as couples.

This is reported in the September "back-to-college" issue of Esquire where for the first time in any major magazine four campus couples are photographed in the houses where they live openly together.

The four couples in the feature are from Harvard, Cornell, Michigan, and Berkeley.

In Cambridge, Mass., for instance, a Radcliffe coed, '67, moved off-campus with a Harvard student. The parents who knew made no objection: Harvard didn't seem to care and Radcliffe, because the coed was officially in residence at one of the dorms, didn't know.

Esquire reports the Harvard students as saying: "About a third of our friends are married, another third just live together, and the rest, well, still looking for each other."

Both students, fully named, were photographed in their Cambridge apartment for the magazine.

Another couple, living two blocks off the campus of the University of Michigan share domestic responsibilities with another twosome in a six-room apartment in Ann Arbor. Like most college couples, Esquire finds they have a casual relationship: marriage is not really a question yet. The magazine, in its report on the new roommates, recalls that the traditional college roommate always had to be a 280-pound battish beehemoth. If one tried to sleep, he snored; if one tried to study he played records; and by the end of the year a person really learned how to hate.

Today the love generation is apparently changing all this. As the Cornell students put it, neither knows how long they will live under the same roof: marriage is only one of many possibilities.

Do They Really Play Zen Basketball At SFS?

One of the "hippest" colleges going these days, San Francisco State, is the subject of a magazine article, published today.

In the September, "back-to-college" issue of Esquire Magazine, Herbert Wilner, ex-Yale professor who left the predictable Ivy League to teach English and Creative Writing at unpredictable SFS, takes a probing look at San Francisco's "streetcar college."

He examines the puzzling question of how a faculty and academic plant as large as SFS (which is but a part of California's monolithic State College System) manages to keep free of bureaucratic and academic rigidity.

Wilner hypothesizes on the reasons for this freedom. "It might well be that SFS's newness, its lack of traditions, its unpredictable and generally older streetcar students, its young faculty and its young come-and-go administrators, its compulsion to be antiestablishment. . . It might be that this unformed character is the source of its brash and eccentric spirit."

The most contributing influence on the college, however, is probably San Francisco itself. Both students and faculty alike, says Wilner ". . . may well have decided upon San Francisco and the college afterwards."

And there is, too, the pulling power of SFS's growing reputation as a creative and unrestrictive place. And its proximity to Haight-Ashbury!

Part of this atmosphere of freedom is reflected in a radical new program called Experimental College.

The students themselves conceived and sponsored this program, which grew out of the simple assumption that the courses a college may offer do not necessarily exhaust other possibilities.

This idea of a student-sponsored curriculum, says Esquire, flourished at SFS. Both students and interested faculty members, and even those unconnected with the college, volunteered their time to teach. Anyone could teach whatever he chose. And students could enroll as they wished. Those were the ground rules.

"The courses offered range from the respectably offbeat (Job and Faust; The Kennedy Assassination) to the subjectless (Transcendental Deep Meditation; Seminar in nonverbal activity) to plain fun and gains (Zen Basketball)." Some of the courses are even given official college credit.

These academic departures may border on the absurd. But the important thing, according to the article, is that the students have successfully challenged the status quo of standard college courses.

And, interestingly, the SFS Experimental College program ". . . is being studied today by students and administrators throughout the country."

So, for all the humor about hippies and activists and zen basketball at San Francisco State, the college is creating a spirit that will rock the academic establishment in America.

Young Republicans Plan Open House

The Longwood College Young Republicans began their year with a tour of Washington, D. C., on September 10-12. Included in the tour were the Library of Congress, the National Gallery of Art, the Supreme Court Building, the Capitol Building, and the Congressional Offices. The group and their adviser, Dr. Helms, met several Congressmen and Congressional Officials.

On the 16th of September several members attended the State Executive Board meeting in Hopewell. Following the meeting they joined the Senior Party of the 4th Congressional District for a barbecue dinner. The speaker was "But" Lukens of the 24th District of Ohio, former chairman of the Y-R National Federation.

One Y-R plan for the coming year is an Open House for all interested students on October 12, at 5:00.

Varsity Hockey Team Defeats RPI, McDonnell, Tibbs Score Six Points

It was a warm sunny day, September 30 when the L.C. Varsity Hockey Team faced R.P.I. in Richmond on Hotchkiss Field.

Longwood's team had only been selected September 25, so they had only a week of practicing together as a team behind them.

The game started at 2:00 p.m. Both teams had a hard time getting started, thus making the game a defensive one at first. However, Longwood started first on the offensive drives later in the first half. Time and again L.C. had the ball at the opponent's goal but just could not get the ball in the cage. L.C. had trouble keeping the ball from hitting their feet.

Just before half-time, after a continuous drive at R.P.I.'s goal cage, Peggy Wilkins scooped the ball in, making the half-time score L.C. 1-R.P.I. 0.

The second half was unlike the first in that L.C. seldom allowed R.P.I. to get past the 50-yard line except an occasional lone wing who was quickly tackled by the defensive backs. In the last minutes of the second half Becky Bonduant scored for L.C., after a lovely battle with the goalkeeper. Soon afterwards, Judy Nevitt scooped one in, making the final score 3-0.

The second game was not like the first, as L.C. took to the offensive right away and practically ran off with the whole game. In the whole game, R.P.I. was allowed only twice to see the inside of L.C.'s 25 yard line, and for so short a time that it almost was not worth mentioning.

In the first half, Sally Heilman scored, followed by Chris McDonnell, who later scored two more, and Jo Newberry put one in. The front line certainly was working together and, like the first game, an even distribution of the playing occurred on both sides of the field.

The second half was played mostly in R.P.I.'s striking circle. Jane Tibbs put the ball in the cage four times (but only three counted). The game ended 8-0, L.C.'s favor.

The "Rotunda" congratulates L.C.'s Varsity Hockey Team on its first game, and urges the students to attend the home game, this Saturday against William and Mary.

The Varsity Hockey team for 1967 is:

Seniors: Carol Blythe, Jean Hendricks, Judy Nevitt, Donna Tribley, Peggy Wilkins, Holly Forman.

Juniors: Becky Bonduant, Jane Curle, Jane Erdman, Cathy Haas, Sally Heilman, Anna Pettit, Lynn Rachel, Leslie Sedgwick, Frances Sheffield, Barbara Stone, Jane Tibbs, Jessie Watson.

Sophomores: Phyllis Carter, Betty King, Chris McDonnell, Barbara Matthews, Sherry Moriconi, Jo Newberry, Kathy Parker, Cheri Weeks.

Freshmen: Jane Richardson, Sandi Naylor.

Managers: Linda Atkinson and Pat Halstead.

Co-Captains: Jean Hendricks, Peggy Wilkins.

Mrs. Bobbitt, the coach, said that this team offers a great deal of potential, and after the first game, it certainly was exhibited that they have put it to good use.

Rubley, Lane Attend Meeting Plan Geography

On Saturday, September 30, two members of Longwood's Social Science department, Dr. Lane and Mr. Rubley, attended the executive committee meeting of the Virginia Geographical Society held at Charlottesville. The primary purpose of this meeting was to plan the geography program to be submitted at the meeting of the Virginia Educational Association this fall.

It is interesting to note that several of our faculty members have held executive positions in geographical organizations. Dr. Lane was the past president of the Virginia Geographical Society and editor of its publication, "The Virginia Geographer." Mr. Magnusson has also held these posts. Mr. Rubley is the state coordinator for the National Council for Geographic Education.

Sire Spectates

Greetings Class of '71 and welcome back to the old Pros!

Lots of things happened on campus during the summer which we can take advantage of now. I'm sure you've all heard about or bowled on the new bowling alleys in the Lanford Building. It's a good way to release some of the tensions and frustrations built up due to Studying, Studying, Studying. Remember, your dates can bowl too, for the small price of 35¢ a game. For relaxation there is also a ping pong table in the new games room. The Ter Tennis Courts by Ter Gymnasium are open for your use along with the Barlow courts which were resurfaced this past summer. Take advantage of these facilities—they're for YOU.

I would like to extend a warm welcome to a new instructor in the Physical Education Dept. Perhaps some of you who are taking a course in Modern Dance already know that I mean Miss Bowman. We're happy to have you. It's also good to see Miss Heinz back this year. She completed studies for her Doctorate which she received from the State University of Iowa.

In case some of you hadn't heard, a course in Fencing will be taught at L.C. this year. Miss Bush will instruct the course. En Guard! Touche, and Ouch!! Miss Andrews is now teaching a course in camping and camp counseling. (Watch for an article on this in the near future.)

Congratulations to Jean Hendricks and all participants for a fine Athletic Association Demonstration, in spite of the weather. Quack, Quack!!

Remember, Class Hockey will be coming up very soon. This game needs at least 11 players on each team and all 4 classes must be represented, so don't let your class down. Winning Class Hockey means 10 points toward your Class Cup. C'mon overclassmen, don't let the Freshmen be the only ones with at least 2 teams. Watch the A. A. Bulletin Board for more about this!

Has Emily Gillispie really changed her major from Art to Physical Education???

Don't forget about Rec Swims which are being held at 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 2 to 3:30 on Sat. Practice up for that swimming class you're taking and have a good time, too.

Hockey Players Invade Poconos; Tegawitha Hockey Camp

Two weeks before school began, thirty Longwood girls and Mrs. Bobbitt converged on Tegawitha Hockey Camp in the Poconos of Pennsylvania.

Hockey was played for two hours in the morning and for two hours again in the afternoon. Those interested in lacrosse played an hour before hockey in the morning and afternoon. The coaches were all English, and most had played on national teams.

Even though everyone was out of shape, as the sore muscles demonstrated, this week at hockey camp was most valuable. These girls will soon demonstrate what they learned as they begin what should be a winning hockey season.

Fall Council;

Make Fund Plans

The Longwood College Alumnae fall council was held Friday evening, September 29, and Saturday morning, September 30.

The meeting included two business sessions and local chapter and committee reports. Tentative plans for the association's annual fund solicitation were presented by Mrs. Robert B. Burger of Farmville, first vice-president. Mrs. Charles W. Appich, Jr., of Richmond, association president, presided at the meeting.

Also attending the meeting were college President Fred O. Wiygal, B. Calvin Bass of Rice, representing the Board of Visitors, and other members of the administration.

Blackwell Earns Doctoral Degree; Supports Campus Literary Activities

By LIBBA BALL

Dr. Herbert R. Blackwell, Longwood's associate professor of English, opens up this season's "Rotunda" faculty spotlight. The son of Miss Eloise Robinson, a Longwood alumnae of 1910, Dr. Blackwell began his college career at the University of Richmond with hopes of becoming a professional sports reporter. However, his plans were interrupted as the Korean War broke out. "I seriously thought of a permanent career in the army," he began, "but then when the war was over, I thought it was senseless." His teaching career started shortly afterwards at Millsaps College in Jackson, Mississippi. Three years at the University of Virginia were followed up by a four year stay at Delta State College, another Mississippi school. It was here that Mr. and Mrs. Blackwell met.

Tracing back this event, Mr. Blackwell remarked how he had been a professor there while his wife was a student. "We played tennis (her friends needed a fourth at doubles) one afternoon and gradually became friends. But our first real date, which was followed by a courtship in the Delta State library, was at the Mississippi State Pen!" (For all interested girls, please approach either of the Blackwells and have them explain the circumstances.)

Dr. Blackwell, having taught at Longwood four years, stated his preference of schools. "Co-educational schools," he began, "actually have better classroom response. Girls, especially the Southern ones, tend to be rather passive. They do not question as extensively as boys, and tend to accept the professor's statement as the truth, regardless of what is said. Boys, on the other hand, tend to question more often. Now, in the co-ed situation, the boys could challenge the professors and the girls would benefit. I don't know why, but it seems that those girls reared in the South feel that it is somehow not feminine to challenge or take a defensive stand in a classroom. Perhaps they feel that it is not quite proper to be too intelligent and challenge the male role in America. I can't quite tell."

Both Dr. and Mrs. Blackwell have a variety of outside interests, including bridge, tennis, football games and literary studies for Mr. Blackwell, and art and sewing for his wife, who is presently enrolled in an art course here at school. Mrs. Blackwell also does frequent substitute work here.

In addition to his classroom tasks, Mr. Blackwell will take part in Longwood's Institute of Southern Culture, lecturing on his paper on the "Excentricities in Southern Literature." At present, he is the advisor to the Gyre, Longwood's literary magazine and to Lambda Iota Tau, the honorary English and Language fraternity. He has been a student government advisor for the past two summers and now is co-advising with his wife for the Episcopalian Canterbury Club. He recently received his doctorate at U. Va. on his dissertation on John Dryden: "Dryden's Comic Formulas."

Asked as to whether he would remain on Longwood's campus, Dr. Blackwell promptly said "yes." Mrs. Blackwell claimed that her preference for remaining in Virginia was based on the weather. "The climate here is just so wonderful!"

Class is often a time for assuming many poses, as Dr. Blackwell confirms.

Test Dates For National Teachers Examinations Announced

College seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of the three different test dates announced today by Educational Testing Service, a nonprofit, educational organization which prepares and administers this testing program.

New dates for the testing of prospective teachers are: February 3, April 6, and July 6, 1968. The tests will be given at nearly 500 locations throughout the United States, ETS said.

A Bulletin of Information containing a list of test centers, and information about the examinations, as well as a Registration Form, may be obtained from college placement officers, school personnel departments, or directly from National Teacher Examinations, Box 911, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

Longwood Financial Request Reflects Enrollment Increase

Longwood College budget-making for the 1968-70 biennium has produced a financial document of $8,313,415 for operation and maintenance outlays for the two-year period.

This is about a 47 per cent increase over appropriations for the current two-year period, but the college fixes the need for the hike in terms of anticipated expanding enrollments.

Virginia Institutions of higher education are now filing with the State Division of the Budget requests for state appropriations from the General Fund for the requisite operating periods. Longwood will not need the total of its budgeted figure in state funds, since such charges as dormitory fees will raise an appreciable part of the money.

Construction

The college also has before the Commonwealth a request for $5,608,555 for capital construction funds for the 1968-70 biennium. Both operating and capital outlay budgets now will be subject to state officials' and legislators' scrutiny and approval.

Longwood's enrollment of 1,600 last session is due to reach 1,800 in 1969, jump another 400 by September, 1970 and total 4,000 by 1980.

Special funds would meet more than half of our 1968-70 running expenses. They would provide $4,310,695 and the general fund would be called on for only $4,022,770 under the two-year proposal.

In the capital outlay budget, revenue bonds would furnish nearly $1.6 million and the general fund about $4 million for construction.

Needs Fixed

Longwood believes a major improvement is essential in its library to bring it up to standard. The proposed library operating expenditures total $362,450, or about $150,000 more than this biennium for books, equipment and personnel.

The projected costs for instruction for regular and summer sessions in the two years starting next July total $3,474,080, an increase of more than $902,000 above the current biennium and the largest general category in the budget proposal.

Required further development and use of sophisticated educational techniques, equipment and physical plant equipment necessitates both larger sums to obtain the specialists to operate and maintain the equipment and a more rapid replacement of it, the college observes.

Preparations For '67 Geist Festival Promise Skits, Banquet, Concert

As meetings and practices become a familiar scene on campus, Longwood welcomes the arrival of the 1967 Geist Festival, to be held on Friday, Oct. 27, and Saturday, Oct. 28. Sponsored by Geist, this year's Festival will be a combination of the traditional and the new.

An art exhibit, various sporting events, color skits, a banquet, and the midway, featuring entertainment and food booths, will be included in the attractions for the Festival.

New to the Festival is an outdoor concert, scheduled for 1:15 p.m. on Saturday on the Mall, to be given by the Army band from Fort Lee, near Petersburg. The band is looking forward to its visit to Longwood; and an enjoyable program, with varied selections, is promised. Admission is free.

On October 28, the Festival's activities will begin with the concert, followed by the opening of the Midway at 2:00. Located in the back parking lot of the college, the Midway will feature food and entertainment booths, sponsored by various organizations. Each type of booth will be judged for decorations and originality, and the winners will be announced at the skit performance on Saturday night.

The hockey game will begin at 2:30 on Barlow Field, where the Varsity Hockey Team will meet the Richmond Club. After this game, the Athletic Association will sponsor Color Rush. In this event, color representatives will race for the privilege of hanging their class colors over each dormitory. Following Color Rush, the Varsity Hockey Second Team will play the Longwood Alumnae Association.

Philakalia will present an art exhibit on the circle behind Tabb Dormitory for the afternoon. Adding to the exhibitions, also, will be a swimming review, which will be sponsored by the H2O Club.

The color skits will be presented on Friday and Saturday nights. Judges from several different localities will be present to rate each skit and they will announce their decisions after the productions on Saturday night.

Following the skits, the Geist Festival Cake will be cut in front of the (Continued on Page 3)

Festival Chairman Enthusiastic As Fall Event Nears

Serving as Geist Festival Chairman for 1967 is Suzan Woltz, a senior from Falls Church, Virginia. To insure an entertaining and successful Festival, Suzan began plans this summer and as Oct. 27 and 28 approach, her work and interests grow. Suzan is very enthusiastic about the festivities for this year and joins all of the Geist members in predicting lots of excitement and surprises for the 1967 Festival.

Suzan's participation in Longwood activities is many and varied. A member of Geist, she is also Vice-President of the House Association. Working on the 1966 Geist Festival, Suzan served on the song committee. In her junior year, Suzan was editor of the "Rotunda," which climaxed three years of active service to the newspaper. Because of her journalistic endeavors, she was asked to become a member of Pi Delta Epsilon at the end of her sophomore year.

Activities Fees Committee Appropriates Campus Funds

That a college education is an expensive venture is a statement which few, if any, will contest. Financial responsibilities engulf a student at almost every turn; this being the case, each student should be interested in the way in which the administration utilizes "her" money. Although it is not possible to be briefed on the employment of all funds, one fee in particular does lend itself to public analysis, the student activity fee.

Money received from the student activity fee is delegated by the administration to various campus organizations via a Campus Fees Committee, which in turn determines the appropriation to be received by each group. A budget request, containing a historical statement of past expenditures and a request for money based on projected future expenditures is submitted yearly by the officers and sponsors of each organization; this form is the criteria upon which the committee bases its current appropriations. Prior to the consideration of each budget request the organization in question must have its books closed and audited for the past fiscal year and submit an audit report. The committee then checks the bank's records of the organization against the expenditures listed. In addition, each organization must keep a Record of Income and Expenses, as well as a written receipt of each expenditure. After careful consideration of an organization's past history, the committee sets its appropriation for the upcoming year. The budget year runs from May 30 to April 1.

The Campus Fees Committee tries to distribute the money in proportion to the scope of each organization's service in relation to the student body as a whole. For example, the Rotunda, Virginian, and Gyre receive more than an intradepartmental group since their services benefit more people. To prevent one organization from building up a capital surplus from its allotment of the activity fee, the committee tries to maintain a balance between the accounts of the various groups. For example, if a club reaches the end of a fiscal year with a balance of $300 and has indicated on its budget request that it will require $500 for the upcoming year, the committee will appropriate only $200, not the entire amount indicated on the request.

Listed below is the Statement of Funds for the 1967-68 academic year. The Campus Fees Committee welcomes any suggestions and/or criticisms which the students may have concerning the distribution of the activity fee.

Balance of Funds From 1966-67, $411.57; Student Activities Fee Funds Allocated for 1967-68, $35,000; Summer Session Funds for 1967, $1,400; Total Funds, $36,811.57.

Less Appropriations to Date: Regular Funds, $35,167; 1967 Summer Session Funds, $1,400; Total Funds, $36,567; Balance of Funds, $244.57.

Distribution of Appropriations: Alpha Lambda Delta, $100; Art Committee, $400; Artist Series (Includes 1967 Summer Session - $900), $5,400; Athletic Association, $4,455; Campus Film Committee (Includes 1967 Summer Session - $500), $1,512; Class of 1968, $400; Class of 1969, $400; Class of 1970, $300; Class of 1971, $300; Colleagues, $200; German Club, $100; Gyre, $3,200.

Taking Time To Listen

During the year various groups, such as Jarman Series, Institute of Southern Culture, University Center in Richmond, Inc., and numerous student organizations, are responsible for bringing to our campus many distinguished and excellent speakers. Prominent in their particular fields, they are well-qualified to address a more knowledgeable and discerning audience than one composed of Longwood undergraduates.

There is variety unlimited in topics covered within a year; to see this one has only to consider those lectures already given and those to come in the next weeks. We have been given the opportunity to hear lectures by leading authority on children's books and the editor of "Science" magazine. The president of Southern Seminary Junior College delivered the Convocation address and proved to be an outstanding and engaging speaker. A renowned American philosopher, Paul Weiss, will appear on our campus next week to discuss "Higher Education." In the months to come, other speakers will bring to Longwood an even greater diversity of background and subject matter. But there will probably be no more diversity of audience.

It is unfortunate indeed that these distinguished men and women do not find more receptive audiences among Longwood students. Attendance of the Jarman Series is required for freshmen; therefore, freshmen attend. Some professors require their classes to attend certain lectures. And that, alas, is usually the extent of the student audience. Those "interested parties" who are present are very few.

It is disheartening — and often disgusting — to address an audience of twenty people, yet this is the situation in which some visiting speakers have found themselves. These lecturers deserve — and should find — a receptive and respectful audience.

Few of these events last longer than an hour, though in some instances, a coffee hour, to which some students are invited, follows. Having the opportunity to meet and talk with the speaker should be regarded as a privilege — not as a punishment. It is very unlikely that there are Longwood students whose schedules are so filled that they cannot find an hour to attend a lecture. Of course, it may mean forfeiting a bridge game or a gab session at the rec. The student is left to decide which is more important.

Oh, When Longwood Goes Co-ed. Oh When . . .

College Survey Reveals Best "Hunting Grounds"

By KAREN MAHER

This past summer McCall's magazine published a survey that they had taken with the help of various college newspaper editors around the United States. The results of the survey were published in the form of questions and answers.

The lead question that would be of interest to Longwood girls is "What colleges produce the best husbands?" The answer was Harvard, Princeton, and Yale. The colleges that produce the best wives are Vassar, Smith, Wellesley, and Northwestern.

The greatest freedom in sex is found at Berkeley, Antioch, Harvard, and UCLA. Going along with this idea, the most promiscuous men are found at Berkeley, Harvard, and New York University, while the most promiscuous women are at Berkeley, Vassar, and Radcliffe.

Have you ever wondered where the best place is to find a husband? Your best bet would be to catch a plane and fly to Michigan State, Ohio State, or UCLA.

If you are hunting for a particular type of the male species, certain schools are better hunting grounds than others. For example, a leader in industry is most likely to graduate from M.I.T., Harvard, or the University of Pennsylvania. The best places for creative artists are New York University, Pratt Institute, University of California, and Oberlin. A millionaire is always nice, so try Harvard, Yale, or Princeton. For those whose tastes are scientific, go to M.I.T., Caltech, or Berkeley. If you would like someone who has something in common with you, Columbia, Harvard, and the University of Chicago are known for producing distinguished teachers. Statesmen come out of Harvard, Yale, Georgetown, and Princeton. If you simply crave the athletic type, either Notre Dame, Michigan State, or the University of Alabama is the place to be. Have you ever dreamed of meeting or marrying a future President of the United States? Make tracks to either Harvard, Southwest Texas State, Yale, West Point, or all of them.

Are you bored with the hum-drum and discomforts of your college life? Are you thinking about transferring? Why not do it right? Apply to University of Miami or the University of Hawaii. Princeton and Harvard are recommended, but most of us would not pass the required physical.

The brightest boys can be traced to Harvard, M.I.T., and Caltech, while the dullest boys roam the campuses of Parsons, West Point, and Penn State. The sloppiest looking boys reside at Berkeley and Antioch, and the best dressed boys are at Harvard, Yale and Princeton. The most attractive girls are waiting for us at Princeton, Yale, Harvard and the military academies.

The most attractive girls seem to flock to UCLA, the University of Texas, and the University of Mississippi. Radcliffe, NYU, and Bennington have a turn out of the least attractive girls. (Longwood did not even make this rating, which is one comfort.) The brightest girls shine at Radcliffe, Vassar, Smith, and Barnard. The dullest girls attend the University of Miami, Michigan State, Long Island University, and Vassar.

Only two Virginia schools received any kind of rating in this survey. Sweet Briar was among Vassar and Northwestern as the colleges with the best dressed girls. In another rating, which will come as no surprise to anyone who has ever been to U. Va. for a weekend, the University of Virginia ranked first as the most drinking school followed by the University of Wisconsin, Miami University (Ohio), and the University of Colorado.

The results of the survey were interesting, but actually not too profitable for the students of Longwood College which is in Farmville, Virginia. Since most of us have no desire to visit Sweet Briar and some of us get a little bored with U. Va., another recommendation is in order. Check the student stand-by fares on the various airlines, pack your bags, prepare to fly, and do not forget to sign out on your pink slips!

Phyllis Myers Chosen Gyre Editor

Her private interests are colorful and inventive. Since her major entails concentrated studies in American literature, she took advantage of her family last summer on vacation. "We toured the New England states and Expo '67," she began. "I dragged my two brothers and my parents to all (or as many as possible) of the homes of those famous early American authors. We saw Longfellow's home in Portland, Maine; Louisa May Alcott's home town; and Emerson and Thoreau's homes in Concord, Massachusetts; and Hartford, Connecticut, the home of that loved-by-all Mark Twain."

So This Is College Life?

By BECKY BERNARD

So you say you're a college woman now and you love it, gotta love it. Your parents didn't especially understand that 1.6 average, but things are lookin' up for this semester, you say you love the girls, except for that hairy monster you live with . . . and you can leave for the weekend on Friday at 11:00 a.m., except for that 10:00 math of Saturday morning. . . you say your housemother is walking in your door just as you unplug your popcorn popper and shove your sunlamp under the bed. . . the fire drill just went off and you're in the shower washing your hair. . . and you just got out of a dorm search and you're getting a little nervous about all that dining hall silverware in your room. . .

you say you got invited to Va. to the Theta Delta pajama costume party, you went, and the L.C. "Rotunda" photographer got some real cool candid shots of you. . .

you say you're got four late minutes to your credit already and your watch realizes that his watch is fifteen minutes slow. . .

you say your dorm is great except for that darn teenie bopper upstairs who thinks she's Aretha Franklin and does the pony all night. . .

you say you got a mid-term this afternoon and all the beds in the infirmary are full. . .

you say you come grooving in from Leo's and Judi Board is at your door to greet you. . . ain't that the cat's meow. . .

you say you just washed your clothes in a machine that they just used to dye a slip bed. . .

and you just had to have that cute little dress downtown and now they won't let you go home until you pay the bill. . . the check bounced, huh? . . . you say the temperature dropped to 40 degrees and they turned the heat off in the dorm. . .

you pulled an all-nighter to finish that book report and have a pop quiz instead. . .

you say you're cold natured and your roommate is on some kind of health kick. . . Loves fresh air. . .

you say you got no classes until 11:00 and can sleep and they're blowing up tree stumps outside your window. . .

you say you just bleached your hair, then found out that your history professor hates blondes. . .

your friends just made you a charter member of Bumma Sig. . . they love ya. . .

you're going to UNC this weekend with some dude and you just got a big boob on your chin. . .

you had a blind date, he wasn't the guy your roommate thought he was and turned out to have long slicked black hair, tapered torso, and picked you up on his 320 motorbike. . .

Well, you never know, you know. . . you studied all night for a quiz at 8:00. . . then slept 'till noon. . . your pump can't stand it. . .

Somebody rolled your $20 iron out of the laundry room and left you a K-Mart $5.00 special in its place. . . and your housemother listens for dropping pins over her PA. . .

and they're checking your windows after lights out. . . but you outwitted 'em, you sly dog. You covered your windows with blankets!

Ah, times are easy, times are hard. But they're all part of life at dear ol' L.C.!

A New Editor Is Born

Recently the Publications Board selected Phyllis Myers as Editor-in-Chief of THE GYRE for 1967-1968. We feel that this position now rests in very capable hands and we have high hopes for the finest magazine ever produced at Longwood. But this goal cannot be achieved without the loyal support of the students.

THE GYRE has progressed greatly in the past few years, becoming a quality piece of art. A literary publication is essential to the student expression on campus. The ideals and talents of youth are the most important treasures of academic life.

THE GYRE is striving to produce a magazine that will appeal to a wide range of student tastes. The staff offers encouragement to the student artists. They need your short stories, poetry, essays, reviews, and art work. A creative writing contest is sponsored annually by THE GYRE as an effort to seek out the very best literary material. THE GYRE has twenty-seven years of successful publication at Longwood and is trying to make the twenty-eighth year an even better one.

In an age when college literary magazines are folding because of lack of student support or funds, we urge you to support this literary product of our college with your energies and written contributions.

National Science Foundation Applications

The National Research Council has been called upon again to advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of graduate and regular postdoctoral fellowships. ## Longwood Defeats William And Mary, Tibbs And Matthews Dominate Scores

Saturday, October 7, was not exactly the best hockey weather as Longwood hosted William and Mary College. The wet grass played an important part in the day's games.

W&M was delayed by an emergency road repair but after a short warm-up the team was ready to play.

The first game was very tight as the two excellent teams battled for the ball. L.C. ran away with it and scored off of Barbara Matthews' stick.

But the remaining 15 minutes of the first half was spent on Longwood's 25 yard line as W&M tried desperately to score. At the half, L.C. had held W&M with a 1-0 score.

When the second half began, it was noticeable that W&M had received some new instructions and again kept the ball in L.C.'s territory until our forward line came back to help the defense. Longwood stole the ball, ran up the field and again Barbara Matthews put the extra touch to the ball and scored. L.C. led 2-0. But W&M was not defeated yet. Again the ball was in L.C.'s striking circle and with a hard rush on the ball, scored with a hard hit to make the score 2-1. As the final whistle sounded, before either team could score again, Longwood was victorious with a 2-1 score.

The second game was much like the first but the field became more slippery. Early in the first half, L.C. drove hard and scored in the first five minutes with a scoop by Chris McDonnell. However, it was not too long afterwards that W&M managed to put one over the goal line to even the score.

It was obvious that Longwood's front line was ready to score but because they were the ones doing the most slipping they could not keep hold of the ball for a very long time. Despite this fact Longwood spent most of the second half in W&M's striking circle, fighting to get the ball in the cage. Finally, two well placed hits by Jane Tibbs crossed the line one right after the other. W&M, not to be outdone, came back with 5 minutes to go and scored. In the final minutes of the game, no one was sure how the game would end. Again the whistle was a saving factor, with L.C. leading, 3-2. "The Rotunda" reminds the student body that Longwood will host Lynchburg College tomorrow at 2 and 3 p.m., Saturday, October 14, L.C. will host Westhampton at 2 and 3 p.m. Come out and support our victorious hockey teams!

Class Hockey Begins Oct. 10; Competition Starts For Classes

On Tuesday class hockey practices will begin on Iler Field. The exact time of practices will be posted on the A.A. board. Fifteen general practices have been scheduled. Each player must attend eight thirty minute practices to be eligible for the class team. In case of rain practices will be held in the Student Building Gym. The class teams will be chosen by the respective team members on Thursday, October 19. Class games begin on October 23. There must be a team from each class to have a class tournament.

A selection committee of varsity players will select players from each class team for the color teams. The color games are set to begin on November 2.

LC Establishes 'Turnverein,' Local Honorary Fraternity

The physical education department now has an honorary fraternity on campus, TURNVEREIN, a German word that literally translated means gymnastics but is usually taken to mean any form of physical activity or sport, is the name of the society.

TURNVEREIN hopes to go national and has applied to Delta Psi Kappa Fraternity. Delta Psi Kappa requires a history of the college, a history of the physical education department, and a history of each person in the local chapter along with a listing of their professional memberships before they will admit a local chapter. Delta Psi Kappa emphasizes all aspects of physical education and stresses AAHPER (American Association of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation). Delta Psi Kappa does not say that their chapters must be honorary, but 38 out of 40 chapters are honorary, and the Longwood Chapter has chosen to be an honorary society.

The faculty of the physical education department has been working since 1963 to establish an honorary fraternity for physical education majors. In the Spring of 1965 the idea was presented to the students who accepted it enthusiastically. Last Spring, 1967, a nucleus group was formed with two members from each class. The original group consisted of Diane Davis and Connie Gallahan who have graduated, Angie Smith, Dana Tribby, Anna Pettis, Pat Halstead, and Barbara Matthews.

Presently there are fourteen members of TURNVEREIN. The officers are: Donna Tribby, President; Anna Pettis, Vice-President and Historian; and Jane Curle, Secretary-Treasurer. Mrs. Bobbitt is the faculty sponsor. The other members are: Carol Blythe, Jean Hendricks, Pat Ingram, Ellen Mc-

Intramural, Class, and Color swimming will be starting on Nov. 13 which is only one month away, so brush up on those strokes NOW.

O. K. Seniors, let's not wear those L. C. award blazers out in the first two weeks (just joking, if I had one I'd be proud to wear it too). You deserved the blazers for all your hard work and long hours spent in participation on athletic teams and committees, etc. Thanks for keeping up the school and class, and color spirit that is so much a part of Longwood College.

Let's really see some of the old Red & White and Green & White spirit in sports, Circus, and Color Rush!

Special thanks to my staff for the fine coverage and articles last week. You did a great job! Members include Dianne Bradley, Yvonne Lester, Janet Harmon, Leslie Sedgewick, Sibyl Prouse, and Judy Turner.

Special congratulations to the Varsity Hockey team for two hard-fought wins over William & Mary.

Nancy Britton Elected Harvest Bowl Queen

Nancy Britton, a Senior sociology major, has been chosen 1967 Harvest Bowl Queen. Sponsored by the Junior League of Roanoke, this will be the 10th Harvest Bowl. The football game, scheduled for October 14 at Victory Stadium in Roanoke, features Virginia Military Institute against the Citadel of Charleston, South Carolina.

Nancy's name was drawn by Mr. Herman H. Pelver, president of Norfolk and Western Railway, from a bowl containing the names of all nine Harvest Bowl princesses. These princesses represent the various colleges from around the state.

Nancy was selected to represent

Longwood as Harvest Bowl princess by an Administrative-Faculty committee at Longwood. She was notified last May that she was to be the Harvest Bowl Princess.

Nancy has served on the Judicial Board and House Council. Last year she was chairman of the Constitution Committee. She is also a member of Alpha Sigma Tau sorority.

As Harvest Bowl Queen, Nancy will have a busy schedule the week end of October 14. Friday night there will be an informal party in Salem. Saturday, the Harvest Bowl parade begins at 11:30. Nancy will be on the same float as Barbara Yost, Miss Virginia. At 12:30, the court will be presented and Nancy will be crowned Harvest Bowl Queen. The game follows the parade, starting at 1:30. At 7:00 there will be a formal dinner dance at the Patrick Henry Hotel to end the festivities. At this time the court will again be presented.

Nancy, in commenting on her honor, said: "It was really a surprise. It was funny. I was really excited, especially since I've seen all the Harvest Bowls, and I know Barbara Yost, Miss Virginia. We grew up together!"

Greek Gab

This past week the Sigma Sigma Sigma sisters sponsored a successful bake sale in the New Smoker and are planning several others this year to raise money for their contribution to Walton House, the home of their National Headquarters. Located in Woodstock, Virginia, Walton House is being furnished and landscaped with the help of funds raised by Tri-Sigma chapters all over the nation. The colonial mansion finds a perfect setting in the Shenandoah Valley region. The Alpha chapter Sigmas feel fortunate to have the national chapter in Virginia as this enables them to make frequent visits.

Delta Zeta sisters entertained at a tea October 10, in their chapter room in honor of all new faculty members. They were honored to have acting President and Mrs. Wygal, Dean Wilson, and many of the faculty wives. The Longwood chapter had a big surprise last week end. Mrs. William R. Martin, who most of you know as Sarah Mitchell, visited for a few days. It was really great to have Sarah, who was our pledge president last year, with us for a few days.

Starting tomorrow, October 12, the DZ's will sell tickets for a raffle to raise money for the support of our foster child. The prizes are well worth the ten-cent ticket you buy. Complete details will be posted in each dorm, so get ready to "take a chance." Our final word - "Hi, Edgar Potts!"

After the excitement of returning to school and seeing everyone again, the ZTA's immediately settled down to business by having a successful bake sale on October 4 to make money for the organization. The same night the sisters went to the Stag Room for dinner. There was a very good turnout, and everyone had a "great" time at this first social event of the year.

Sunday, October 8, the Gamma Nu chapter of Zeta Tau Alpha at the University of Virginia held their preferential party in the Gold Room of Mary Munford House. Six members of the Alpha Chapter here at Longwood attended the party and thoroughly enjoyed a preview of the latest fashions and an inspiring candlelight service.

The Zetas have plans for attending as a group many of the cultural events which are to take place on campus. They are also planning many social events for the year.

Les Francophiles Welcome Freshmen, Exchange Students

The first meeting of Les Francophiles was held in Cox Rec on Thursday, October 5. It was a dinner to welcome the freshmen and to introduce the foreign exchange students, Lus Schuppiser and Pia Solberger.

On Wednesday, October 4, the first cabinet meeting of the year was held. The cabinet consists of representatives elected from each of the French classes and the officers, who are: Mary Lee McKeever, President; Janet Sullivan, Vice President; Ann Earman, Secretary; Linda Politan, Treasurer; and Lyn Snyder, Reporter. The cabinet members are: Lynda See, Judy Page, Marjorie Brown, Martha Walters, Ann Gulick, Judithanne Struyk, Kitty Wyman, Sharon Farmer, Emily Salle, Jill Randolph, Marcie Woodall, Nellie King, and Carol Coleman. Marcie Woodall was appointed Les Francophiles chairman for Geist Festival.

Jarman Series: Haviland Praises Children's Books

Miss Virginia Haviland, head of Children's Books at the Library of Congress, spoke Tuesday, October 10 in the first Jarman Series. The topic of her lecture was "Children's Books: An Open-ended Career."

Mrs. Haviland graduated from Cornell University and studied library science at the Boston Public Library. She has written many reviews and articles for professional periodicals and is presently the reviewer of children's books for "Horn Book Magazine."

Mrs. Haviland has served as Chairman of the Children's Library Association and Chairman of the Newberry Caldecott Committee. She has served on the executive committee of the Children's section of the International Federation of Library Associations and on the executive board of International Board on Books for Young People. In addition to her duties at the Library of Congress, she is the author of many children's books.

After the lecture, a reception was held at the Alumnae House. Freshmen are required to attend all Jarman Series Lectures.

Longwood YR's Attend Workshop; Plan Open House

On October 7th, eleven Longwood College Young Republicans attended the College Young Republican Federation of Virginia's State Campaign Workshop at the University of Virginia. Included in the workshop were seminars on campaign techniques by leading Young Republicans and Senior Party officials.

Following the workshop the members attended both a campaign dinner featuring Maureen Reagan, daughter of California's Republican Governor, Ronald Reagan, and a party given for workshop registrants. Longwood members attending the activities were Ellen McClendon, Paige Winebarger, Betty Sammet, Marcia Mitchell, Carolyn Cummins, Gayle Yeats, Rita Dutton, Nancy Crim, Cathy Jester, Petty Jones, and Jo Davis.

Thursday, October 12, at 5 p.m., the Longwood College Young Republicans will hold an Open House. Jeff Wainscott, the Young Republican College Federation President, will be the speaker.

Mortimer Presents Informal Lecture

Frederick C. Mortimer, Instructor in Geography, made an informal talk to the Danville division of the Virginia Education Association on Saturday, October 7. His subject was "Changing Patterns in the British West Indies." The main emphasis was on the political-geographic problems in the British Caribbean. He felt that this topic would be interesting because the area is close to us yet we know little about it.

NEW - FIND SCHOLARSHIPS BY COMPUTER

Last year $30 million in college scholarships went unclaimed because qualified persons applied... because no qualified persons knew of them. Now ECS engineers and educators have programmed a high-speed computer with 700,000 item of scholarship aid, worth over $500 million, to permit students to easily and quickly locate scholarships for which they qualify. The student fills out a detailed, confidential questionnaire and returns it to ECS, with a one-time computer-processing fee of $15. In seconds the computer compares his qualifications against requirements of grants set up by foundations, business, civic, fraternal, religious, and government organizations, and prints a personalized report to the student telling him where and when to apply for grants for which he qualifies. Thousands of these do not depend on scholastic standing or financial need.

Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., Named Longwood President

Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., assistant superintendent of Chesapeake public schools, has been named president of Longwood College, effective December 1.

The 36-year-old son of the superintendent of Richmond city schools brings to the presidency of one of the nation's oldest teacher-training institutions a 12-year background of public school leadership.

Fred O. Wygal, interim president of Longwood in 1962 and 1963, returned to the college this summer as acting president shortly after Dr. James H. Newman was granted a leave of absence. Mr. Wygal will continue as acting president until the new president assumes office.

Dr. Willett's appointment was announced on October 12 by E. Angus Powell, rector of the board of visitors, following board action.

In announcing Dr. Willett's appointment as eighth president of Longwood, founded in 1839 as a private female academy that became a state-assisted college for women in 1884, Powell described the new president as "an outstanding educator who is recognized in educational circles for his demonstrated professional leadership and qualities of personal growth."

"His recent administrative responsibilities at Chesapeake, among which were teacher recruitment and curriculum construction, will prove especially helpful as he directs the administrative affairs of the college, in cooperation with an experienced and highly regarded faculty and staff."

"Before appointing Dr. Willett to the presidency, the board met with and considered many outstanding educators in its search for an administrator whose leadership would assure Longwood's continued success and increasing service as a state institution of higher learning. In Dr. Willett's appointment, the board has achieved its objective of providing the college's faculty, staff, and students with outstanding leadership," Mr. Powell stated.

The board's search committee that recommended Dr. Willett for the presidency consisted of Ralph A. Beston, of Arlington, chairman; Henry C. Chesley, Jr., of Richmond; and Dr. Duvahl Ridgway-Hull, of Roanoke, a Longwood alumna. Faculty members assisting the board in its search for a president were Dr. Elizabeth B. Jackson, chairman, Dr. Patton Lockwood, Dr. Charles H. Patterson, Jr., and Mrs. Ruth Taliaferro.

In commenting upon his new appointment, Dr. Willett said, "I have always held Longwood in high regard, an opinion that I have formed in being associated with Longwood graduates who are working in the Chesapeake school system. I have also observed the fine job they are doing in other areas of the state."

"It has long been apparent that Longwood is doing an excellent job in preparing teachers who combine the best elements of a liberal arts education with the professional training needed in the teaching field. I am looking forward to working with the staff and faculty of Longwood," he stated.

Member of Phi Delta Kappa, top professional education fraternity, Dr. Willett has served as chairman of Virginia Education Association's international relations committee, as well as holding memberships in National Education Association and American Association of School Administrators.

A leader in area civic and recreational activities, he was honored in 1961 with the Distinguished Service Award by the Portsmouth Junior Chamber of Commerce as "the outstanding young man of the year." He has served on the board of directors of Portsmouth YMCA and is a member of the Rotary, Ruritan, and Portsmouth Executives clubs. He is a former president of Norfolk County and Chesapeake Colt baseball leagues.

Coming to Norfolk County in 1955 as a seventh grade teacher at Churchland Elementary, he became principal of the new Hodges Manor Elementary School the following year. In 1958 he became principal of Churchland Junior High School. He was named administrative assistant to the superintendent of the system in 1960. In 1963 he became administrative assistant and clerk of the school board of the new city of Chesapeake. Later in the year he was named assistant superintendent for instruction. Recently he has taught graduate-level extension courses for the University of Virginia.

Holder of the bachelor of arts degree from Washington and Lee University, Willett received the master's and Ph.D. degrees from University of Virginia. In 1964 he became the first Virginian to win the Finis Engleman Scholarship for graduate study awarded by the American Association of School Administrators.

A graduate of Richmond's Thomas Jefferson High School, Willett served two years in the U. S. Army and has traveled in Europe and Africa. He is a Baptist and frequent speaker to church, school, and civic groups.

He is married to the former Mary E. Turner, of Richmond. The family, including three preschool age sons, are residents of Portsmouth.

'Cherokee Indians' Topic Of First Institute Lecture

By KAREN CAMPBELL

The first Institute of Southern Culture program for the 1967-68 academic year will be presented on October 27. The subject "Pockets of Ethnic Cultures of the South" comprises the theme of this year's Institute. Dr. Robert Thomas, Professor of Anthropology, Montclair College, Wayne State University, will begin this year's lecture series with a talk on "The Cherokee Indians." Other lecturers sponsored by the Institute for the upcoming year include Mr. Charles L. Dufour, Editorial Columnist and Author New Orleans States-Item, and Dr. Herbert R. Blackwell, Associate Professor of English, Longwood College, whose topics will be "The Cajuns" and "Eccentricities in Southern Literature," respectively.

The Institute of Southern Culture was established at Longwood College in 1956 to promote the study of traditional aspects of Southern civilization through academic course work, special lectures, and through the publication of research in the field. The Institute is currently sponsoring a series of lectures by visiting scholars and members of the Longwood faculty. Course work on both undergraduates and graduate levels also provides a means for exchange of ideas about various aspects of Southern regionalism.

Geist Announces Fall Festival Usherettes; Selects Cherie Weeks As Midway Marshal

The 1967 Geist Festival Usherettes were revealed at the Festival Assembly, held on October 10.

After introducing some of the activities of Festival and showing movies of past skits and last year's Midway, the members of Geist announced two girls from each class who will serve as the 1967 Usherettes for Festival. From the freshmen class, Andee Maddox and Jane Richardson were selected. Martha Conway and Jeannie Kay were chosen from the sophomore class. Representing the junior class are Sally Heilman and Cam Thomas. Senior Usherettes are Nancy Walnes and Joan West.

During the past several years, almost all aspects of Longwood's former "Circus" have been changed, and thus the titles of Ringmaster and Barker are now out of date. The new titles of Mistress of Ceremonies and Midway Marshal were chosen to replace the old terms for the Geist Festival. The Mistress of Ceremonies, who will be revealed on October 25, will come from the junior class and will preside at the Color Skits on Friday and Saturday nights. The Midway Marshal, selected from the sophomore class, will have more to do during the Festival than the former Barker. She will preside over the Midway and other activities scheduled for Saturday afternoon.

CHERIE WEEKS

Geist is proud to announce the selection of Miss Cherie Weeks as Midway Marshal for the 1967 Geist Festival. As Midway Marshal, Cherie will preside over the Midway and the activities scheduled for Saturday afternoon.

A sophomore Red and White, Cherie is active in many phases of Longwood life. She is a Collegiate, a member of the Varsity Hockey Team, and a member of the Social Standards Committee for House Association. Cherie is also Vice President of the Class of 1970 for this year.

As a freshman, Cherie participated in class hockey and class volleyball. She was also president of the Freshman Commission. In the spring of 1967, she was chosen to be a class representative on the May Court.

From Arlington, Cherie is majoring in Health and Physical Education.

Usherettes Andee Maddox, Cam Thomas, Jeannie Kay, Nancy Walnes, Sally Heilman, Martha Conway, Jane Richardson, Joan West, practice dance routine.

Welcome, Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr.

We welcome Dr. Henry I. Willett, Jr., recently named president of Longwood College.

As one of the nation's oldest teacher-training institutions, Longwood needs the guidance of a qualified administrative leader to assure continued success and service as a state institution of higher learning. Dr. Willett has been described as "an outstanding educator who is recognized in educational circles for his demonstrated professional leadership and qualities of personal growth." He has been a teacher, principal and administrator working with teacher recruitment and curriculum construction. As assistant superintendent of Chesapeake public schools his major responsibility has been working with teachers in instruction. His wealth of knowledge in the educational field will prove very beneficial as he comes to Longwood to train new teachers. We feel sure that Dr. Willett will contribute much to make Longwood the teacher-training institution in the South.

We need a president who will take an active interest in the life-blood of this campus — we, the students.

During the past few years Longwood has lived through a period of considerable stress and strain. Administrative positions have been short-lived. When Dr. Willett assumes the presidency on December 1, we will bid farewell to our acting president, Dr. Wygol. As interim president Dr. Wygol has taken a sincere interest in us as students — mingling in the dining hall and in meetings and conferences. Dr. Wygol's absence will be felt and we hope that this same type of relationship will progress even further as we welcome Dr. Willett.

Cutting System Questioned

The cutting system at Longwood leaves a lot to be desired. Actually the policy of the school is to leave the number of unexcused cuts up to each individual teacher. This is fine in respect to the professor that will come right out and allow a certain number of unexcused absences or to the professor that leaves the number of cuts up to the discretion of the students as long as it does not affect their grades. But there are some professors who simply state that they will allow absolutely no cuts. If a student has to cut, she can be sure that her grades will be affected.

College is supposed to be a time of increasing maturity, a time when the student should be able to make her own judgments about what is best for her. Granted some students are not yet capable of making mature judgments, still it is not up to the school or the professors to decide some are mature and some are not, therefore they will act according to what is best for the immature. The majority of students realize that they cannot afford to regularly miss classes, therefore they only cut when it is necessary. But even the most mature student is not going to stay at Longwood on a Saturday morning if something important comes up. In a system that allows no cuts, when the class falls on a Saturday students are going to cut no matter what the policy of the professor is. If the professor had a policy of allowing unlimited cuts according to the student's grades or discretion, or to assigning a certain number of cuts each semester, most students would plan their week's work accordingly and would probably not even use all of the allowed cuts.

The preceding holds true for late Friday afternoons. Often transportation problems have a lot to do with whether a student cuts a class. Most students would prefer not to cut classes but if they have to get somewhere and the only bus leaves for Richmond, Charlottesville, Northern Virginia, etc., at 4:00 in the afternoon and they have classes until 5:15, what is the student supposed to do? There are only so many student cars on campus. If the student waits until Friday night to catch the 8:05 bus, then she may as well wait until Saturday morning. On Saturday morning the bus leaves at 9:50. Thus the student is not able to make the bus if she has any classes after 8:00 one. The next bus on Saturday leaves at 2:35 in the afternoon which means the destination of the student will not be reached until late afternoon.

Longwood does not like her reputation as a suitcase school, but what is a school full of girls supposed to do. Since the boys refuse to come to Longwood (they say there is nothing to do here), the girls have to leave campus. The boys' schools usually have no limit on cuts which makes it nice for them, but it does not help us any since they will not come here for a weekend. Therefore, the girls who have no cuts, take cuts anyway and leave. This is throwing the authority of the professor right out the window and is also detrimental to the student. It affects her grades but she develops the attitude that she does not care. If she has to go, then there is nothing she can do about it.

Therefore, it is unreasonable for any professor to come out and state flatly that he will allow absolutely no cuts.

K. M.

Student Center Shows Improvements, But May Present Future Problems

By LIBBA BALL

Many Longwood girls are truly excited about the new campus recreation center, the Lankford Activities Building. The brick and traditionally-columned structure is centrally located and is easily accessible from all campus outposts. Now, the question rises, does this building really serve its purpose now, and if so, will it serve in this same capacity in 1972 when Longwood's enrollment is estimated at four-thousand students?

At present, the building has a bank and postal service, a ballroom, a 4-lane bowling alley, and a snack bar. The campus police have their headquarters within cement walls and the "Rotunda" staff occupies a two room area.

As for use in the future, it may well be speculated that the bank and the post office area, and will remain, a vital part of campus life. This area is large enough to accommodate several hundred students per-hour of business time. However, by 1972, will a four-lane bowling alley accommodate such large numbers? Already the problem of over-crowdedness has sprung up. Several students have complained that they would bowl more often if the lanes weren't already occupied. Another girl commented that if it weren't for the bowling alley, she'd go stir-crazy between mid-week tests. "It gives me the opportunity to forget about my school work for a few hours each week. It's relaxing, too!"

One room, however seems to be often times vacant. Maybe this is because not too many girls know proper playing techniques, or maybe this is due to a genuine lack of interest, but the table tennis room seems to be a valuable waste of space. Now, if we could set up a pool table in that area, I know there would be no such complaints, but who do you ask when you want permission to open your own "Joe's Pool Hall" on campus? I bet we'd get more participation, though.

Spotlighting the snack bar, "Most patrons of last year's set-up will agree that no such area was more desperately needed. For hours we'd stand in line to get a grilled cheese sandwich or even a coke. This was really trying for those freshmen who only had that 10-11 p.m. period to shower, roll hair, and then run down for a snack. It just simply couldn't be done; particularly during exam time when every girl in school needed that added energy for those all-nighters. Now the service is efficient. The whole set-up seems lots more sanitary and the addition of salads in cafeteria-style is an added attraction. Adequate table space and courteous service are another change from last year's rec. The prices are set at a college minimum, and the food seems to have improved. And another attribute, . . . although they may not sell those steaks like the Stag Room or Tom's Campus Room, the rec is much closer and is really doing good business.

But that ballroom; or shall we call it a "ballroom"? To begin with, it just isn't large enough to accommodate our student body. This presents a real problem. The carpets are attractive and the columns add to Longwood's southern-styled architecture. Why then is this called a ballroom if it was constructed too small to accommodate enough people for our greatest event, the Junior Ring Dance? It's a shame this lovely setting can't be used to highlight this year's Longwood social feature. What then, can we use this room for? Faculty meetings? School activities meeting? Conferences? Maybe even a tea or a speaker's hall? An occasional Y.W.C.A. mixer may prove successful, but we can't say, "This room is the ballroom. We have our annual Junior Ring dance here!" Why such poor planning?

And finally "Ye Ole Bookstore." Students have complained bitterly this Ladies in the news — or in the Women's Page, at least. How they suffer; how they suffer.

Shirley Temple Black has stepped out of American motherhood into American politics — or more correctly, Shirley Temple Black is dragging American motherhood into American politics. Campaigning for a Senate Seat from California, the housewife and mother is running on a basic platform of sweetness and light. Yet a recent speech delivered to a Woman's Press group was a curious combination of apple pie and hard-core political realities. One could not help but be reminded of the dimpled child star of "Heidi" who complained because she had to wear all her clothes, since she had no suitcase in which to keep them.

Caroline Kennedy is the fashion pacesetter this year, according to the fashion world Bible, "Women's Wear Daily." Since mother Jackie blew her cool during the Manchester case, and Aunt Lee (Radziwill) threw her across a New York stage, there seems to be only one Kennedy without a social blight, Caroline, of course. A writer for the "Daily" credits Caroline with the return of the waistline, because she wore a certain dress to a certain birthday party. That sounds reason-

Lambda Iota Tau Sponsors Schechner Dramatic Author

Lambda Iota Tau, an international honor society for literature, has planned its first activity for the semester. The organization will bring Dr. Richard Schechner to Longwood's campus on Tuesday, October 31, at 10:00 a.m. Dr. Schechner will speak in the Student Lounge on the topic, "Intermediate: A New Departure in Performing Art." This lecture should prove of interest to all drama students and anyone interested in the theatre.

Dr. Schechner is well-prepared to speak on this topic, being the editor of "The Drama Review" and Professor of Theatre at New York University. Formerly, he was Associate Professor of Theatre at Tulane University and editor of the "Tulane Drama Review." He also finds time to serve on the Board of Directors for the Free Southern Theatre, and to be an advisor to the U. S. Office of Education, Arts and Humanities Program.

He is also the author of three works on the theatre: "Theatre and Revolution," "Ford, Rockefeller, and Theatre," and "Approaches to Theory Criticism."

Lambda Iota Tau urges all literature students and drama enthusiasts to attend Dr. Schechner's lecture.

year after the upswing in publisher's prices, but we've been told that this can not be helped. Many texts have changed and lots of girls are stuck with thirty or forty dollars worth of books that we'll never be able to resell. But, this year's bookstore is far more spacious and well organized than last year's. More gifts and odds and Longwood "ends" are on sale; and even posters to hang in empty dorm rooms are available! What more can we ask for? This is the most ideal place on campus. The first week of school, every student was rushing madly around, trying to buy as many texts as were necessary. Only then was there that problem of crowds. But then it is important to think of four-thousand — not two-thousand girls purchasing supplies from this book store. Then will they have to go elsewhere for their paper and pencils? Will downtown's Grant's or Crute's take even more business from the supply office? My speculation is that these retail stores will

L.C. Defense Untiring, Westhampton Held Scoreless

By LESLIE SEDGWICK
Saturday, October 14, was one of the warmest days L.C. has seen in two weeks, but the Longwood Varsity Hockey Team did not appreciate the hot sticky weather. The effect was evident as L.C. hosted Westhampton College on Barlow Field.

In the first game the ball constantly exchanged hands, travelled from one striking circle to the other, and quickly wore the players of both teams out. The game was strictly a defensive one for everyone involved as neither forward line could muster up enough extra "push" to put the ball over the opponent's goal line.

Time and again, both teams had the ball inside the striking circles, but could not move the ball in close enough for a score. Longwood put one in, but it was called back by the official due to an offensive violation in the striking circle. Barbara Matthews, L.C.'s Center Forward, commented after the game, "One time the ball just rolled down the goal line, and we all reached out to push it over, but no one could get to it. But that time the Westhampton goalkeeper responded with a kick which cleared the ball." The game was fast, too fast for the sticky weather. Longwood managed to keep Westhampton scoreless, but Westhampton did the same to L.C. as the final score ended 0-0.

In the second game, L.C.'s forwards found themselves in their opponent's striking circle much of the time. The scoring was exciting as Sandi Naylor, center halfback put in two quick goals midway through the first half. L.C.'s forwards drew Westhampton's defense in close to the goal cage, leaving plenty of room for Sandi to drive for the scores. Westhampton put up a good return fight, but the L.C. defense did a tremendous job of keeping them away from the goal cage. In the last minutes of the first half, Chris McDonnell scored to make it 3-0 in Longwood's favor at the half. Two points were added by Jane Tibbs in the second half. The game was played well by both teams but L.C. had the scores to keep them on top, 5-0 as the final whistle blew.

Longwood varsity hockey team displays winning tactics that scored 6-1 victory over Lynchburg.

Lynchburg Bows Twice, Wilkins Sparks Victory

By SIBIL PROUSE

Sparked by Peggy Wilkins' goal just before half-time, Longwood's Varsity Hockey team defeated Lynchburg College by a score of 6 to 1 last Thursday afternoon. Although Lynchburg scored the first goal of the game about five minutes before the half, Longwood quickly came back with some fine passing which enabled Peggy to even the score at 1 to 1.

The ball, which had been battled back and forth between the two teams in the first half, remained on Lynchburg's half of the field during the second part of the game. L.C. maintained possession of the ball, and with the assistance of Barbara Matthews who scored two goals and Becky Bondurant, Judy Nevitt, and Jane Tibbs who each had one, Longwood increased its total score to 6 before the final whistle blew. Many of the goals were set up by left wing, Anna Pettis who carried the ball down the alley and then drove across the striking circle to her teammates. The backfield put up a real fight to take and keep the ball away from their Lynchburg opponents.

The second game of the afternoon rewarded L.C. with another victory. Scoreless Lynchburg bowed to Longwood's stick women by a score of 12 to 0. Little action was seen by L.C.'s goalie, but Lynchburg's goalkeeper was on constant guard against Longwood attackers.

Leading the scoring was center forward Sally Heilman who managed to get four goals. She was followed by Chris McDonnell and Jane Tibbs, each with three, and Phyllis Carter and Peggy Wilkins contributed one apiece to the 12 goal total. Although she did not score, Fran Sheffield, a Junior transfer from Averett, set up an ideal shot for Chris who put the ball over for a goal. Again as in the first game, the forward line was backed up well by the defense which continually pushed the ball up to our offense.

Next Saturday Longwood will be hosted by Madison College at Harrisonburg. We will all be pulling for our L.C. teams in high hopes they will return to our campus with two more victories to add to their record!! The next home games will be on October 28 when Longwood will play the Richmond Club and the Alumnae for Geist Festival weekend.

McCaffrey, Baldwin Score Tennis Wins; Win Color Points

and
KAREN SPADE

Tension filled the air as Jane McCaffrey and Laurel Baldwin met Lynn Coleman and Barbara Jenkins in the final match of the Class Tennis Doubles Tournament last Tuesday.

An excited crowd of spectators watched as the players became more determined to win with each hit. After a long and well played battle, Jane and Laurel came out on top by defeating Lynn and Barbara, 7-5, 6-3. This victory gave the freshman class five points toward class cup. This is the only class with points so far.

Mrs. Harris, Varsity Tennis Coach, remarked that the girls played a really stimulating tournament. "The classes have some excellent tennis prospectives and I am looking forward to seeing them try out for the Varsity Tennis Team."

Today at 5:00 p.m. the winners of Class Tennis Doubles Tournament played Dr. O'Neill, head of the Physical Education Department, and Dr. Heinz, physical education instructor. The winners will receive a free dinner at the losers' expense.

Betty Reynolds organized the tennis tournament which was aimed at getting students to participate in sports. The entire tournament ran smoothly and was a big success for the freshman class.

Campers Rough It; Longwood Estate Site Of New Course

Every Monday night at 5:00 a group of campers would light up cars and go to Longwood Estate for class. The class is Camp Counseling which is a two hour course taught by Miss Andrews. The course is a requirement for the new freshman physical education majors. The class consists of freshmen majors and several upperclassmen.

The class is held at Longwood Estate. In the first few classes the kids had to clean the outside fireplace, and the area all around the cabin. They cook dinner over campfires every week. Have you ever eaten half cooked corn or raw hamburger? Well, they do every week and they love it.

After it gets cold — really cold, like snow or the ground — they will have a regular classroom schedule. They will learn basic first aid, knots, and games to play and songs to sing around the campfire. What a way to earn two hours!

Next spring camps from all over the U.S. will be calling for the experienced campers from Longwood's camping class.

Student Center Serving Purpose?

get more of that kind of business, but while our bookstore holds a monopoly on all campus supplies, the business will still be as profitable as we know it must be now.

Several questions still remain unanswered. Will the Lankford Activities Building accommodate a student body twice the size of ours today in four short years? Will future campus plans show the development of a more extensive recreation area? Or will Longwood's enrollment unexpectedly fall and the building's size be adequate enough to accommodate the girls on campus. Statistics show no fall in enrollment in the near future, and my guess is that our administration and planning board has already "jumped the gun" and made some type of preparation, for the future.

Gallery Talk Highlights First Philakalia Meeting

Monday, October 16, Philakalia held its regular meeting. The program consisted of an informal gallery talk by Mr. Hathaway and Mr. Rouillard, new members of the Art department on "The Improbable Photographs" which are on display in the exhibition room of the library. A reception was held after the meeting.

Philakalia, a club for those interested in art, is seeking new members. In order to be eligible for membership, a girl must either be an art major or have completed six semester hours of art. Anyone interested in joining should see Kay Robertson or Linda Shell in South Cunningham.

Among the many interesting activities planned for the year are two art exhibits. One will be held during the Geist Festival and the other will be in the Spring. There will be interesting speakers and films throughout the year and there is the possibility of trips to Richmond and Washington.

Alpha Gamma Delta will have its annual bazaar on Thursday, October 19, in the new smoker. Items being sold will include green and white, red and white, and sorority favors. The bazaar will also include a bake sale. All proceeds from the bazaar will be sent to the Alpha Gamma Delta Alturist Fund, so be sure to visit the Alpha Gams tomorrow.

The Alpha Sigma Tau's have a new advisor this year. Mrs. H. R. Blackwell, wife of Dr. H. R. Blackwell of the English Department, began her duties as advisor on October 12, 1967. We are very pleased to have her with us.

ASTER Nancy Britton represented Longwood College and reigned as Harvest Bowl Queen on October 14 when Virginia Military Institute met the Citadel at Victory Stadium in Roanoke, Virginia. Nancy is a native of Roanoke and a senior Sociology major. We're all proud of our AST sister.

The weekend of October 20-21 will be a big weekend for the AST's. Janice Harris Overbey will come from Richmond for inspection of the Zeta Tau Chapter. Mrs. Overbey, a graduate of Longwood, is our alumnae representative to the national organization. We are looking forward to her visit with us this year.

Throughout this week the Delta Zeta's will be busy selling raffle tickets to raise money for the support of our orphan. Tickets are going fast; no wonder since the price is a meager 10¢ per chance. The prizes are terrific: $25 gift certificate at Baldwin's, $10 at Martin the Jeweler, $5 at the Collegiate Record Shop, $5 at Crute's, $2 at the Stag Room. If you'd like to spend a dime and help a deprived child plus possibly win a fabulous prize, rush on out to any DZ and buy your ticket.

Final word: Congratulations to the Zeta Tau Alpha's who celebrated their Founder's Day on October 15.

Delta Zeta's Honor New Faculty

The Epsilon Tau Chapter of Delta Zeta Sorority entertained the new faculty members at a tea on Tuesday afternoon, October 10, in the DZ chapter room. Thirty sisters present were honored to meet and talk with our acting President, Mr. Fred O. Wygal, and many of Longwood's new professors. In the absence of President Judy Reese, acting President Sandra Young welcomed the guests. We were very honored to have Mr. Wygal, Mr. and Mrs. Sandidge, Mr. Anthony Cristo, Mr. James Crowl, Dr. Virginia Bass, Miss Mary Foy, and Miss Frieda Myers.

Also, Mrs. Norman Myers, a DZ alumna; Miss Winnie Hiner; Mrs. Martha Rock; and Mrs. Jean Wilson, Delta Zeta's chapter advisor.

New York Pro Musica Brings Past Music Alive

In the second decade of its development, the New York Pro Musica continues its unique contribution to international music, providing its audiences with the glorious musical masterpieces of the age that produced the genius of Shakespeare, Leonardo da Vinci and Dante. One of America's most treasured concert attractions, the group will appear here on October 24 at 7:30 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium under the direction of John White.

Unique on the international musical scene, the New York Pro Musica, has grown into one of America's most important concert attractions. The vital performances of music of the centuries before Johann Sebastian Bach by its ten superb soloists have won legions of fans on both sides of the Atlantic and have won the ensemble acclaim in the Soviet Union and at the Berkshire Festival, Ravinia Festival, Vancouver Festival and the Festivals of Berlin, Spain, Holland, Israel, Spoleto, Dubrovnik and Rio de Janeiro.

Music of the centuries prior to J.S. Bach has acquired a new vitality in the years since this ensemble came into existence, and Pro Musica's repertoire is as wide and richly colored as the period that it depicts in music. A Pro Musica concert is an exciting excursion into the great musical past: sacred works that were performed in the cathedrals of Chartres and Notre Dame; lusty songs and dances of 15th century Germany; music from the courts of Spain and the Low Countries; madrigals of the Italian Renaissance. And in the churches of today, Pro Musica stages in full costume two thirteenth-century music dramas re-claimed for the modern world by Noah Greenberg. "The Play of Daniel" and "The Play of Herod" are the world's only reproductions of the first dramas of Western man.

The ten soloists of medieval voice and instrument have attained a height of artistry and authenticity which has won them legions of devotees. The Washington Post recently analyzed the success of this ensemble: "There are certain things you can count on in a Pro Musica concert which separate its work from many other ensembles specializing in older music. Certainly what they do is authentic; but more than that, it is alive. It is music. The voices are beautiful. The instruments are in perfect tune and are played with dazzling efficiency. And through the music surges a vitality born of intense commitment and understanding."

Tickets are available in the Business Office prior to the performance for seats remaining after tickets have been distributed to the student body. The charge for the tickets to the faculty and staff is $1.00 each.

Oak Ridge Mobile Radioisotope Laboratory Conducts Lecture-Lab Series On Campus

By KAREN CAMPBELL

Since October 23, the Longwood campus has been the site of the Mobile Radioisotope Laboratory from the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies; the unit will remain on our campus until Nov. 3. This new radioisotope laboratory, designed by the Oak Ridge Associated Universities, provides faculty members and advanced science majors at undergraduate institutions which do not have the specialized facilities and equipment needed to work with radioisotopes, the opportunity for training in the techniques and applications of radioisotopes. Built at a cost of $75,000, the unit has a counting room and heating system, its own water supply and waste retention tanks, and a storage locker for radioisotopes.

The Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies operates the mobile radioisotopes program on behalf of the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission. Its purpose is to introduce specialized instruction in radioisotope techniques and applications, for use in teaching and research. The two-week series of laboratory experiments and lectures covers basic counting techniques and applications of radioisotopes in biology, chemistry, and physics.

Following a general introduction to radiation, atomic structure, and nuclear processes, lectures are presented on the characteristics of beta radiation, scintillation detection of gamma radiation, radiation detection and instrument calibration, standardization of radioactive sources, carbon-14, radiotracer methodology, radiation and health physics, radiochemical separations, and the synthesis of labeled compounds.

Laboratory experiments are devoted to Geiger counters and scaling systems, absorption and range of beta particles, gamma-ray pulse spectra and scintillation counters, identifying an unknown radioisotope, absolute counting and half-life of potassium-40, standardization of iodine-131 with Geiger-Mueller counters, carbon-14 assay, and phosphorus distribution in rats.

The first mobile radioisotope laboratory was designed in Oak Ridge in 1959, and two such vehicles were presented to the International Atomic Energy Commission. One has been used to present radioisotope technique programs in Europe, Asia and Africa; the other is in use in Central and South America. Oak Ridge now has three mobile units in the United States which enable the Institute to extend the program to some 40 colleges around the country each year.

A ninety minute lecture is being given each evening in Stevens Hall, with two laboratory sessions being conducted daily. During the first week, Mr. Tom Stone conducted the lectures and laboratory sessions; Mr. Gary Schneider is conducting the lectures during the second week of the course, with Mr. Stone directing the laboratory periods. The lectures are open to all interested faculty and students; everyone is encouraged to attend.

Association, yearbook and newspaper judges, professional journalists and faculty members.

For staffs concerned with publication improvements the convention held short courses for beginning and advanced newspapers and yearbooks. Professor C. J. Medlin, Kansas State University, author of yearbook texts and winner of two major awards for All-American advisors, handled the yearbook course. Prof. Bill Ward, University of Nevada, and noted author of newspaper trends conducted news courses on quality improvements for a more informed audience. Prof. James Thompson, University of Detroit, conducted courses for magazines.

Local Educators Attend Meeting

Dr. Floyd Sweetfeiger and Mr. E. Lee Land, members of the Education Department, and Dr. John P. Wynne attended the annual meeting of the South Atlantic Philosophy of Education Society at the University of South Carolina in Columbia on October 22-23.

Dr. Wynne, who was Chairman of the Education Department at Longwood for over twenty-five years, and who now lives in town spoke on "Philosophy in the General and Professional Education of Teachers."

In addition to his teaching career, Dr. Wynne has also written many books. His latest one is "Theories of Education."

DR. ROBERT J. HAVIGHURST

Educator Havighurst Lectures On Campus

Robert J. Havighurst, noted for his theory of developmental tasks, will be on the Longwood campus Wednesday, November 8, to lecture on "Social Change and Education."

Dr. Havighurst is professor of Education and Human Development at the University of Chicago, and Professor of Education and Director of the Center for the Study of Metropolitan Problems in Education at the University of Missouri.

He has served as Director for General Education of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, and as co-Director of the Center for Educational Research for the Brazil Government.

Among his professional activities, Dr. Havighurst is a member of the Society for Research in Child Development, the American Educational Research Association, and the National Society for Study of Education.

Professor Havighurst has written many books, among them, "Developmental Tasks and Education," "Human Development and Education," "American Higher Education in the 1960's," and "The Educational Mission of the Church." He is one of the co-authors of "The Psychology of Moral Character" and "Educating Gifted Children."

Dr. Havighurst is appearing at Longwood under the auspices of the Visiting Scholars Program of the University Center in Virginia, Inc.

Exhibit Emphasizes Current Art Scene

An exhibition of original woodcuts, etchings, lithographs, and serigraphs by major contemporary American artists, entitled "American Avant-Garde," opened October 10 on second floor, Grainger Building, Longwood College, and will be on display until November 10.

The exhibition seeks to emphasize the vitality and diversity of the current graphic scene, from new excellence in traditional approaches to the trend of "Pop" art.

While visitors to the exhibition are under no obligation to purchase any of the works to be shown, all the items will be for sale at prices ranging generally from $10 to $100. Purchases may be made from Mrs. Lemen. The exhibition has been arranged with the cooperation of the Ferdinand Roten Galleries of Baltimore, dealers well known in the field of graphic arts.

Original prints are impressions on fine paper taken from plates, woodblocks, or lithograph stones prepared by the artist and handprinted by him or under his supervision. No photo-mechanical process is employed, as in reproductions of paintings. Original prints are usually limited in number and often the modern print is signed by the artist.

Four Longwood Editors Travel To Chicago Hilton

Students of the "new revolution" on college campuses and students clamoring for more sophisticated knowledge of community and campus news and editors and staff members of college newspapers, yearbooks and literary magazines gathered at the Conrad Hilton Hotel in Chicago, October 19-21 for the annual convention of the Associated Collegiate Press.

Longwood was represented at the convention by Phyllis Myers, Editor-In-Chief of "The Gyre"; Phyllis Hummer and Gwyn Muse, Editor-In-Chief and Managing Editor of "The Rotunda"; and Joan Walter, Editor-In-Chief of "The Virginian."

The conference was organized on a two-track schedule so that beginning and more experienced publication staffs could find answers to individual problems. In addition to publication improvement, workshops and campus problems sessions, ACP held a high powered session on "Free Press and Fair Trial," with a panel comprised of some of the nation's leading authorities on this controversial press and social problem.

A general convocation on October 19 featured a luncheon and several outstanding speakers from the journalism field. Special topic sessions were conducted on Friday and Saturday, including sessions on typography, makeup, news coverage and photography for both newspapers and yearbooks. A dance on Friday evening highlighted the social side of the conference.

The convention also included leading speakers from the Associated Collegiate Press, National Student Press

"Virginian" Takes On New Look; Much Improvement Noted

Joan Walter, editor of the 1968 Virginian recently attended the Associated Collegiate Press Convention in Chicago and brought back many new ideas for the yearbook. This year's Virginian will have twice as many color pictures and more candid shots. The entire layout will be different with each section carrying out the theme. Special features of the improved yearbook will be an entirely different cover and a surprise ending.

Anyone who would like to submit candid photos for the yearbook is urged to take them to 125 Cunningham by November 18. The pictures can be of artists or of technical subjects, but must be of Longwood students.

This year's Virginian will also be improved through the cooperation of a larger staff and Dr. Lockwood's photography class. Freshmen are urged to help just as soon as mid-semester estimates are received. All freshmen desiring work on the staff please see Joan Walter.

Carol Anthony has been chosen Business Manager and Department Editors are: Lanny Paul and Sharon Brown, Organization; Lou Davis and Patsy Stryker, Athletics; Pam McGeehe and Nancy Hodnett, Greeks; Judy Morris and Becky Easter, Faculty and Administration; Ellen Hodnett and Lynn Meadows, Index. Advisors for the Virginian are Miss Bedford and Mr. Gresham. Each class also has a section editor.

Yearbook sales began October 30 and will continue until November 18. The price will be $5.00 a copy.

Chil acknowledges all those who were involved in the Geist Festival as the spirit of Longwood was exemplified.

Making Every Vote Count

Today we find ourselves in the midst of elections for major offices of several campus organizations. The posters will barely be ripped from the smoker walls before minor elections begin. And so it continues. To many students it seems — and rightly so — that the greatest part of the time spent in an extracurricular activity is spent in voting for officers, for constitutional changes, even in voting on the time and place of the next meeting. After a while, the idea becomes worn thin, and the entire voting process seems nothing more than a grand waste of time.

This is a dangerous attitude. We should not consider our privilege of voting a bore and thus treat it lightly. The vote given to each student in an election is an important one. It is the opportunity for a student to make her own selection and to do her part to see that the candidate of her choice is elected. Ho-hum, you say. I've heard all this before. Yes, this has been said many times, and in much the same way as you see it printed here.

The democratic idea of one vote for one person is not a new one for any of us. Unfortunately it has become almost a cliché. But don't treat this right as an antiquarian, out-dated privilege, much too unimportant to exercise or even consider. One of the truest clichés of all is "every vote counts."

— G. A. M.

All of the people of Prince Edward County, and especially those connected with law enforcement, feel a close relationship with the students at Longwood College. In order that law enforcement can be effective in its purpose to protect the lives, liberty and property of its citizens, it is essential that complete cooperation exist between the citizens and law enforcement officials.

In order for persons to be protected, especially Longwood girls, certain specific suggestions would be made.

1. That shades and curtains be drawn to prevent peeping toms.
2. That girls should travel in pairs at night and should avoid unlighted areas.
3. Know your date and if there is any question about him to double date.
4. Avoid uninhabited areas and unknown areas in dating.
5. Always report violations of the law or eminent violations of the law.

The above rules are general in nature and apply to all persons, especially women, at all times.

The Office of the Commonwealth's Attorney, Sheriff's Office and the Police Department of this County are most desirous of helping in any way which they can in carrying out the purposes of law enforcement.

William F. Watkins, Jr.
Commonwealth's Attorney

Blind Date Candidates

Due to several recent unfortunate experiences involving Longwood students, the Commonwealth's Attorney wished to remind young ladies that the law wants to protect them from violence and petty acts of indecency, but that the cooperation of students is needed. It is an ironic commentary upon civilization that Longwood students should live in a society in which it is almost safe for them to walk the streets alone at night, for throughout most of the world the hours of darkness force all decent citizens to live behind bars and bolts. This is what makes it so unfortunate that the failure to take a few simple precautions, such as those mentioned in the letter above, has brought private grief to young ladies, and has made law enforcement and the protection of law as a preventative force so difficult to maintain.

Let's get down to brass tacks. Going out on blind dates is one of the main sources of trouble. The difficulty with blind dates is that the young woman usually comes away from them either battered or bored. Not much fun either way. The problem is that what the young woman considers a blind-date, a kind of long-shot chance of meeting, if not Prince Charming, at least someone agreeable, or amusing, the young man often considers as a pick-up. He figures that she must be pretty desperate or she wouldn't be going out. If he is a newcomer to the dating game, he will probably take her to a frat party and proceed to hide his uneasiness or strangeness by imbibing plentiful quantities of liquid courage, with the result that the young lady will either have to walk home, carry her date home, or fight her way home. If he is a professional campus blind-date, she will either find him skillfully drenching her with that same liquid disaster, or whisking her away at jet-speed to some deserted spot that would make outer Siberia seem overpopulated . . . or both.

In the written form, it may sound amusing; but add to that "normal" blind date just a dash of violence or of emotional disturbance and the story becomes something ugly, vicious and unprintable. Why take that chance? Instead of going on a blind date, why not get to see and know your potential date by daylight on campus. See how amusing he is in the coffee shop and how interesting he is with his girliness gingealer. And if you really believe that to refuse a blind-date for a particular night or event is going to make your life miserable, at least make sure that you double-date with some couple that plays by the same rules that you believe in, so as not to wind up three against one.

It may sound corny, but it can save considerable grief.

The Grass On The Other Side . . . What's Happening On The Campuses

The East Carolina co-eds have circulated a petition on campus requesting an easing up on Dress Code Rules. When last informed, the petition had been signed by 1500 women students out of 4,000. The students are requesting the right to leave the responsibility up to the student concerning when it is proper to wear slacks, jeans, or bermudas on or off campus and to use their own discretion in deciding when and where, excluding classrooms, such attire is appropriate and in good taste.

On Oct. 25, 1967, the Sweet Briar Student Government meeting had a debate, the topic being the pros and cons of having beer on campus. Each side was debated by two students and one faculty member. Going along with this theme, a poll was also taken on the campus concerning the question of serving beer at a combo party of their Fall Dance Weekend. (Last May Day they served champagne punch.) The outcome was: 367 "yes" (freshmen voted "yes") to 21 "no". Freshmen voted 189 "yes" to 23 "no".

Colleagues Present LC Handbook, Valuable Visa Cards

How many times have you wondered where a particular girl lives or what the phone number on a certain hall is? Well, if your answer is greater than zero then your problems are over! The Colleagues are happy to announce that they will again be selling copies of "Where The Girls Are." This handbook to Longwood College students should be a must on every girl's list so everyone support the Colleagues and buy your own copy soon.

The Colleagues are also happy to announce that they will be selling the Visa cards this year. Students who purchased these valuable cards last year were amazed at the great savings they benefited from. So if you need to save money (and who doesn't) be sure to become a member of Visa.

Scott, Miss Lindsey Peters, Bob Muck, and Tom Adams (alternate). The students spend an hour three days a week drilling in preparation for their T.V. appearance. The team is coached by Dr. Willie M. Reams, associate professor of biology.

Mary Washington conducted an enlightening poll. The poll indicated that 5.6 per cent of MWC students have admitted to smoking marijuana. Four girls said they had smoked "pot" on the MWC campus, thirteen at UVA, and 37 outside the state. Only 20 of the smokers said they would not smoke it again.

Mark Auman, Student Government President at R.P.I., labeled the weekly Prospect, the student newspaper, as a "weekly scandal sheet" in an address before the joint session of the student congress. Auman stated that the Prospect was a "workshop" that promotes its "own concepts of student government". He also warned that John Edwards, the Prospect editor, was "attempting to create a student Bible . . . one big super conscience for us all!"

Academic Affairs Committee Urges Student Participation

The Academic Affairs Committee of the Legislative Board has recently received two complaints from members of the student body. One complaint concerned professors keeping their classes overtime, causing students to be late to their next classes. The other was concerned with an unannounced change in course content which was found unfavorable by the students.

These students did not know how to go about remedying the situation. If you should find yourself in a similar predicament, the Academic Affairs Committee would suggest you take the following steps:

1. Present your complaint directly to your professor with suggestions for remedying the situation, if possible. If you are not satisfied with what has been done by your professor and you feel that further action need be taken, then
2. Approach the Head of the Department with your complaint. If you still feel dissatisfied with the results, then
3. Discuss your problem with the Academic Dean, Dr. Richard Brooks. It is hoped that by this time you will have received satisfactory results.

The Academic Affairs Committee urges the students of Longwood to take an active interest in their academic

Wesley Foundation Sponsors Singers, "The Cactus Inn"

Wesley Foundation is privileged again this year to sponsor Rev. and Mrs. Maynard Powell, well-known folk singers from Blackstone, Mr. Powell is minister of the Christian Church there. They will be at the Student Center Sunday, November 5, at 6:30 p.m. The student body is invited for an evening of fun and relaxation with the Powells. You won't want to miss this.

On Friday evening, November 3, the Wesley Foundation Student Center will be transformed into The Cactus Inn, a coffeehouse for all students on campus. Entertainment will be furnished by talent from Longwood and Hampden-Sydney. Drinks and other refreshments will be served for a small charge. We hope to see you there.

The new Student Center has been in use now just about a year. Last year we held our first Open House the week end of Geist Festival. It has meant so much to the enrichment of Wesley's program and has been used by so many students, including those not directly involved in Wesley Foundation. The student body's support is greatly appreciated.

Their first skateboard tournament. This sport seems to be growing in popularity around the state. It has been an intramural sport at Old Dominion and V.P.I. for the last 3 years.

V.P.I. now has closed circuit T.V. in the Tech coliseum. This medium is used to broadcast Tech's away games back home to Blacksburg for all interested students, faculty, and friends. The games are relayed on a 10 foot by 14 foot four-sided screen in the main arena of the coliseum. Tech's network provides the audio portion of the game through a direct tie-in to the game. The first such game was the Tech-Kentucky game.

The curfew rules in the upperclassmen dorms for women over 21 at UVA have been relaxed. As of September 28, Mary Munford Hall has had no curfew. A student must sign out before 11:30 p.m. on a designated card and include her expected time of return. However, no disciplinary action is taken if the girl does not sign back in at the designated time. But she must sign in by noon of the following day. Failure to sign in by noon results in an 11:30 curfew for seven consecutive nights.

Academic Affairs Committee Urges Student Participation

The purpose of the Committee is to promote cooperation among the student body, the faculty, and the administration in order to foster the academic atmosphere of Longwood College. It is hoped that students will use the Affairs Committee as a sounding board for their academic problems and suggestions. The Legislative Board Suggestion Box in the new smoker may be used for this purpose.

'Film Ohne Titel' Begins Series Of German Films

"Film Ohne Titel", or "The Film Without a Title", launched a new project Sunday to stimulate interest in German. Working through the Audio-Visual Department, Mr. Ben Sandage has obtained from the German Embassy a series of German feature films. They will be shown on campus, free of charge, throughout the school year.

The challenging aspect is that only one of the movies scheduled has subtitles. However, since they were all filmed in Germany, the student can learn something about the country itself, its culture, and the pronunciation of the language. There will be six more films shown.

Twenty-Eight Named To 'Who's Who'

By GWYN MUSE

Twenty-eight students have been named to represent Longwood in "Who's Who In American Colleges and Universities." They were announced by Dr. Richard Brooks, Dean of the College, in a campus-wide assembly October 15, 1967.

The purpose of Who's Who is to recognize those students who have given outstanding service to their college or university. Members are selected on the basis of scholarship, leadership, citizenship, and cooperation in educational and extracurricular activities, and the promise of future worth. The collegiate "Who's Who" organization has been honoring students for more than 24 years by the annual publication of its book which gives public recognition to the achievements of outstanding college seniors. The organization maintains a student placement service that provides employment contacts both for graduating seniors and prospective employers.

Three nominating committees at Longwood determine who will be selected. The senior members of Geist nominate the number of students less one that Longwood is entitled to elect to "Who's Who." A second committee, composed of the advisor to the Student Government, the advisor to the YWCA, the head of the Athletic Association, the advisor to Geist, the senior class sponsor, and the departmental chairmen, nominates from the membership of the senior class a number equal to the quota assigned to Longwood College. A third committee, composed of the President of the College, the Dean of the College, the Dean of Women, and the Registrar, elects the students from the nominees submitted by the two nominating committees.

Geist Festival 1967:

Something Old, Something New

Geist Festival, 1967 style, offered many new and different attractions for Longwood students, parents, and friends. The Army Band concert in Jarman was a big success and Geist is hoping to make this event one of the highlights of future Festivals. The Midway, too, attracted more participation this year, as more organizations offered many yummy goodies and exciting entertainment. Jarman Auditorium held a full-house Saturday night for the final production of the skits and Donna Brantley and Cherie Weeks, attired in silver and blue cocktail dresses respectively, were especially charming. In addition to the normal acknowledgments Saturday night, a special introduction was made of the class skit chairmen. The clowns and usherettes, too, participated more this year by appearing more frequently during the various events of the Festival. As the pictures indicate, everyone had an enjoyable weekend and Geist is proud to proclaim that the Festival was a big success.

Hockey Team Outscores Madison Club, Longwood Closes Season Undefeated

By ARLENE CUNDIFF

Saturday morning, October 21, dawned very early for the Longwood Hockey teams. Leaving Farmville at 8:30 a.m., they were quite eager for the bus trip to Madison College for their day of reckoning. This game was the last one of the regularly scheduled season and everyone wanted it to end on a good note — an undefeated season.

The first half of the first game included lots of action. The LC girls had a little trouble staying on their feet, but that didn't prevent them from scoring two goals in the first half. Anna Pettis scored her first goal of the season on a flick, and Barbara Matthews pushed in the second goal to make the score 2-0. Madison's offense sprang to life and put the ball in the cage, but it was called back because of a technical foul. They did not give up after one attempt, but made many fast drives up the field toward the Longwood goal. Here the L.C. defense really showed its ability in clearing the ball back to the offense. Jean Hendricks and Tommi Stone executed their tackles just at the right moments, and center halfback, Carol Blythe, kept the play evenly distributed on both sides of the field. Fullbacks Cathy Hass and Lynn Rachal continually sent long drives up the field to the offense, and goalie, Holly Forman, was on constant alert to keep the ball away from the goal line. The final score was 2-0 in Longwood's favor.

The second game was a little different. The ball traveled up and down the field between the two teams many times before Jane Tibbs scored for L.C. The Madison team made many drives within the striking circle, and Longwood's girls were hard pressed to keep the ball from going into the cage. There were a few heart-rending moments for the spectators and players alike in the last few seconds of the last half of the game when Madison made determined drives within the circle, but the L.C. defense held on. Jane Curie played a great defensive game and she always pulled through for LC whenever Madison got into the striking circle. Final score: LC 1 - Madison 0.

Congratulations are in order for both of these fine teams. Both had an undefeated season in college play which is something quite unheard of for hockey teams. Many thanks to Mrs.

Frosh Defeat Juniors, 3-0; Sophomores Victorious, 2-0

By SIBIL PROUSE

On October 23, the Green & White Freshmen scored three goals to defeat the Juniors 3-0, in the opening game of the class hockey tournament.

The Frosh maintained possession of the ball throughout most of the game while the Juniors fought to defend their goal. Backed up by an assisting forward line and a strong defense, Janet Harpold and Judy Guidice scored the first two goals of the game in the opening half.

In the last half the Freshmen sought to increase their lead and earned another goal. Left inner, Laurel Baldwin, pushed the ball into the goal after receiving a beautiful drive by right wing Nedra Distel.

Bobbitt, coach, for her untiring efforts in producing such teams. Longwood College is very proud of both teams and their coach and managers.

On October 23, the Sophomore class defeated the seniors by a score of 2 to 0.

Forward line play by the seniors was forced to the left side of the field since they were playing without a left wing. Seniors were on defense for the major part of the game. The sophomores had control of the ball during most of the game. Their defense was so strong that the seniors never really made a shot at the goal. Late in the first half Sue Johnson pushed the ball in for the sophomores' first goal. In the second half Linda Cooper pushed the ball in for the second sophomore goal.

On Tuesday, October 31, the sophomores played the freshmen, while the seniors met the juniors.

Alumnae, Richmond Club Bow To Varsity Team

By LESLIE SEDGEWICK

Along with the rest of Geist Festival Weekend, the varsity hockey team put on a display to please the huge crowd who came out to watch them play the Richmond Club and the Alumnae.

Previous to playing Longwood, the Richmond Club was undefeated and had not had one goal scored against them. This record was to meet the true test as L.C. took to the field with their usual determination to play a good game and come out on top.

The game was slow starting but L.C.'s halfbacks and fullbacks sparked the drives to the opposite goal. Lynne Rachel, Jean Hendricks, Tommi Stone, Kathy Haas, and Carol Blythe showed the way to the forward line as they repeatedly entered the striking circle and drove at the goal. Longwood's forward line definitely did not want this good teamwork to go to waste, as Barbara Matthews, Anna Pettis, and Becky Bondurant scored single shots past the Club's goalkeeper. The final score was 3-0 as Longwood finished with a 5-0-1 season.

The second game was surprisingly similar to a regular season game, as many of the alumnae were still in shape, almost to the woe of Longwood. At the half, the score was LC-2 and Alumnae-1. In the past, the Alumnae usually chose to have a time out during the game to give themselves an extra push, but this year was different. The Alumnae pushed and pushed, scoring a second time making LC work all the harder. However, Jane Tibbs put one over a second goal for her, to make the final score 3-2.

Young Democrats Invite

Attention, all students. Would you be interested in talking with a state government official and asking the "why, then and how" of Virginia politics, actions and statements? If so you will have this opportunity on November 9 when Lieutenant Governor Fred G. Pollard visits the Longwood campus. Sponsored by the Young Democrats Club, Mr. Pollard will hold an informal discussion during his visit at 7:30 p.m. in the Lankford Activities Building at which time he will answer questions posed by Longwood College's women. ## Sirc Spectates

Congratulations to the newly chosen sponsor of the Freshman Class, Miss Anne Huffman, who is an instructor in the Physical Education Department. Miss Huffman will also be coaching the first Varsity Lacrosse team Longwood has ever had in the spring of this year. By the way, would you believe that a Lacrosse "meeting" was held last Tuesday at 12:30?

Intramural Swimming will begin on Nov. 13. Enthusiasm and interest are the only requirements, with competitive fun being the result. Start practicing now at Rec Swims.

Best Wishes to the Varsity Hockey team in the tournament this weekend. Congratulations on both wins over Madison College. Saturday, Oct. 28, Longwood I defeated Richmond Club by a score of 3-0. The Alumnae put up a great fight with Longwood II, but lost 3-2. It's a little tiring after a year, or two, or three, etc. Nevertheless they gave the current team a real run for their money.

Dr. O'Neil and Dr. Heinz of the Physical Education Department combined their efforts and strategy to defeat Freshmen Laurel Baldwin and Jane McCaffrey (winners of the Tennis Doubles Tournament) in one set of tennis. The winners are to receive a free dinner paid for by the losers. Well, would you believe a hamburger maybe??

Participation in intramural hockey was excellent this year. All those who came out really gave an all out effort. It's a shame that everyone can't make the class teams. Color games will be starting soon, so come and cheer your color on to victory!

Margaret Harrison, a L.C. Freshman, placed third in The Virginia Amateur Invitational Golf Tournament and also took third place at the Ninth Virginia Collegiate Invitational Golf Tournament in Staunton. The winner of the Collegiate Tournament was from Hollins College and she shot an 81. Second place went to a young lady from Salem College in North Carolina. Also participating from L.C. in this tournament were Linda Walsh and Brenda White.

Congratulations to the Varsity Swim Team on their win over Mary Baldwin College last week. It's exciting to have Home meets for the first time in L.C.'s history. The next one is scheduled for Nov. 21 with Westhampton being the visiting college. Support our girls with your attendance and cheering!

Tidewater Tourney: Exhibition Game Highlights Events

Longwood College will be the hostess for the College Hockey Tournament of the Tidewater Field Association on Saturday, Nov. 4.

Participating schools include Westhampton, RPI, William and Mary, Mary Washington, and Longwood.

Games will begin at 9:45 a.m. on both hockey fields. A lunch break will be taken from 11:45 to 12:30. Lunch for the visiting teams, the Longwood team and the guests will be served in the Senior Dining Hall.

Games will resume at 12:45. Longwood will play Mary Washington at 10 a.m. on Iler Field and William and Mary at 11:05 on Barlow Field. At 1:30 Longwood will play the Eteteras team which is composed of players from each of the visiting teams. A test will be held from 2 to 3 and at 3 the All College First Team and the All College Reserve Team will be announced. These two teams will put on an exhibition game at 3:15 to conclude the day's events.

Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt, Varsity Hockey coach, is coordinating the tournament. Peggy Shults and Maywood Martin, student co-chairmen, have received help from A.A. committees and other interested students.

Come out to see Hockey at its best!

Other participants in the tournament were Linda Walsh and Dr. Brooks who defeated Judy Nevitt and C. DeWitt, L. Jackson and Becky Bondurant defeated M. Bittinger and S. Bush; and S. O'Neil and D. Jackson defeated J. Helms and Brenda White.

The tournament was created to help stimulate student-faculty relations. It is hoped that in the future, more events of this type will take place. All participants thoroughly enjoyed the matches. Congratulations to the winners!

The Social Standards Committee of House Association will sponsor a bridge tournament Friday, November 3, in Lankford Activities Building. Prizes will be given, refreshments will be served, and everyone who signs up to play is guaranteed a night of friendly competition and enjoyment. All girls interested in bridge are urged to sign up on the poster in the new smoker. Come on out and play!

Lt. Governor Pollard Holds Informal Session

As in the game of "Pin the Tail on the Donkey," are you blundering in your attempt to pinpoint your knowledge of Virginia's government and politics? If so, you need a heart to heart talk with an eminent politician about the political activities of your state. Sheltered within the walls of Longwood, studying to get ahead, escaping into a secure job and comfortable position in life, Longwood ladies are often alien - from the real world. In the year 1967 this sense of security has been challenged by many protest groups. Our generation has demonstrated a sense of outrage and urgency in its approach to political problems.

On Thursday, November 9, at 7:30 in the Lankford Activities Building, Longwood students will have the opportunity to discuss any political issue with one of Virginia's prominent state officials. The Lieutenant Governor of Virginia, the Honorable Fred G. Pollard, will hold an informal discussion which is being sponsored by the Young Democrats Club. This will be an excellent opportunity for all students to learn the basic facts of the why, when, and how of politics.

A native of Richmond, Mr. Pollard received his B.A. and LL.B. Degrees from the University of Virginia. Entering his profession as a practicing attorney in 1946, Mr. Pollard is a partner of Williams, Mullen and Christian, of Richmond, Virginia.

In addition to serving as a past member of the Virginia House of Delegates, 1950-1956, Mr. Pollard has held many other public offices. He has served on the Commission on Public Education, 1959, and as Vice Chairman, VALC Subcommittee on Uniform Commercial Code, 1963. Mr. Pollard is at the present time a member of the Executive Committee, Board of Trustees, Jamestown Foundation; chairman of the Virginia Emergency Resources Planning Committee; and a member of the Board of Trustees, Virginia Museum of Fine Arts (Ex-Officio). In addition to these duties, Mr. Pollard is a director of Richmond Memorial Hospital, New England Nuclear Corporation, and Inta-Roto Machine Company, Inc.

Plan now to attend this informal discussion and to learn the political role college women may play within their college and community. The Young Democrats are also sponsoring a reception with punch and cake immediately following the group discussion. According to the President of the Young Democrats Club, Mary Masse, "all students are invited to attend the reception and to personally meet Virginia's Lieutenant Governor."

New Voting Machine Brings Greater Election Response

By KAREN MAHER
In the major elections for student government offices held on November 1, 1967, the Longwood students used their newly-acquired automatic voting machine for the first time.

Marilyn Greene, a member of the major-minor elections committee, wrote to the Automatic Voting Machine Division Company in Jamestown, New York to ask about the possibility of Longwood's borrowing or renting a demonstrator machine to use in its upcoming elections. Marilyn explained that the machine would help bolster the school spirit of the girls and encourage them to come out and vote. She went on to explain that Longwood had so many girls of voting age or girls who would be voting in the next national election, and the machine would provide good experience for these girls. Marilyn received a telephone call from a representative of Automatic Voting Machine Division to say that a machine was being sent to Longwood. A letter from Mr. Keith Spaulding followed this call. Mr. Spaulding wrote to say that the company was donating one automatic voting machine to Longwood if we paid the transportation charges to have the machine shipped to us. The shipping charge was approximately twenty-five dollars. The estimated fair market value of the 700 pound voting machine is four hundred dollars.

In the general elections, 52% of the student body voted on the new machine. Of the Seniors, 61% voted; Juniors, 62%; Sophomores, 59%; and Freshmen, 39%. Voting headquarters from now on will be in the Lankford Building.

Marilyn Greene, who was instrumental in securing the voting machine, explains its use to a prospective voter.

English Delegates Attend Conferences

The South Atlantic Modern Language Association will meet at the University of Georgia in Atlanta on November 9, 10, and 11. Miss Mary Seidel, Miss Gayle Okawa, Miss Jo Ann Fritzsche, and Dr. Rosemary Sprague will attend the conference from Longwood.

At the conference delegates will hear papers on various periods in literature and on language. After the papers are read there will be time for discussion of the ideas presented.

The South Atlantic Modern Languages Association is a regional division of the Modern Language Association which meets in Chicago in January.

Before flying to Atlanta, Dr. Sprague will introduce Madame Claire Chennault to the Richmond Women's Forum which will be held at the John Marshall Hotel in Richmond tomorrow. Madame Chennault was married to General Chennault, a hero of the Flying Tigers of World War II.

At another conference, the College English Association, in Rocky Mountain, North Carolina, on October 28, Dr. Charlotte Hooker was elected to serve on the Advisory Board of the Liaison Committee of North Carolina and Virginia. At this same conference, Mr. Charles Butler, librarian at Longwood, spoke on "The Responsibilities of the English Department of the Undergraduate Library."

Seniors: The Federal Series Entrance Examination will be given on campus November 18, Saturday, at 8:30 a.m., Room 6, Granger Building. Applications for this special at-campus examination have been submitted before-hand.

In eager anticipation of the visit of Virginia's Lieutenant Governor, Young Democrats Mary Masse and Anne Adams publicize the event with posters and pictures of the Democratic symbol, the donkey.

Prevent Repeat Performance; Take Advantage Of Flu Shots

Health authorities predict that the Asian flu will strike the eastern part of the United States this fall and winter, 1967-1968. In 1964, such an epidemic struck Longwood, placing a great number of students in the infirmary. Last year an epidemic of a similar nature hit the campus at exam time. No one will forget the misery of those few days if they had any connection with the school at all, as student, faculty member, night watchman, house mother, doctor, or nurse. The night watchmen were summoned to the dorms in the wee hours of the night to pick up sick coeds. The infirmary was filled to capacity, and the overflow was put up in Tabb Rec and the old gym. There was room after row of sick girls, so many that each was assigned a number. There was an assembly line for injections. Misery may love company, but mass confusion, and uncomfortable conditions did not contribute anything to the gloomy atmosphere. The medical staff did the best possible under such circumstances, but there is no way possible to alleviate such conditions in the event of a mass epidemic. Anyone who was in the infirmary at the time will admit that it was a "truly unique experience," but one they would not care to repeat.

Don't be a victim of another epidemic. Take advantage of the flu shots given on campus. It will be less misery to get the two shots now than to spend later days in the infirmary.

Hippiness Is Happiness? Feasibility Questioned

Is flower-power overcoming the frustrations of our modern society? Is a hippie really happy?

There has been much publicity bestowed upon the flower children who are blossoming all over the country. In San Francisco they munch on morning-glory seeds and circulate their underground newspaper; people from Boston refuse to picnic with them on the Common; and people in Washington end up marching around them.

It seems that the hippie has replaced the beatnik as society's number one dropout.

People who are content to live a normal life begin to wonder — is there something seriously wrong with our society when so many young people are seeking to withdraw from it?

For every long-haired hippie with rings on his fingers and bells on his toes there is a multitude of young people who do not want to withdraw from our society.

While the hippie set is rebelling against society, taking drugs to turn themselves on, and wandering aimlessly through city parks, the "common group" is trying to get the most out of life, whether it be going to college or earning living.

The "non-rebels" are not interested in fleeing from this world into a psychedelic existence. These are ambitious young people who know where they are headed and what they want out of life.

Our society is not a perfect one, but very few have approached the classical Utopia. But is this just cause for young people to rebel, revolt, and join the hippie movement?

The hippies get all the attention today because the exotic is much more intriguing than the ordinary. Hippiness is at death's door — being ordinary is still more desirable.

In Rehearsal

By LINDA LONG

The cyc hung half way, exposing the dirty brick of the back wall. There was no audience, no scenery, no set. There was only the world of rehearsal: a mute stage dwarfing informal actors. No one heeded the clutter pushed to the fringes of this strange world: the folds of paper and the fragments of construction which the very bones of past performances. I watched the actors. They relaxed, seemed almost to lounge, while the director, a sort of demigod in rolled shirt sleeves, moved them in a living game of chess.

"There's going to be a drum roll ... take the cue and cross behind him. Right! Now ... on your next line, 'Well-come, noble friend ...' cross two steps up left ... more ... one step more. Fine. Right there. The soldier enters ... good ... and he faces center. No, try one quarter right. Good. O.K. Now read the line so I can hear it, please."

The monologue is hypothetical, but the lingo is very real. The actor will read his line, as he must always read a part before he can act it. Yet every moment, regardless of his progress, he will be anticipating the time when the world of rehearsal has given way to the world of performance — when you have come to take your seat and await the magic which follows: "Curtain time, everyone!"

Ya Meen We May Not Be Able To Keep Our Horses On Campus?

Musings

By GWYN MUSE

The student-owned automobile, that long-time burr under every administrative saddle, is suddenly making smooth riding all but impossible. Across the nation, colleges and universities are becoming increasingly aware of the problem of student drivers and the even more pressing problem of student-owned cars. The number of automobiles increases every year; the number of parking spaces remains the same, and herein lies the problem.

With the increased interest and discussion, the topic of the student-owned car has moved from the administrative coffee klatch to the editorial page of newspapers across the United States. Often the editorials are rather heated. Virginius Dabney, of the "Richmond Times - Dispatch," recently commented on the "student car menace": "It would do the youngsters good to use their own feet, [so] why doesn't some college or university president start a nationwide movement for the limitation of student automobiles?" An irate East Lansing, Michigan (home of Michigan State University) editor said: "... the student car is the educational hang-up of the sixties."

"Parking space — and not the automobile itself — is the 'hang-up of the sixties.'" Our neighbor to the south, the University of North Carolina, is currently the object of many outcries because of one "distressing" fact: current estimates of the number of student automobiles at UNC place the figure at 12,000, or roughly 90% of the entire student body owns cars. There are parking spaces for 4,500.

Probably few college administrators care whether students have cars, but thousands lose sleep trying to decide where students will park them. Many campuses are erecting multi-level garages — with the price tag of multi-millions. UNC alone plans to spend up to $10 million in the next decade for such structures. As such plans are announced, the cries of horror follow, as from the Greensboro "Daily News": "The answer to the parking problem is not to turn one of the nation's most attractive campuses into a macadam slab; it is to cut down on the number of cars on campus, and the obvious place to start is by reducing the number of automobiles."

Back where we started, the problem is the same, but with the addition of a new complaint: the intrusion of the "ugly" parking lot into the "beautiful" campus. No one, of course, wants to destroy the appearance of a campus, but there is a question as to whether this destruction will really occur. The "Daily News" editor may be rather short-sighted, if not short-winded. When a university is willing to spend $10 million for a parking garage, chances are, it's not going to be a simple steel and cinderblock structure. Better not to cry about the "macadam slab" before you see it, or at least until the plans are made public.

There are numerous "minor" complaints. In some areas, the residents of college and university towns, objecting to congested traffic and the absence of parking space, decry the presence of student cars. Some see the problem as no problem at all; others view the situation as "just one of those things." A minority (but, unfortunately for the student, a growing one) advocate the complete abolition of student automobiles. Richmond's Dabney-on-the-spot had this thought: If students had no cars, then they "would" not be gallivanting around the country, as they are doing now, often neglecting their studies, and smashing themselves up in auto crashes.

Though Longwood cannot boast of 12,000 student cars, she can justifiably raise an eyebrow at the 40-odd which are now here. Next week, as student teachers return, there will be even more cars on campus. We will face the same problem: parking space. Tentative plans for parking lots may produce the needed space, but not this year, and probably not next year. No one wants to see the Mall "macadamized" but some provision has to be made — and soon.

College students own cars. Whether educators — and editors — view this as one of those cold, hard facts of life, or simply as a sign of the times, they would do well to try to find a solution to the parking problem, rather than harboring the dream that the day will come when all college students return to "hoofing" it. Dabney will have to be promoted to the head of the class for this observation. If an effort were launched to limit cars, "it would doubtless evoke such a colossal ululation from undergraduate throats that Hurricane Beulah would be a gently zephyr by comparison."

How true.

"Flower Children" Invade The Press: Hippie Controversy

By KAREN MAHER

What are hippies? Latest the press has been overflowing with articles on the hippies, the "flower children." The hippies are criticized, applauded, and ignored. What is there about this group that causes so much controversy? First of all, the hippies are a rebellion, a revolt against society as they see it. They are rebelling against the conforming middle class, the pressures of society, and the frustrations that face them in the future. Conformity says you must have a hair cut, so the hippies let their hair down, grow a beard, and wear beads and bells. Society rejects the Indian and the Negro, so the flower children form a tribe, imitate some of the ways of the Indian, and embrace the Negro. The hippies turn from alcohol as an established custom of society. They use LSD (acid) and marijuana (grass) to turn themselves on.

The home of the hippies is the Haight-Ashbury district in San Francisco near the Golden Gate Bridge. It is a tenement district. The hippies crowd the streets selling their underground newspapers. The shops cater to the tourists, selling such items as psychedelic posters and buttons. The hippies exist from four resources. They sell the hippie newspapers, beg and borrow, receive donations, or receive money from home. The hippies live an easy, relatively carefree life. The hippie movement is an emotional movement, based on love of fellow hippie. It is a simple movement, uninvolved, not complicated. Hippies are content with green grass, blue skies, roaring oceans, and warm summer nights, things that most people could be content with if they did not have responsibilities.

On the local scene, the hippies do not seem to be quite as distant from ourselves. They may be people we know, or friends of friends. They are identified by their "happenings." Sunday afternoons may find them in Forest Hill Park in Richmond having a love-in. There is no specific mode of behavior. Everyone does what he likes. He may fly a kite, sit around and talk quietly to his neighbor, or munch on peanut butter sandwiches — not very unusual behavior. But he is a hippie. He is recognized by the flower drawing on his back, his Indian looking vest, his beads, and his beard. Or, the hippie might be found at Monroe Park in Richmond, near the R.P.I. district. Not too long ago, a marry-in was held. Two young hippie couples were participants in a hippie wedding. (It was a sham ceremony). It was a serious affair. The two couples sat before the priest in all their splendor. The ceremony was marked by the reading of a poem that started like this: "My love she speaks like silence. ..." A young poet contributed this bit of philosophy: "Our disease is not cancer but leprosy of the spirit." The Richmond City officials went into long debates over allowing hippies in Richmond City Parks. But perhaps they have nothing more to worry about.

The hippie movement is dead, or at death's door. The spirit seems to be dying. The hippie has become an image through the eyes of the press. The hippies want to be free from all images. The hippies are in mourning for their death. A hippie funeral was held in the Haight-Ashbury District. The hippies appeared in blankets, following a coffin filled with wilted flowers, shaven beads, sandals, and discarded marijuana. Their spirit is gone. The hippies have gone home. But even now, the hippies are interested in finding or giving a ride should fill out a destination slip and attach it to her destination area. After finding a ride or riders, students are asked to remove their request from the board.

New Travel Board Project of YWCA

The YWCA, in trying to meet a variety of needs of the student body, has started a travel board located in the Old Smoker.

The board is divided into regional areas of Virginia: Richmond, Norfolk, Charlottesville, Winchester, Roanoke, Washington, and other. Destination slips are attached to the board. Each student who is interested in finding or giving a ride should fill out a destination slip and attach it to her destination area. After finding a ride or riders, students are asked to remove their request from the board.

Tidewater Association Selects All-College Teams; Dr. E. B. Jackson Presents Hockey Awards To Colleges

Longwood members of the All-College Team, pose with Mrs. Eleanor Bobbitt, coach of the Longwood team and coordinator of the Tidewater Tournament.

By ARLENE CUNDIFF

The annual tournament of the Tidewater Field Hockey Association was held on Longwood's campus, on Saturday, November 4. Teams from Mary Washington, Richmond Professional Institute, Westhampton, William and Mary, and Longwood participated in the games which began at 9:45 a.m.

Each game was scheduled to be played for 25 minutes each, having only the first half instead of two halves as played in regulation field hockey. Both Barlow and Iler Fields were put to full use with two games being played at once.

The results of the games were as follows: Westhampton - Won 2 and tied 1. William and Mary, tied 3. Mary Washington, Won 1, Lost 1, and tied 1. Longwood, Won 1, lost 1, and tied 1. R.P.I. lost 1 and tied 2.

The purpose of the tournament was to select an "all college team" to participate in the Southeast Hockey Tournament scheduled for Nov. 18-19, in Washington, D.C.

Teams from the Southeast section of the U.S. Field Hockey Association, including the Baltimore, Washington, Blue Ridge, and Tidewater areas play in tournament from which the Southeast 1 and it teams will be chosen to represent the Southeast section in the National Tournament.

At the National Tournament to be held at Goucher College, Towson, Maryland, during the Thanksgiving holidays, the United States teams will be chosen to represent the U.S. in international competition.

After the completion of the games in the afternoon, a tea was held for all in the Lankford building. At this time, the Tidewater Field Hockey Association held a meeting for the purpose of electing new officers for the coming year.

After the completion of the business meeting, the two teams chosen from among those participating were announced. Longwood was well represented with 5 players being named to the first team that will compete in the Southeast tournament. They were Anna Pettis, co-captain, Judy Nevitt, Jean Hendricks, Cathy Hass, and Holly Forman. The remainder of the first team chosen were Sue Deaster, Mary Money, Mary Terry and Carol Reese from Westhampton, Sherry Vetter and Roberta Grove from William and Mary.

Barbara Matthews from Longwood was chosen for the All College Reserve team, plus Susan Beatersville, Dorothy Helrich, Cindie Hicks, Kathy O'Flaherty, and Ann Jefferies from William and Mary, Debbie Eades and Ann Murphy from R.P.I., Marty Dorman, Lynn Lennon and Dixie Lee from Westhampton.

The meeting was then adjourned and the action returned to the hockey fields as the All College Team 1 played the Reserves in an exhibition game. The first team won the game with a score of 2-1.

Sophs, Fr. Split Points; Color Teams Chosen

By SIBIL PROUSE

After fighting in a scoreless half, the Sophomores and Freshmen both scored two goals, resulting in a 2-2 tie in the final game of the Class Hockey Tournament on November 1.

In the first half, the ball was knocked back and forth from one end of the field to the other. In the second half, the Sophomores plowed ahead and stole two consecutive points within five minutes, while the Freshmen remained scoreless. Sparked by the threat of a Sophomore victory, the Freshmen team fought wildly and finally tallied two goals in the final minutes of the game. From a Freshman free hit on the outside of the circle, the forward line struggled to push the ball past the opposing goalie and succeeded as Barbara Jenkins knocked it over the goal line. Judy Guidice drove from the center position for another goal.

The Sophomore versus Freshmen game was a contest to determine points for the class cup. As a result of the tie, the classes will divide the total points with the Sophomores and Freshmen each receiving five.

Because of lack of players, the Seniors were forced to forfeit to the Juniors in the hockey competition on November 1. However, the teams played to complete the rating for the Color teams.

The Color teams were chosen last Wednesday by four Senior Varsity Hockey members, who rated each Class player on teamwork, stickwork, and general playing ability. Members of the Color teams are:

Red and Whites - Fran Anthony, Linda Cooper, Suzi Johnson, Marcia Tench, Judy Phillips, Judy Arthur, Dink Cundiff, Judy Turner, Pat Quinn, Ginny Padgett, Diane Bradley, and substitutes Joan West, Jane Cromley, and Joette Bailey. Green and Whites - Janet Harpold, Mary Tolley, Judy Guidice, Wanda Mitchell, Linda Atkinson, Sherry Grigg, Peggy Shults, Beth Diamond, Ginny Sirk, Beth Rice, Terry Torregrossa, and substitutes Jinx Washington, Nedra Distel, and Lynn Coleman.

Landrum Attends Business Meetings

During the week of October 30, Dr. Landrum, Chairman of the Business Department, attended two conferences in relation to his subject field. The first of these, the Semi-Annual Conference on Business Education, was held in Richmond on October 30-31. This is essentially a conference of business educators throughout the state with representatives from the State Supervisor of Business Education Office in the State Department of Business Education.

Dr. Landrum remained in Richmond to attend the Virginia Education Association conference on November 3. In preparation for this event, Dr. Landrum spent November 1-2 participating in a meeting of the Board of the Virginia Business Association.

Athletic Association Accepts Awards

A highlight of Saturday's Tidewater Hockey Tournament was the presentation at 2 p.m. in the Lankford Building of pins and badges won by Dr. Elizabeth B. Jackson, professor of natural sciences, as a top field hockey player during many years of collegiate, national, and international competition.

Many honors have come to Dr. Jackson during her distinguished career in women's field hockey. She has served as national umpire, captain of the all-American team, and umpire-manager of the United States team that participated in the international field hockey conference held in Australia in 1956. Holder of numerous honorary memberships in area, national, and international associations, her field hockey activities have taken her around the world in international competition.

She played at Longwood for two years before transferring to William and Mary College where she won distinction in two additional years of collegiate field hockey.

To the William and Mary coach, Caroline Haussermann, and captain, Jo Carol Sale, Dr. Jackson presented the hockey badges she acquired in her rise from a high school, collegiate, and club player to an international team member. These badges will be given to the Athletic Association of William and Mary College. Various pins which were awarded to Dr. Jackson during her career are now the possessions of the Longwood Athletic Association. Co-captains, Jean Hendricks and Peggy Wilkins and coach, Mrs. Bobbitt, accepted the gift for L.C.

Swim Team Defeats Mary Baldwin, 51-26

By JANET HARMON

Longwood's Varsity Swim Team is off to a fast start. On October 12 try-outs were held at the pool for all those interested in being on the Varsity Swim Team for the 1967 season. A few of the old members returned to compete, but the majority of this year's team is composed of new members, many of them freshmen. Heading the team is Captain, Suzanne Turner; Co-Captain, Stephanie DuRoss; and Business Manager, Frances Bain. Cadelle Hollyfield is with the team again this year for another season of splashing fun. New members are: Joann Kennedy, Cheryl Suddith, Susan Bradshaw, Bonnie Lamison, Betsy Loewylen, Joann May, Carol Sanders, Carol Umbdenstock, and Helen Beamer.

The team has a busy schedule this year, and the girls practice faithfully every Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday from 5 'til 6 p.m. Emphasis is placed on medley relays and individual strokes.

Already Longwood has had three swim meets since the season began. On October 24 our girls competed against Old Dominion in a home meet in which O.D. won 49 to 28. Although we took a bow on this one, Longwood was by no means inept. Our medley relay, made up of Carol Umbdenstock, Stephanie DuRoss, Carol Sanders, and Suzanne Turner, took first place. Stephanie DuRoss commanded first place in the diving events and the fifty yard breast stroke. Joann Kennedy claimed first in the butterfly race. Other winners were: Cadelle Hollyfield - third in the fifty yard back stroke; Carol Sanders - third in the one hundred yard individual; and Suzanne Turner - third in the one hundred free style.

At the second meet on October 26, Longwood competed against Mary Baldwin AWAY and emerged victorious 51 to 26. Again the medley relay took first place composed of Carol Umbdenstock, Stephanie DuRoss, Joann Kennedy, and Suzanne Turner. Longwood took several firsts in this meet. Jo Ann May - first in the fifty yard free style; Jo Ann Kennedy - first in the forty yard back stroke; Stephanie DuRoss - first in the one hundred yard individual medley; Carol Sanders - first in the eighty yard free style; Jo Ann Kennedy - first in the forty yard butterfly. There were just as many second and third place winners. These were: Cadelle Hollyfield - second in the forty yard back stroke; Carol Sanders - second in the one hundred yard individual medley; Suzanne Turner - second in the eighty yard free style; Stephanie DuRoss second in the diving events; Frances Bain - third in form swimming; and Carol Umbdenstock - third in the forty yard butterfly.

Our most recent meet was held on November 1 with William and Mary at W & M. Unfortunately, Longwood lost. The score was W & M - 58; LC - 19. Perhaps our loss was due partly to the fact that LC did not place as many firsts in this meet as in previous meets. Stephanie DuRoss walked away with LC's only first place in the fifty yard breast stroke.

The schedule for the remainder of the season is as follows: November 15 (Tri Meet with W&M) Mary Washington, Away; November 21, Westhampton, Home; November 28, Lynchburg, Home; December 4, Lynchburg, Away; December 7, Old Dominion, Away.

Several members of the swim team assume starting position: 1 to R: Suzanne Turner, Carol Sanders, Joanne May, Cheryl Suddith, Stephanie DuRoss.

Special Cahoots Interview

"Learning Is Burning But Freezing Is Pleasing"

By LYNDIA STANLEY

Certainly, one of the most renowned groups on the Longwood Campus is Cahoots. The purpose of Cahoots, quoted from the mouths of Cahoots' members, is "to bring joy and happiness into the lives of Longwood Ladies." To carry out this time-consuming task, Cahoots has chosen its most eminent members, all of its members, to fill its various offices. This year's officers are: President, Becky Saleeby; Vice-President, Susie Holsclaw; Corresponding Secretary, Bonnie Stratton; Recording Secretary, Christy Cline; Keeper of the Coins, Carole Copeland; Ex-Officio, Joan West; Historian, Marilyn Greene; Keeper of the Grades, Linda Bayton; Chaplain, Sue Ross; Song Leaders, Georgia Mayo and Frances Scott; Press Agent, Esther Williams; and Member at Large, Ann Bowles. The two senior members of Cahoots, Eloise Jacobs and Becky Debaam, are student teachers this block. Also serving on Cahoots are two Junior Assistants, Maywood Martin and Becky Barnard. The highly revered Mr. Penock was bestowed with the great honor of serving as sponsor of this "note-worthy" group.

The only requirement considered when choosing Cahoots' members is that they be Longwood Ladies. The members are chosen each year by the outgoing members who decide whom they want to fill their greatly demanding positions as officers of Cahoots. Cahoots' members are quite secretive about their meetings. Their only comment was, "Cahoots meets spontaneously, whenever the need is felt."

Cahoots has various philosophies which govern the lives of its members, and they are generous enough to share one of these wise sayings with us. They enthusiastically stated that, "Beauty is only skin deep, but it helps."

When asked about the purpose of Cahoots' "Freezings," the members unanimously replied, "To recognize the outstanding achievements made and the dynamic personalities on the Longwood Campus." Last week, on Halloween Day, Cahoots held its first Freezing of this semester. The motivation behind that particular Freezing was "to honor the Great Pumpkin."

To make the event even more spectacular, Cahoots sponsored a contest in order to select a Halloween witch.

The actual beginning of that greatly anticipated event took place at Hiner Building; there, the members of Cahoots met and began their long march to the Rotunda. Providing their own "music to march by," the members sang Cahoots' theme song, "Salvation Army." Upon reaching the Rotunda, the members were astonished at the mob that had flocked there for the Freezing. In the middle of the Rotunda, the members marched around the "Great Pumpkin" who was replacing Joan of Arc for the event. The costumed participants in the contest then marched around so all could see their gorgeous costumes.

After all of this excitement, the Freezing took place. Cahoots froze such things as last year's Cahoots' members of choosing such eminent people to replace them; the Discount Bookstore; Leo's, the hot spot of this bustling metropolis; and the new invisible furniture in the Student Activities Building. They also froze certain prominent members on campus, but wished to make no comments about those actions.

The judging of the "Halloween Witch Contest" was the next event. Cahoots chose ten semifinalists on the basis of originality and creativity in designing their costumes. After dinner, the semifinalists were numbered and asked to parade through the dining hall. There, they passed Mr. Alonzo Hicks, head chef, and the other members of the kitchen staff who comprised the panel of judges. The judges then picked the number of the one whom they thought was most appropriately attired. The winner of the contest and receiver of the prize, a fifteen dollar gift certificate, was Carolyn Davis. Honorable mention went to the Grave Robbers and the Mummy, Mary Jo Madex, Barbara Hooper, Maggie Bridges, and Myra Boone.

All of the events of the first Freezing were enthusiastically cheered by the crowd. So, if you missed Cahoots the first time, all of its members advise you to be on the look-out for signs indicating the next Freezing.

In closing the interview, Cahoots offered this last thought for the day, "Learning is burning but Freezing is pleasing." Also, I would like to add that in interviewing this most "note-worthy" group, I was overwhelmed at the members' enthusiasm to offer knowledge, at their vivacious personalities, and at their originality that does so much to keep Cahoots an active part of Longwood College life.

Wesley Sponsors Union Vespers; Professors Speak

On Sunday, November 5, Wesley Foundation sponsored Union Vespers for all the church groups in the Student Center. The program centered around the film, "The Eye of the Beholder," which raised the question of how each of us sees any one particular person. It depends entirely upon each person's viewpoint. A discussion was led afterwards by Mrs. Bobbitt.

All students are invited to Sunday School each Sunday morning at 9:45 a.m. in the church with Mr. and Mrs. Gusset as teachers. On December 3, however, Sunday School will be held in the Student Center at 9:30 a.m. with coffee and doughnuts being served afterwards. This was done on November 5.

On November 7 and 14 at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Center Dr. Blackwell is leading a discussion on "The Gospel According to Peanuts."

Dr. Lane Serves Local High School As Evaluator

Dr. Lane, Chairman of the Social Science Department, is presently serving on an evaluating committee for Greenville County High School, Emporia, Virginia. The actual evaluation will take place from November 13-16, during which time the Visiting Evaluation Committee will study the functioning of the school system. Each evaluator serves on one general committee and on one departmental committee which includes observation and evaluation of the classroom instruction.

Members of the Visiting Committee will meet with school committees to discuss and evaluate the school's proficiency in the following areas: Student Activity Program, Instructional Materials, Guidance Services, Health Services, School Plant, School Staff and Administration, and Statistical Summary of the school's quality.

The Zeta Tau chapter of the Alpha Sigma Tau sorority celebrated its sixty-eighth Founders Day on November 4 by holding a banquet in the Tea Room. Mr. Miguel Silveria spoke to the sorority on citizenship. After the banquet the ASTs went on a hayride.

The Sigma Kappas have begun preparation for Founder's Day on November 9 by planning a banquet.

Congratulations go to Peggy Wilkins, Kaye Boykin, and Eloise Jacobs who were named to "Who's Who."

Tonight the Tri Sigma's will show the movie, "The Great Imposter" at 7 p.m. in Jarman. This film stars Tony Curtis and proceeds will go to the Robbie Page Memorial Fund.

Slater Service Conducts Food Preference Survey

The ARA Slater Food Service plans to conduct a Food Preference Survey on November 14. Mr. Penock, manager of the Longwood College Slater System, stresses the importance of this survey in preparing college menus. This survey is the best way "to determine food likes and dislikes." According to Mr. Penock, "We have omitted many of the most unpopular foods from our menus, as a result of the survey. We urge everyone to be sure the questionnaires are properly marked and returned."

The following are the foods which received the highest ratings on the 1966 Food Survey:
Toast 81%, Scrambled Eggs 75%, Donuts 94%, Hot Cakes 82%, Bananas 91%, Grape Juice 90%, Orange Juice 96%, Chicken Noodle Soup 89%, Lettuce and Tomato Salad 95%, Tossed Salad 93%, Bacon, Lettuce and Tomato 94%, Roast Beef 98%, Roast Turkey 98%, Frankfurter 92%, Fried Chick-

The Questionnaire also allows students to comment on Appearance of Food, The Menu, Second Policy and Cafeteria Service as well as foods of all types.

Students are reminded that these are computer-graded tests and must be marked with soft lead pencils. Please mark all responses clearly and erase wrong selection completely. Slater also asks that students include the Class and Age Group on the Questionnaires. The forms will be distributed by Hall President and are to be returned to them. Results of the survey will be posted as soon as possible.

Judicial Board Aspirants View Responsibility To Student Body

Question: You, being a prospective officer of Judicial Board, have a responsibility to the Student Body. To what extent should you, as a member or representative organization, represent the Student Body in Judicial Board?

Vice-Chairman

Linda Long

To what extent should I represent the Student Body? To the fullest degree within my power. As a member of Judicial Board, I should represent the Student Body in the image of the individual. That is, in every single case before the Board, I should seek in the decision for the individual the justice which rests in the keeping of the entire Student Body. In this manner, the ideals of the whole are represented without bias to any of the several parts. To violate the truth for one citizen is to violate it for the entire community, and to violate the truth for the community which elected you is to grossly misrepresent its every member.

Sally Heilman

To be elected to Judicial Board means accepting a tremendous responsibility — a responsibility not just to your class but to the entire student body that you will uphold at all times the trust and respect the students have placed in you in seeking always to fulfill your duties. Judicial Board should merit your highest concern because it is the students you are serving and it is their welfare that you are placing in jeopardy if you take this responsibility lightly or with any less merit than is expected of you.

Linda McCulloch

As a member of a representative organization, I should represent the Student Body in Judicial Board to the extent to which the students make their ideas and feelings known to me. Every decision I make on the Board or every opinion I offer should represent the thoughts and feelings of the average student here at Longwood. The major means of finding out how the students feel about certain issues is through personal and individual contact. If the students do not express their opinions to me verbally, I must rely on my personal discretion, integrity, and judgment to reflect their opinions. The students themselves invested this right in me as their elected representative.

Secretary

Chris McDonnell

Being a member of Judicial Board, my responsibility is to each individual student. My past experience has taught me the extreme worth of consideration among my fellow colleagues. I have learned to evaluate the individual with an objective and open mind in an effort to make a just decision. The Student Government operates to meet the needs of the whole student body so that each girl may benefit fully from it. Likewise, I have aimed my ideals at this goal, with my main concern to you, the individual, and would like the opportunity to represent you once again as secretary of Judicial Board.

Karey Olson

Elected to the Judicial Board as a representative of the Student Body, each member is equally responsible to the organization, the students, and the tradition of self-government. The purpose of the Judicial Board is to instill the meaning of the Honor Code in the minds of the students. Thus, mature judgment, quick action and a personal concern in the best interest of the individual are necessary for a job well done. Close ties, both personal and confidential, should be maintained between the students and their Judiciary to insure respect for policies and decisions.

Mikie Whitmore

The Judicial Board stands for honor, justice, and dignity, and every member of this organization owes the student body her best efforts in carrying out these high ideals. Honor is a precious thing, and when we lose it, we lose faith in ourselves, in others, and in our school. Only with an effective Judicial Board can we have an effective Honor System. Justice, or rather "benevolent justice," is the foundation of the Judicial Board. We cannot close our minds to the extenuating circumstances of a case, and must bear in mind all the facts involved to make a wise and fair decision. While honor and justice are the most important aspects of a trial, dignity plays an essential role. Without dignity, we lose respect for the Judicial Board and thus for the Honor System.

The Judicial Board serves to guide and protect the student body, not punish it.

Legislative Board Candidates Discuss Students And Self Government

Question: Do you think that Longwood College as an institution of higher learning should give its students an opportunity for self government. Why?

Vice-Chairman

Kay Hall

It has been said that man has "an instinctive dislike of restraint whether of his personal conduct or his freedom of thought or his conscience, or his right to have a voice in the conduct of the state". Therefore, I feel any institution of higher learning DEMANDS self-government for its students.

Self-government alleviates restraint, allowing the development of student initiative and responsibility. With these qualities a student is capable of taking an active part in the world outside his college community.

Participation by the student in self-government on Longwood's campus today, initiates the participation of a mature adult in his civic government of tomorrow.

Ann Ailor

Longwood as an institution of higher learning should give its students an opportunity for self government. Self government gives each student the opportunity to participate, gain responsibility, channel energy and enthusiasm into activities which benefit his dignity, build character, develop personality and opinions, and be better prepared to face life realistically and as an individual.

The college community is the place where the student must begin to participate in the affairs of his community and to assume some responsibility for it. Students can participate and experiment in a learning process of community living and democratic planning within the advising confines of a more experienced generation.

Recording Secretary

Sandy Hitt

Yes.

At the college level students have come to take for granted a certain amount of self government. The administration cannot and should not be expected to play the role of "Big Brother" to the students. In giving Longwood students the opportunity for self government, the administration has expressed a vote of confidence in the student body. I believe the student body has always lived up to this confidence and will continue to do so. On the other hand, in depriving the students of an opportunity for self government, the college is also depriving them of an opportunity to gain valuable leadership skills, maturity, rich experience in working with others, and better appreciation of campus activities.

Cookie Moore

Yes, I think that the students of Longwood should be given an opportunity for self-government. The voice of the student body should be not only that which governs, but it should also be one that encompasses every class, every sorority, and every clique on campus. Privilege and responsibility go hand in hand with such an opportunity and are as inextricably combined as class membership and color spirit. The change has been important but the point is obvious — Longwood students have the interest and the ambition to work together for their betterment, and self-government is the most significant means for providing its students opportunities for self-government. At the present time, the activities at Longwood are controlled and directed by the students, with administrative supervision. The importance of student government can only be effectively realized and further developed through participation by all students. Since we are an institute of higher learning and are representative of the educated "leaders of tomorrow" it is a necessity that we become familiar with the works of representative and self-government.

Treasurer

Marilyn Bates

Longwood College has the opportunity for self government. Through the members of Legislative Board, House Association, and Judicial Board the student body asserts the power to make and carry out regulations which are in the best interests of the students and the college.

Some students suggest that self government is hindered by administrative approval. Students have the opportunity to discuss differences of opinion with the administration. The student organizations and the administration are both interested in the growth and development of Longwood College and her students, and we as mature college women should be able to find concurring solutions to any problems.

New plans for the growth of Longwood come with Dr. Willett. With his help and that of the rest of the administration, the student organizations can carry out Longwood's opportunities for self government.

Janice Austin

The purpose of a college education is to prepare us for the future. In a few short years, our generation will govern the world. Thus, an experience in self government will help prepare us for the future of responsibility. When our nation is based on the idea of government by and for the people, it is essential that self-government during our college years will lead to a better understanding of what we need later in life. ## Offices Require Leaders; Choose Yours Wisely

Election time is upon us again — this time the minor officers of all major organizations are being elected. The freshmen must have the idea that all we do around here is elect. The months of October and November might give one that impression, but elections are essential to insure continued leadership on our campus. The upper-classmen understand the importance of these elections, and the freshmen will also understand their importance in the very near future. For these elections to retain their importance at Longwood it is necessary for the students to formulate their thinking towards electing capable and responsible candidates; candidates who are suitable for the specific positions. There are many things that must be considered when thinking about these elections. The elections should be taken seriously and thoughtfully. Each student should contemplate the question: What constitutes an effective campus leader? Of course, a willing and co-operative student body is essential for any action to be initiated, but good leadership is also a must.

What qualities should a "good" leader possess? In the student handbook there is a list of specifications that make a person eligible for an office, such as class, and grade average. However, effective leadership requires much beyond these superficial qualifications. The candidate must possess genuine feelings towards supporting and contributing to the welfare of the school and serving her fellow classmates. She must be willing to accept responsibility, receive criticism in the right spirit, and keep an open mind to suggestions.

She must be willing to devote her extra time to her office whenever it is needed. She must be strong, able to stick up for what she believes is right, and able to delegate authority. These are but a few of the traits that a "good" leader should possess; but above all in making your choice, you should remember that she is your representative and that she is a reflection of your standards and feelings.

This is your chance as mature, intelligent, responsible adults to voice your opinions through your election of candidates. When it is time to vote, don't just put a name on the ballot for the sake of it. Know whom you want for each office and their individual qualities of leadership. Our student officials are elected by the students to serve as our leaders — let's choose wisely so we know where we are being led.

H.A. Candidates Discuss New Image

Question: What can the House Association do to improve its image among the students of the college? In other words, how can House Association change in stature to command more respect for its rules and regulations from the students?

Vice-Chairman

Evelyn Blackman

I feel that a major area for improvement lies within the general House Association meetings. I have often heard said that these meetings are not taken seriously. A possible solution to this area could be a dorm council, consisting of hall presidents and the dorm president who would strongly suggest to House Council specific rules or changes that could be made within their own dorm. This "specialization" could be more efficient, alleviating the joint House Association meetings.

I also feel that as House Association grows it will take an increasingly active part in campus life. This can already be seen through the newly constructed Social Standards Committee. This committee has done much in improving the "image" of House Association by sponsoring groups such as the cosmetic demonstration given this Fall in the ABC room.

In conclusion, I do not feel that "improving the image" is such a problem. The students themselves hold this power. It is the interest and support of the student body that keeps STUDENT Government alive.

Karen Burke

I think that the House Association in its present form commands a great deal of respect from the students of Longwood College. One change in stature which would increase its position of authority would be a more direct contact with each student. A personal responsiveness would benefit both the student and the school. I feel that each student should be made confident that his proposals are being discussed and decided upon. If he knows exactly what is being acted upon, he will most definitely respect the rules and regulations as his own.

Perhaps a brief statement could be made weekly at any appropriate announcement time as to all new proposals or rules being considered or tried. This would, in effect, increase student participation as well as raise the image of House Association.

Terry Knight

Because of the structure of our present student government, House Association, Judicial, and Legislative Boards, students often feel that House Association stands in a lesser degree than the other two boards. But each board, with their respective duties and authority, demands equal respect. To change the image of House Association in order to elevate its stature must be a mutual effort between the board and student body.

Better orientation toward the understanding of the rules and the reason for them, together with increased communication between the student body and House Association will lead to a better understanding of the wants and needs of Longwood students. The results of this mutual effort will hopefully be an improvement in the stature of House Association. This will place it in the right perspective — as an integral part of our student government.

Secretary

Betty Hockaday

Since the hall presidents are the closest link between House Association and the students, it should be at this level that House Association execute a change. The hall presidents could call more frequent hall meetings. At these short meetings the girls can give more personal suggestions and questions concerning campus regulations. If hall presidents would question a larger amount of rules which seem outdated at the House Association meetings, House Council would get a better idea of which rules may be impertinent. If enough personal interaction is exchanged between the House Association as a whole and the students as individuals, more students will understand and respect present House Association regulations.

Mary Ross

In my opinion the respect given to House Association cannot be commanded from the students by merely changing its stature or its laws. I feel that it is up to the student body to realize that complacency with the rules of House Association is expected of them as "Longwood ladies," and that these rules should be regarded as positive, not negative, guidelines. By its very nature House Association deals with the enforcement of school regulations, but there are also various committees under its jurisdiction whose purpose is constructive, not punitive. Perhaps House Association could improve its image by placing more emphasis on these committees and increasing their activities so that the students could see how hard House Association is working at all times for the betterment of the student body.

Emy Morris

Not until members of the House Association, themselves, show more esteem for the rules governing residence on the Longwood College campus can the student body be expected to respect the regulations. There are too many cases in which the girl giving the warning or call down for a particular offense has herself violated that same rule five minutes earlier. This pertains mainly to such things as being noisy during strict quiet hour or taking food out of the dining hall. But, if there is little respect for the minor rules, how long will it be before there is little respect for major rules? If a Hall or Dorm President is going to enforce the House Association rules on girls in her dormitory, she should likewise enforce the rules on herself.

Treasurer

Dottie Harry

House Association is already a well respected organization on Longwood campus, however, it can improve its image by having the students' well-being its major concern always. I believe that House Council's main objective should be to represent the student body and strive for fairness and equity in all of its dealings. Only when students are aware of the reason behind certain regulations will they realize the necessity of obeying them. I would like the opportunity to serve on House Association and try to make the Longwood rules more than regulations. I would like to see our House rules observed as a necessary part of college for harmonious living.

Phyllis Carter

As a representative form of government, House Association could try to improve the communications between the students and itself. This may be attained more effectively by familiarizing the students with the procedures of the establishment of rules and regulations. Problems are usually presented to the board, at House Council meetings. At this time, the problems are discussed and are often rectified in the form of a new rule or a clearer definition of the present rule. An introduction of these procedures to the freshmen during orientation, with emphasis that the House Association represents the students, will allow for a greater understanding of this organization.

I believe that rules can be respected and effective only if the members of House Association set the example to be followed.

Legislative Board

Mary Alice Elwang

Longwood College as an institution of higher learning should give its students an opportunity for self government. The clue is, I think, that the students won't learn productively until they become part of the ways in which the college makes decisions about itself. Students desire the opportunity to assume appropriate responsibilities in the management of their own affairs, and by developing maturing attitudes they gain from a real part of a college community.

A self government holds the students together as a unit, and the individuals add to the good reputation of the college. A student government generates awareness of campus activities, utilizes student opinion, and acts as a liaison among the students, the faculty, and the administration. The students themselves can enforce the regulations which are made by themselves and for themselves in a self government. They can spread the meaning of the Honor Code as well as an incentive to respect the ideals and traditions of their college.

Student-Faculty Relationship Alleviates Student Tensions

(I.P.) — The nation's state colleges and universities have taken specific steps this fall to deal with such student complaints as lack of communication with faculty and administration, insufficient participation in setting school policy, and feelings of alienation because of campus "bigness," according to a survey made by the Association of State Colleges and Universities.

The pervading focus of concern among the country's state colleges and universities, which educate one out of every five college and university students, has been to search out ways of dealing with student frustration and unrest. In many cases, this has taken the form of giving students representation on key faculty and administrative committees.

At Radford College in Virginia, for example, students will begin to serve on nine faculty committees and at the State College at Westfield in Massachusetts there will be student representatives on the school's three standing committees — Executive, Curriculum and Discipline. Two Montana Colleges — Eastern and Northern — are increasing existing student representation on faculty and administrative committees.

Pennsylvania's Shippensburg State College will put students on its Curriculum Committee, Louisiana Polytechnic Institute will place students on all committees within the Division of Student Affairs, plans to group all student organization presidents into a council to meet monthly with the Dean of Students, and has adopted a procedure for the release of student personnel records.

West Texas State University has set up a new committee, consisting of five students, five administrators and five faculty members, "to give greater visibility to student views." At Henderson State College in Arkansas, the presidents of all student organizations will begin to meet monthly with the student personnel deans, the dean of instruction and the college president.

Jackson State College, Mississippi, has established a new faculty committee "to enhance student life." At California State College at Fullerton, student and faculty representatives will meet at a two-day retreat in effort "to improve communications."

A good number of schools have turned to a reappraisal of student codes and guidelines as one way of approaching student problems. At the State University of New York at Buffalo, for example, a task force produced a detailed academic charter—including a Students' Bill of Rights — which is now in the process of being implemented.

California's Chico State College will have a new College Code which places the responsibility for student behavior with the students, outlines minimum and maximum penalties for infractions, and sets up a student appeals system. Armstrong State College in Georgia has revised and clearly defined its policies on Students' Rights. A student-faculty study at Vermont's Johnson State College resulted in a new student handbook and Jackson State has issued a revised constitution for the student government association.

Potential Office Holders Of YWCA Answer Questions, State Experience

Question: What qualifications do you feel a candidate for an officer of the Y.W.C.A. should have, and how do you as a candidate contribute to fulfilling these qualifications?

Vice-Chairman

Meg Pherson

I feel that the major responsibility of the Vice-President of the Y.W.C.A. is to assist the President in organizing and carrying out the "Y" activities. I also feel that her job is not entirely subordinate as the Vice-President must also accept full responsibility in the President's absence, and also should initiate her own programs.

I feel that after several years' experience working with the Y.W.C.A., I understand the nature of her activities on this campus. But, I am also seeking to use the "Y", the only national of our five major organizations, as a means to make myself and the student body aware of the outside world. Foremost, I hold a personal loyalty to Patti Paul and pledge myself to help her as she assumes the office of President.

Secretary

Margaret Nuckols

I feel that the most important qualifications of an officer of the Y.W.C.A. are sincerity of purpose and genuine interest in her fellow students. Without these essentials, the office would be a meaningless title. An officer must be willing to put forth much time and effort and give of her entire talents to her position. Also, she must fully realize and accept the responsibilities of her office and fulfill them as best she can. She should always strive to respect and represent the high ideal of the Y.W.C.A. and remember that others see through her the qualities of the Y.W.C.A.

I feel that I can fulfill these qualifications. My purpose is sincere, and, if elected, I will gladly accept the responsibilities of my office.

Patsy Peach

The Y.W.C.A. calls for leadership, enthusiasm and experience. Since the "Y" is a uniting body, leadership is important in order to keep the organization strong and capable of pulling the students together through its activities. The friendly spirit of enthusiasm is necessary to keep such a large group alive and progressing. Experience is a vital asset, needed to activate leadership and enthusiasm.

Last year I was on Freshman Commission, familiarizing myself with the "Y" and its participation at Longwood. Active membership in Tri-Hi-Y and other organizations during high school has also given me experience. I was both recording and corresponding secretary in Tri-Hi-Y which has given me a special insight as a secretary for an organization like the "Y". I have been an officer in other organizations too, helping me gain experience in leadership and building enthusiasm.

Besides this, I have the desire to do something for our school. As secretary I would have the opportunity to put what I have learned and my desire to work for Y.W.C.A. and in turn, for Longwood College.

Treasurer

Leslie Nuttall

A candidate for an officer of the Y.W.C.A. should have an interest for promoting the work of the Y.W.C.A. as well as a knowledge of the purpose and organization of the Y.W.C.A. In addition to an ability to lead and work with others, she should have the ability to fulfill the tasks of her office.

I feel that my work with the YWCA and Wesley Foundation has given me a background to work with this spiritual organization to help complete an important part of each girl's educational experience. Being a mathematics major, and having managed a club's funds, I feel qualified to be treasurer of the Y.W.C.A.

Candee Dickemann

One of the most important qualifications of a candidate running for the Y.W.C.A. or any organization is interest. Unless an officer has initiative, and an interest and desire to help the club, she will not serve her purpose as an officer.

Another important characteristic is participation. If the candidate has not taken time previously to participate in the work and activities of the organization, she won't be aware of the organization's needs and therefore won't be able to do a good job if elected.

In my freshman year I was a member of the Freshman Commission and since then have worked on many committees and projects. I have helped with the Thanksgiving baskets, vespers, installation, and was co-organizer of our first mixer.

I feel I have both the previous participation and interest to be an officer of the "Y." I would enjoy serving the students of Longwood through this office, and would do more than my best if elected.

Legislative Board

Gwen Robinson

I definitely feel that the responsibility of governing should be in the hands of the students. As an "institution of higher learning" Longwood is composed of experienced and intelligent young women. The mere fact that a person has willfully assumed the responsibilities which accompany the position of a college student, is proof that the students at Longwood are capable of handling and successfully solving the problems which would arise in a community of college people. When a person reaches the point where she is mature enough to make her own decisions (as each of us have done in deciding to attend Longwood), she is most certainly mature enough to be cognizant of her problems and most capable of handling them. No one can know and understand her needs, and the solutions to these needs better than the person INVOLVED. Therefore, only the students themselves can most successfully govern the student body.

Warren Fulton as Othello and Cathy Griffith as Desdemona rehearse for the Players and Jongleurs upcoming production.

Players, Jongleurs' "Othello" Opens Tomorrow In Jarman

The Longwood Players and the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs will present their second production of the season, "Othello" by William Shakespeare, December 7, 8, and 9 under the directorship of Dr. Patton Lockwood.

Warren Fulton, who played the male lead in "As You Like It" will play "Othello." Cathy Griffith is cast as his wife, Desdemona. Her father, Albion, is played by Dr. Herbert Blackwell. Other lead roles are Lucy, Frank, Degees, Cassio, Ed Coffenburger, Bianca, Bunny Robinson, and Emilia, Connie Balalard. Ben Horn is cast as the Duke of Venice, Frank Fasut plays Rodrigo, Walter Hathaway plays Montano, and Bill Lew is Gratiano. Performances in Jarman Auditorium will begin each evening at eight o'clock.

The Players and the Jongleurs were quite pleased with the attendance at "Lysistrata" and "The Trojan Women," and hope that the students will support the production of "Othello" as well.

Fine Arts Museum Brings Play, 'School For Wives'

"The School for Wives," a comedy by Moliere, will be presented in Jarman Auditorium on December 11 and 12.

In the 17th century satire, a middle-aged man tries to marry a girl much younger than he, filling the main roles will be Robert R. Wait as Arnolphe, Jeanne Rostaing as Agnes, and John Arnold as Horace. The comic servants will be portrayed by David O'Neill and Diane Goble. Other characters are L. M. Holson as Elmer, John Frey as Enrique, and Paul Eisen-smith as Oronte.

The play will be presented in three performances at Jarman Auditorium. Two matinees will be presented, one on Monday, December 11, at 1 o'clock and one on Tuesday, December 12, at 10 o'clock. These performances will be primarily for high school students in this area. The evening performance is presented for the public.

Tickets will be $1.50 for students and $3.00 for nonstudents. Those students who have studied Moliere's play in English classes will be admitted to the performance free.

The play is being presented at Longwood by the Central Virginia Arts Association of the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts. The wide success of the theatre in the Museum has brought demands for live performance to throughout the state. The Museum has, therefore, inaugurated a statewide Theatre Arts System to take professional productions of drama, music, and dance to communities throughout the state.

Art Display By Va. Craftsmen Includes Pottery And Textiles

Pottery and textile works by two Virginia craftsmen will be presented at Longwood College from December 1 - December 14. The public is invited to visit the exhibition room of Lancaster library where the display may be seen during regular library hours. Most items are for sale.

The exhibit consists of 63 individual items, 28 of which are such textile creations as wall hangings, silk screens, fabrics, pillows, scarves, and a silk screen product. The exhibit includes 35 pieces of pottery.

The textiles were created by batik expert, Kiyomi Iwata, a Japanese-born American, who now lives in Chester, Virginia. A native of Kobe, Japan, Mrs. Iwata studied at the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts and attended the famous Penland School of Crafts, in western North Carolina, on a scholarship.

Her creative talent has been recognized by intentions to exhibit in the 1967 Craftsman Guild Annual Exhibit and the biennial exhibition of 1967 Virginia Museum of Fine Arts. She won first prize in textile media at the Handwork Shop Craft Fair.

The pottery pieces included in the exhibit are the work of Anna Smith, resident ceramist at the Virginia Museum. Her works have been featured in gallery and museum exhibits throughout the United States, including such metropolitan areas as Detroit, Michigan; Dayton, Ohio; and Grand Rapids, Michigan. She has also been represented in an exhibit in Vienna, Austria.

At the Museum of Modern Art in Pennsylvania, she received the bachelor of fine arts and the master of the arts degrees from the University of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Henry Willett Assumes Presidency; Inherits Problems Of Expansion

Longwood College's president-elect, Dr. Henry L. Willett, Jr., assumed his new position Friday, December 1.

The 36-year-old Chesapeake educator is the second youngest of eight Longwood presidents since 1884 when this teacher-training woman's college, founded in 1839, began to receive state financial support.

Fred O. Wyal, retired Virginia educator and former acting president of Longwood, has served since mid-July as the college's administrative head on a temporary basis following the departure of President James H. Newman.

Mr. Wyal will remain at Longwood for several weeks before returning to his home in Richmond. Dean Richard B. Brooks will continue as college dean until February 1 when he becomes dean of the school of education at William and Mary.

Dr. Willett comes to Longwood at a time of rapid academic and physical growth to accommodate increasing enrollment projections, scheduled to rise from a current 1700 to 2400 students by 1972. Longwood's budgetary requests of the 1968 General Assembly will reflect the college's efforts to meet its present and future needs.

Dr. Willett's professional background includes 12 years of public school administration. He was serving as assistant superintendent of the Chesapeake public schools at the time of his recent appointment to the presidency.

A native of Richmond, Willett received the master's and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Virginia. He is a B.A. degree graduate of Washington and Lee University.

A teacher of graduate-level extension courses for the University of Virginia, he is the first Virginian to win the Finis Engleman Scholarship for graduate study awarded by the American Association of School Administrators. He is a member of Phi Delta Kappa, professional education fraternity.

Active in civic and recreational activities, he was honored in 1961 with the Distinguished Service Award by the Portsmouth Chamber of Commerce as "the outstanding young man of the year." A Baptist, he has been a leader in the YMCA, Rotary, Ruritan, and Portsmouth Executives club. He is a former president of the Norfolk County and Chesapeake Colt baseball leagues.

Dr. Willett is married to the former Mary Madison Turner, of Richmond, daughter of the executive secretary of the Virginia Education Association. Their family includes three sons - ages 4, 3, and 1. He is the son of the superintendent of the Richmond city schools.

Theatre, LC Faculty Cooperate To Present Foreign Films

Members of the faculty, including Mr. Rouillard, Dr. Blackwell, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Sandridge, Mr. Stewart, Mrs. Myers, Miss Fritzsche, and Miss Okawa met December 2, 1967, to discuss the presentation of foreign films in Farmville. The films under consideration are ones known for their artistic merit or commercial value, or films that would not ordinarily come to Farmville. They would be available to the college students at reduced rates or possibly by a season ticket plan. The films would be shown at the Farmville State Theatre as the facilities are better than those in Jarman Auditorium.

At the present time, the foreign film committee consists only of faculty members, but once established, the students will have a chance to work on the committee, request films, and help with the selection of films.

The first film shown will be the controversial "Marat/Sade." This is the first time this film has been shown in the area, including Richmond and Washington. It was filmed from a stage production and released in New York last year. It is scheduled for January 9 and 10. "David and Lisa" is scheduled for January 24.

Other suggested films that are currently under consideration are: "The Virgin Spring," "Forbidden Games," "The Knack," "La Dolce Vita," "Othello" (with Sir Laurence Olivier), "Mondo Cane," "Wild Strawberries," "Pygmalion," "Passion," "Les Bonnes Femmes," "La Guerre est Finie," "Hiroshima Mon Amour," "Room At The Top," and "Gates of Hell." Also under consideration are "Sundays and Cybele," "A Man and a Woman," "Divorce, Italian Style," "Two Women," "The Brothers Karamazov," "I, A Woman," "The Red Balloon," "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning," and "Alice in Wonderland" (English).

This committee is not an attempt to interfere with the present film committee and its selections.

Dr. Frances Brown, Assistant Dean of Women, is on leave of absence until February 5, 1968. She is currently in Florida and can be reached at the following address: The Beach Hotel, 2760 Estero Blvd., Fort Meyers Beach, Florida 33937.

Sororities Complete Formal Rush; Pledges Formulate Project Plans

Students on campus have just completed a week and a half of formal sorority rush. During the one week of actual rush parties, an approximate 170 girls vied for membership in Longwood's nine nationally recognized sororities including Alpha Sigma Alpha, Delta Zeta, Sigma Kappa, Kappa Delta, Alpha Gamma Delta, Sigma Sigma Sigma, Zeta Tau Alpha, Phi Mu, and Alpha Sigma Tau. Each sorority had between 14 to 24 openings, and freshman participation was somewhat lower than in previous years, authorities reported.

On Monday, prospective pledges signed and yesterday bids were received and taken pledging took place. The new pledges are now entering an eight-week period in which they are required to complete certain projects, entertain the sorority members with parties, and present a money-raising project. Before their formal initiation, to be held sometime during March, each pledge class will present the sorority with a gift. A 2.2 cumulative average must be maintained to become eligible for initiation into the sorority member.

Rushes compare party invitations and consult Panhellenic delegates during Rush Week.

Outgoing Editor Recalls Past Experiences On 'Rotunda'

It is once again election time. A new ROTUNDA editor will have been born by the time today's paper is off the press.

It is my difficult task, as outgoing editor, to express my appreciation for the cooperation given me in its wonderful year as Editor-In-Chief.

As my tenure as editor draws to a close I take a look back over the past year. I recall the many hours spent in editor's meetings, staff meetings, reporter's meetings, layout sessions, and at the Herald. The tension of meeting deadlines is very prevalent in my mind. Thoughts of technical difficulties are abundant. Hour upon hour of administrative sessions fill my head. The struggle to find enough material to fill the paper, or the task of cutting copy to fit, comes to mind. Long, late hours are vividly recalled.

But above all, thoughts of a cooperative and competent staff are brought to mind. Without their help there could not have been a ROTUNDA. It has been a memorable pleasure working so closely with "the group," and I thank each one of you.

I would like to make note of a personal debt of gratitude to Mr. Warren O. Eyster, faculty adviser par excellence; the entire ROTUNDA staff, in particular two junior editors, Gwyn Muse and Karen Maher, without whose aid there would have been no ROTUNDA; all those who allowed the ROTUNDA to continue publication; and to the Farmville Herald, especially all the crew who put up with my problems, experimentations, losses of temper, and late-ness.

To the new Editor-In-Chief and her staff, I extend my regards for a successful year of publication. The fact cannot be recalled that there are many trying times and problems with THE ROTUNDA, but its gratifying rewards exceed these difficulties. It is my greatest desire to see THE ROTUNDA continue as a sounding board for the students.

This has been a challenging and gratifying year for me, and it is with a great deal of sadness that I turn the next issue of THE ROTUNDA over to the new Editor-In-Chief.

Case Closed? . . .

(Editor's note: The following editorial is reprinted from the Maroon and Gold, the Bloomsburg State College student newspaper.)

College is a series of tests. They begin the first week of the freshman year and continue until the last week before commencement. It is upon these tests to a great extent, that a student's success, or lack of success is measured. These tests, then, are vital in the grade-oriented institution.

It is the responsibility of the student to prepare himself mentally for these tests. It is his responsibility to attend class and take comprehensive notes. It is his responsibility to study and learn the material upon which he is to be tested. It is his responsibility to think and reason in his effort to do the best work possible, regardless of the course.

If the student does not fulfill his responsibility, he has no one to blame but himself. He has chosen not to take the learning process seriously, and the test results will be the final witness to his efforts.

Case closed. Or is it?

Should our commentary end here with the burden placed solely on the shoulders of the student?

Is the instructor to be let off "scott-free?"

Hardly.

Any test is just as much the responsibility of the instructor as the student.

It is the responsibility of the instructor to author a test which fairly tests the student's knowledge of the material presented.

It is his responsibility to present questions that are clearly phrased and easily interpreted.

It is his responsibility to recognize the time limits which exist and not expect students to answer a three hour question in forty-five minutes.

It is his responsibility to use the type of test which best measures the student's mastery, and not the one which is easiest to test and score.

It is his responsibility not to take the easy way out by administering a test in which guesswork, and not knowledge, is measured.

It is his responsibility to protect the honest student in cases, where more than one class is tested on the same material, that is, different tests should be used to eliminate "leaks."

It is his responsibility to insure that tests don't get "out" prior to the time of the test.

It is his responsibility to change his tests from year to year or else distribute old tests so all students are on an equal footing.

It is his responsibility to be "awake" while the test is being administered to prevent students taking advantage of the instructor and his fellow students by cheating.

It is evident both the instructor and the student share in the responsibilities of the testing system.

Only if both parties take their responsibilities seriously and conscientiously can the system of testing be valid and valuable.

Otherwise, it's a big joke. And the students usually lose.

Students Discuss Weekend Marriages: Weigh The Advantages, Disadvantages

Many more college students today seem to be able to mix marriage and studying as evidenced by the increasing number of married students on the college campus and the fact that many colleges and universities are now trying to provide housing for the married students. But for Longwood's approximately thirty-five married students, the situation is unique. These girls live in the dorm and have so called weekend marriages in many cases. The girls' reactions to the setup, however, indicated that there are some advantages, surprisingly enough.

Sheila Morris Thompson is a sophomore who was married in September, 1967. Presently, Sheila's husband, who is in the Army, is stationed in Oklahoma. Sheila commented that "I can think of better situations, like him being stationed in Virginia instead of Oklahoma. We don't like being so far apart, but I'm glad we went ahead and got married. He gets out of the Army in August, so we'll live here until I finish school. I've got to get an education. . . . The main advantage is a more settled feeling. I've been able to study better than last year." Sheila will see her husband again Christmas, the first time since September.

Sara Puckett Hall is a senior who was married in August, 1967. Her husband is in Roanoke and Sara goes home every weekend. Sara stated that she "much more content here at school now. I'd rather be at home with him, but since I have to be here, I'd rather be married and be here. Since I've been married I care more about learning and it's easier to learn. When we got married, we knew this was the way it would have to be, so we accepted it. I'll be graduating in January, so it isn't such a long time. I'm kept so busy, the weeks go by fast—the weekends go faster though!"

Wanda Ball Owens is also a senior. Her husband lives in Newport News and she goes home every weekend. Wanda said that "the biggest disadvantage is leaving Dan at home alone all week. But education is one of the biggest things in a person's life. It's hard to study at home—I'd flunk out if I went to school at home. I concentrate better here and my grades have improved. If you have your husband's consent to go to school, then it's all right. Dan has never complained. I really think that if you date someone so long, it's better to get married than to wait. I felt I was old enough to get married and I felt I was ready to accept the responsibilities, which are enumerable. And I like being a housewife, but I want to teach very much."

Tag Lombard Frye is a junior. Her husband goes to the University of Virginia. They were married in September, 1967. Tag remarked that the only disadvantage was that "you're only half a wife and a full time student.

However, there was no reason to wait to get married just because you're in school. I think people are ready to get married before they get out of school. Now, there is something more stable to being in school. He gives you a more definite plan to your life, completing school being the first step. My husband felt that it was primary for me to get through school and he wanted to get married, so this is the way it has to be. But, it can be pretty hard and it's not a very good way to start a marriage if you don't have a pretty good situation."

Judy Hall Parker is a senior who was married March, 1966. Judy stated that there were many advantages to the situation. "My grades have improved a lot. Since I got married, my education has more of a purpose. I'm finishing my education so my husband can go to school. He's in Viet Nam right now, and when he gets back he wants to go to college. The vast majority of the girls at Longwood have no purpose; they don't know why they're here. The married population of Longwood knows that their education is of real importance, an important step in the lives of their husbands and future children. There are disadvantages, such as the fact that it is a weekend marriage, you have no time for any kind of school spirit, and you are not able to raise a family."

Carolyn Glass Conner, a senior, was married December, 1966. Her husband is in Halifax County. Carolyn said that "a lot of people say you can't study, but I find it easier to concentrate on my work now. Even when I go home, I get some work done, once in a while. Naturally you're a little more settled and tend to spend more time studying. When you do go home and have a chance to be together, you can be together the whole time you're there, and not just a Saturday night date. The main disadvantage is being separated and not being able to start a home of your own."

Barbara Matthews Snellings, a sophomore, was married November 22, 1967. Her husband is in Fredericksburg, but will be leaving for Texas for basic training on February 8. "I know that by being married and having a home at home, I really must want an education to be here. While a lot of girls sit down and worry about where next week's date is coming from, I study instead. My husband, after basic training, will go to electronic school for a year. As far as I know, I can't go with him, so I'll just stay here. If you have the determination to get an education, you'll stick with it."

Letter To The Editor

There seems to be a great deal of controversy concerning the recent judicial board decision to suspend twelve Longwood students for drinking in their dorm. We do not think that anyone disputes the fact that the girls broke a rule, and they are guilty of the infraction. This fact is obvious. This, however, is not the only fact that must be taken into consideration.

The members of the student body elect the judicial board, and if enough students question the decisions and procedures of the board—they have every right to express their opinions. One question that everyone would like answered is, why should a student be punished academically for breaking a social offense? Is it necessary to stifle education for this offense? Surely, the punishment does not fit the crime. Wouldn't it be more logical and reasonable to punish them socially with campus and social probation?

We also feel that there is a tremendous credibility gap in the procedures of this case. The girls were told that the judicial board had a list with their names. Later, they were told that there had not been sufficient evidence against them. They were forced to turn themselves in with the threat of having their sorority held in jeopardy. It is asking too much to be given the evidence against you, and to be tried as an individual and not as a group? It was not taken into consideration that these girls turned themselves in, were good students, that their character was above reproach, or that it was their first offense. They were railroaded out as a group in the words of a judicial board member as a "cut and dry case."

Why isn't the punishment for this offense published in the handbook? If social offenses deserve the same punishment as lying, cheating, and stealing, why aren't the students informed of this? Why was a student placed on social probation for this same offense in 1964 and three years later, twelve girls are suspended? If this case is an example for the student body, these twelve girls are paying an extremely steep price.

Is this just another incident for the student body to overlook, or does anyone feel strongly enough to agree that an injustice has been done. We feel that these students should be allowed to take their exams and that in the future academic offenses should be punished academically, and social offenses, socially.

Varsity Basketball Team Chosen; Three Pre-Christmas Games Scheduled

It's Basketball season again for the College teams and Longwood is no exception. The team of varsity players was chosen last week, and the girls have been hard at work practicing for the three games which are scheduled before Christmas. (See schedule on this page.)

Members of the 1967-68 varsity team are as follows:

Juniors - Linda Atkinson, Linda McCulloch, Mary Tolley, and Beth Diamond.

Sophomores - Betty King (Co-captain), Judy Turner (Co-captain), Marcia Tench, Betty Layne, Carolyn Thompson, Fran Anthony, Brenda White and Carolyn Cummings.

Freshmen - Freda Lunsford, Sandi Naylor, Jane McCaffrey, Lynne Coleman, Margaret Harrison, Janet Harpold, and Jane Richardson.

Varsity Coach, Mrs. Faye Agee, is looking forward to a fine, winning season. There are seven returning players on the squad. The Freshman interest in basketball is evident as there are seven Freshmen on the team and they really show good potential. Two Junior transfers, Beth Diamond, and Mary Tolley, have also added much to the L.C. defense and offense. The Sophomores had a good turn out and can help the Junior members add to the team spirit.

The Elections Committee would like to thank Mr. Leeper for his assistance in the recent Major-Minor Elections.

Orchesis Extends Invitations; Twenty Become Members

On November 7, 1967, Orchesis, the Modern Dance organization on our campus, invited twenty girls to join the dance group. The purpose of Orchesis is to foster creative interest in dance among students in college, to further and widen that interest through contacts with other college groups, and to maintain high standards of dance for both the college and the community.

Officers for the coming year are: Nancy Marey, President; Diane Schools, Vice-President; Carol Sue Croxton, Secretary; and Vonnice Herion, Treasurer. Mrs. E. K. Landrum of the Physical Education Department is the sponsor of the honorary dance group. Membership in the club is open to any student taking modern dance. Interest, creativeness, and technical ability are prerequisites for an apprenticeship. Apprentices are chosen from all modern dance classes each semester, and must serve one year of apprenticeship before they are actually initiated. Each apprentice must participate in some way in the annual spring concert presented by the members of Orchesis.

The new apprentices are: Doris Richards, Virginia Morris, Margaret Thompson, Nan Tucker, Anita Thomas, Sue Whipple, Marcia Tench, Ann Sprint, Judy Jones, Mary Woodall, Linda Parsons, Kris Bie, Bonnie Foltz, Vonnice Herion, Ann Flesham, Sandy Hitt, Janet Sharpe, Janet Harmon, Lindy Schaperjahn, and Diane Schools.

Orchesis holds its meetings at 1:00 p.m. on every third Tuesday of each month.

Sirc Spectates

By GINNY SIRC

Best Wishes to the Varsity Basketball team as they start out a new season. Let's support them at their home games with our attendance and cheering - show the opponents our true Blue & White spirit! See this page for the schedule of games.

Congratulations to the Green & Whites for winning Color Hockey! All contests were close, but the sportsmanship between the teams was the finest I've ever seen at Longwood.

In the future the A.A. hopes to promote more student-faculty games for each sport. The Color teams will compete against the faculty members. It was hoped that this could have been done with Hockey, but the faculty decided not to risk their lives running up and down a 100 yard field with hockey sticks coming at them from all directions. I don't blame them, do you? Mrs. Harris offered to play the Color Teams single handed, but we couldn't get the statement in writing.

Volleyball has just started and I'm sure that the faculty will give the Color Teams a real challenge in the match at the end of the season. Intramural volleyball is for everyone - come out and join the fun.

Freshmen Physical Education classes have now moved indoors and are beginning Folk and Square dance. Practice, practice, practice!

Congratulations to Anna Pettis, who represented Longwood and the All College Tidewater Hockey teams by being chosen to play on the third Southeast Hockey Team. She attended the National tournament in Maryland during the Thanksgiving holidays.

Congratulations are also in order for Mrs. Bobbitt, coach of the L.C. Varsity Hockey Team. She was recently elected as President of the Tidewater Hockey Association for the coming year. Dr. E. B. Jackson was chosen to serve as Chairman of the Selection Committee for the Southeast District of the U. S. Field Hockey Association for 1968.

Many thanks to the students who helped the Junior Physical Education majors get their rating in hockey officiating. It couldn't have been done without you.

Westhampton and Longwood swim team members emerge from the pool after an event in the recent meet.

Swim Team Victorious; Westhampton Bows 57-42

By JANET HAMON

Three cheers for the LC Varsity Swim Team! The girls have really been working hard this year as proved by the November 21 HOME meet. Swimming against Westhampton, Longwood emerged victorious with a final score of 57 to 42. The swim meet, composed of several events, began with a medley relay in which Carol Umbdenstock, Stephanie DuRoss, Carol Sanders, and Suzanne Turner took first place. In the fifty yard free style, JoAnn May placed third. In the one hundred yard free style, Suzanne Turner placed first and JoAnn May placed third. Other events and winners were: fifty yard breast stroke, Stephanie DuRoss - first place; Diving, Stephanie DuRoss - first place; Susan Bradshaw - third place; Individual Medley, Carol Sanders - second place; back stroke, Carol Umbdenstock - third place; JoAnn Kennedy - first place; JoAnn Kennedy - second place; free style relay, composed of Carol Sanders, JoAnn May, Suzanne Turner, and Bonnie Lamson - first place.

With only two days in which to practice, Longwood held another HOME meet the Wednesday after we returned from Thanksgiving holidays. This was the November 29 swim meet against Lynchburg College. Unfortunately, Longwood took a bow this time, the final score being 42 to 35. However, regardless of the loss, L.C.'s team claimed many first, second, and third places in the several events. The competing teams were tied before the last relay, 35 to 35. This was an especially close meet and it looked for a while as if Longwood was going to be the victor, but in the last relay, the deciding event, Lynchburg surpassed us and gained seven points, winning the meet. The events and participants of the meet were as follows: Medley Relay, composed of Carol Umbdenstock, Helen Beamer, and Carol Sanders, took first place; Individual Medley, Stephanie DuRoss - second; Buterfly, Carol Sanders - second; and Elinor Umbdenstock - third; breast stroke, Stephanie DuRoss - first, and Helen Beamer - third; fifty yard free style, Suzanne Turner - third; one hundred yard free style, Suzanne Turner - second; and JoAnn May - third; Diving, Stephanie DuRoss - second, and "Bitsie" Llewellyn - third; backstroke, Carol Umbdenstock - first, Frances Bain - third.

Tuesday, December 5, we had an AWAY meet with Old Dominion, and Thursday, December 7, we have an AWAY meet with Lynchburg College. A six-week championship meet will be held on Saturday, December 9, at Westhampton College.

Pi Gamma Mu Seeks Qualified Candidates Offers Memberships

Pi Gamma Mu, the National Social Science Honor Society, is currently searching for persons qualifying for membership. Requirements to be met for initiation include the completion of 20 hours in social science with a 3.0 average in social science and 2.5 cumulative average. Transfer students are eligible for initiation into Pi Gamma Mu, provided they possess the necessary qualifications. In the case of a transfer student, she must compute her quality point average only on the basis of work completed at Longwood; however, transferred credits may be counted towards meeting the 20 semester hour requirement.

In the near future, lists will be passed around in the social science classes for the purpose of obtaining the names of those persons who feel they are eligible for membership. A similar list will be posted on the social science bulletin board on third floor Granger. If you qualify, please make sure your name appears on one of these lists. In the past, Pi Gamma Mu has experienced the misfortune of passing over eligible students due to the students' misconceptions of Pi Gamma Mu's requirements and their failure to sign one of the lists. All those seeking membership in Pi Gamma Mu must be of at least Junior standing.

National Teacher Examinations Given At LC During Spring Break

The National Teacher Examinations have been prepared and administered since 1950 by Educational Testing Service. Some state departments of education now use the test results for teacher certification. They are becoming more and more required. In Virginia, various forms of the examinations are required in order to teach in the public schools of some cities such as Virginia Beach, Richmond, and Roanoke City-County. Also, some neighboring states require the examinations for teaching. The only way to be sure which NTE examinations you should take is to get the information from the school system, state department of education, college, graduate school, or agency to which you plan to have your scores sent.

The best time to take the tests is the Senior year in college. Many candidates take the tests to evaluate

Home Economics Majors Present Annual Bazaar

By IDA MAYE SIMMONS

The Home Economics Club Christmas Bazaar will be held tomorrow from 12:30 to 3:00 on the second floor of the Home Economics Building. The income from the Bazaar is added to the Home Economics Club Scholarship Fund. Each year a scholarship from the Fund is awarded to a Junior Home Economics major. The scholarship is awarded on the basis of academic achievement, extracurricular activities, and character. Last year's scholarship was awarded to Cookie Hyatt.

Each Home Economics major contributes three salable items to the Bazaar. Among the articles for sale this year are the following: Christmas tree decorations, place mats, aprons, tablecloths, stuffed animals, jewelry, lounging robes, tote bags, stocking caps, and mittens, scarves, and sewing baskets.

Chairmen for this year's Bazaar are Rita Whitt and Linda Burley. Both girls served as chairmen for the 1966 Bazaar which profited more than $200. Rita, who served as Home Economics honorary fraternity President from September to November, commented on the variety of goods for sale. "We have a little bit of everything to sell," she said. The articles are priced and displayed by committees of Home Economics Club members. The Pricing Committee members are Anne Wilmoth, Sophomore; Lois Austin, Sophomore; Polly Prince, Junior; and Judy Jerrell, Junior. Members of the Displays Committee are Olivia Jenkins, Sophomore; Judith Gordon, Sophomore; Frieda Raper, Junior; and Terry Knight, Junior.

Linda Burley, accounting for the success of the Bazaar, said, "We turn in articles we would buy ourselves." In the three years the Bazaar has been held, the Home Economics Scholarship Fund has increased to over $800.

New President Addresses Senior Capping Ceremony

By IDA MAYE SIMMONS

Senior Capping was held last Wednesday, November 22, in Jarman Hall. Seniors in black gowns and Little Sisters in white filed into a near-empty Jarman to the music of the Alma Mater. On the stage, Senior Class President Eloise Jacobs introduced Dr. Henry I. Willett, the speaker of the evening. Dr. Willett in turn introduced his preschool-aged son who proved the old show biz axiom "Never share the stage with a kid; they'll steal the show every time." Nevertheless, the new President's success as a speaker was clearly present. Combining light humor with timely, appropriate facts in a fifteen-minute speech, Dr. Willett addressed the Senior Class as future consumers and charged them to educate students who will hold jobs that are now nonexistent.

As the first unofficial act of the new President, Dr. Willett asked the Little Sisters to stand and cap their Senior sisters. The Seniors then stood and, singing "Hail to thee, our Alma Mater," left the auditorium with their Little Sisters.

Sigma Kappa sorority held a successful Sorority Bazaar Monday, December 4, in Stubbs Dormitory. Each sorority on campus was represented at the sale by various sorority favors. Sigma Kappa sisters were pleased to have Mrs. Spinosi, the sorority's Province President from Newport News, visit with them the week of rush.

Sigma Kappas plan Christmas parties with the Kappas of Hampden-Sydney December 13, and with the Sigma Nu's later in the month. Both parties will be given for needy children in the area.

Yuletide Spirit Prevails At Longwood

Christina Torre, Madonna;

Symbolizes Christian Ideals

Maria Cristina Torre Garza, the Mexican exchange student from Mexico City, has been chosen to take the part of the Madonna in the Christmas pageant Wednesday night.

"Cristi," as she is called by her teachers and friends, replied when she heard that she would assume this honor said, "I really can't believe it!" She said she hadn't even written home to her family (well, she did tell her boyfriend, Roldolfo) that she was competing for the role because she didn't think she would win. But the votes counted Friday night proved she was wrong.

The election of the Madonna isn't an easy process. A committee of the Y.W.C.A. meets and nominates those seniors they feel hold high Christian ideals, and a character similar to Mary, the mother of Christ. This year eighteen seniors were nominated. The Y cabinet then holds a primary election that limited the number to seven. These seven girls were then placed on the ballot for the entire student body to vote.

The students were reminded that the Madonna was not chosen for her physical appearance, but instead for her spiritual beauty. The Y sponsors the election because it gives every student the opportunity to reflect upon one girl they feel has a deeply religious relationship with God and a genuine concern for her fellow man.

Cristi comes from a very close family. She has been brought up to share with her four brothers and sisters. Her father manages a store in Mexico City and often Cristi, along with her other brothers and sisters, is called on to help.

This year is Cristi's second year as one of our foreign students. Since her arrival last year, she has made many friends and participated in several school activities. She is an active member of the Spanish Club, Newman Club, and Y.W.C.A. She works as a Language Lab Assistant. She was a "Hot Tomato" in the Red and White circus this year. She was also one of the Junior Class representatives to May Court last year.

Cristi will be returning to Mexico in June to finish up her education. She hopes to be an elementary school teacher with special emphasis on English. Certainly her stay in the States has taught her much English and a lot about our customs. But Cristi has taught us a lot about Mexico too. She has given us all a rich and rewarding experience in getting to know her. We are all looking forward to seeing her on the stage tonight in the most sacred role any girl could ever portray.

Christi Torre, the Madonna, was chosen by the students on the basis of the demonstration of Christian ideals.

Angel Presents Halo To Child In Pageant

"The Halo" the play being used for the annual YWCA Christmas pageant will be presented tonight at 7:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

In the play, a little angel, played by Sheery Matthews, earns his halo with much difficulty and then he presents it as his gift to the Christ child. Other characters include Debbie Denver as St. Peter, Sue Leyner as Gabriel, and Phyllis Ferguson, Patsy Herring, Fay Shifflet, Gay Bosserman, and Candy Dickenson as angels. The play will end with the nativity scene in which the Madonna will be presented. In the nativity scene, Dot Chapell will be Joseph; Linda Lilliston, Wanda Spicer, and Trisha Spillan will be wise men; and Susan Jordan, Jane Edwards, and Stuart Windle will be shepherds.

Linda Harper, director and narrator of the play, says "The Halo" was chosen because it is different from the traditional nativity scene which has been presented for the past several years. While the pageant will have a lighter tone than usual, it still brings out the spiritual aspect of Christmas.

Commission Elves Decorate

Rotunda Tree, Lead Sing

By MARY ALICE CARMODY

If you happen to hear singing in the Rotunda some night before dinner and find little green and red elves dancing around the Christmas tree, don't be too surprised, for it's the Freshman Commission. This year's Commission is the first to wear costumes, and they just may set a precedent at Longwood. The Freshman Commission has two purposes, to build the Longwood Christmas spirit and to help the "Y" with its fund-raising drives. So far, the Freshman Commission has decorated the Christmas tree in the Rotunda and is having Rotunda sings every night before dinner until Christmas. They were also responsible for the Tuesday night banquet and the skit after the banquet, "Once Upon an Elf." In the spring the Commission will be responsible for the YWCA fund-raising drive.

The officers of the Commission are: Lucy Cunningham, the President, and an elementary education major from Lake Jackson, Texas; Mary Lou Gilman, the Vice-President, a sociology major from Richmond; Pat Cloonan, the Secretary-Treasurer, a pre nursing student from Waynesboro, and Mimi Woosley, the Projects Chairman, an elementary education major from Richmond.

The other girls in the Commission are: Bonnie Davis, an elementary education major from Petersburg; Ann Guick, a French major from Aldie, Va.; Mary King Coleman, an elementary education major from Martinsville; Susan Fox, a pre nursing student from Richmond; Cindy Jamison, a business major from Roanoke; Bren-

Geist Taps Six For Membership; Recognizes Leadership Abilities

Geist, the leadership honorary at Longwood, tapped six girls for membership last night. The program, in Jarman Hall at 7:30 p.m., tapped seniors Vivian Gale, Mayling Simpson, Rosemarie Walker, and juniors Marcia Mitchell, Lynn Rachel, and Virginia Washington. Their selection recognizes them for outstanding leadership, scholarship, and service.

Dr. Herbert Blackwell was the speaker. Claudia Cunningham played the organ, and Jackie White was the soloist.

Vivian Gale, of Herndon, Va., is a representative to Honors Council, head of the Tutoring Committee, a member of Alpha Lambda Delta and Beoré El Thorn. Vivian majors in English.

Mayling Simpson, a Biology major from Richmond, is chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee and a member of Lynchos Society.

A music major from Charlotte Court House, Rosemarie Walker is a member of Who's Who at American Colleges, head of the Graduate School Committee, and member of Honors Council and Alpha Sigma Iota.

Marcia Mitchell is president of the Young Republicans, a member of Longwood Players, Kappa Delta Pi, and the Baptist Student Union. Marcia is an Elementary Education major from Emporia.

CSC Opens FSEE; Written Test For Federal Positions

The Civil Service Commission today opened the Federal Service Entrance Examination, principal avenue to Federal jobs for recent college graduates and others with equivalent education and experience on a continuous basis. In the past it has been opened and closed annually to coincide with the school year.

Written tests will be given throughout the Nation on the third Saturday of each month except August, September, and December, when no test will be given. To take the examination, applications must be received by the second Wednesday of the month preceding the month in which they want to be tested.

The companion Management Intern exam will be given every time the basic FSEE written test is given. Management Intern oral interviews will be given four times during the year in principal cities.

Applicants who pass the written test and achieve eligibility for employment will remain eligible for 12 months. In cases that justify it, such as attendance in graduate school, eligibility may be extended for as much as an additional year.

Candidates wishing to compete under the Federal Service Entrance Examination for a wide range of career opportunities should ask for a copy of Announcement No. 410 which contains complete information. Copies may be obtained from most college placement offices, major post offices, or the U.S. Civil Service Commission, 1900 E. Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20415.

THE ROTUNDA needs cartoonists and photographers to begin work on this staff second semester. If you are interested in contributing cartoons and/or doing photographic assignments for the newspaper, contact Owen Mose, Wheeler 216, before January 7, 1968. Those persons interested in cartooning should be prepared to submit a sample of their work.

Incident Points Out Incongruity Of Regulations

By this time the recent Judicial Board decision concerning the suspension of twelve girls has been discussed, dissected, analyzed, and evaluated to the point of disgust. When any twelve girls are suspended at one time, many people — students and faculty alike — will naturally respond to the loss of friends, students, and classmates. After the first shock of the recent decision, the anger that arose on campus served, at least, to remind us that we're still alive. Now, however, the attitude seems to be, why not let it die; we're tired of being mad. Though it is painfully clear that no power on campus will reverse or amend the decision, this is not the time to "let it die."

The dissension among students concerning the actual decision arose because of the assignment of academic punishment for a social offense. The question is simply, Why deprive a student of the cost of, and time spent in, a semester, when it seems to be unnecessary? There is no need here to analyze this argument, though that opinion is shared by this writer. Our concern with this incident is that it points up certain areas of weakness in our present student government and in our social regulations.

First, this incident brings to light this fact: our student government is due for a revamping. If the method used in this case is indicative of the system, how effectively can the student government be serving the STUDENTS? The Honor Code, upon which the entire system rests, provides the answer, which is an emphatic "it isn't." The accused is always considered innocent unless proven guilty. How innocent were these twelve students presumed to be? Even though the girls in question were clearly guilty, they should have been approached with evidence with the respect that was due them as students of the college.

Second, it is time to take an objective look at some of the social regulations, and this entails more than a "maybe someday" attitude toward the purchasing of 3.2 beer within the city limits of Farmville. The Honor Code states that students "must keep in mind at all times that they are representatives of the college wherever they are and that their conduct brings credit or discredit to the college." Is the image of Longwood more discredited by a group of girls drinking in the dormitory than by a cabal of "Longwood Ladies" invading Leo's and "soaking the suds" until curfew? It points up a serious incongruity in our social regulations that we allow drinking in public but condemn when done privately.

Perhaps all of this is unnecessary. It may be time to forget the incident, to "let it die." Anyone who feels this way is likely to be doing so with more blessings than she suspects, though probably without those of her classmates. Keep the same regulations; continue with the same system, but don't overlook one fact: Though it works, it's not necessarily right.

Flower Claus, Hippies Plan Dandelion's Trip

It was Christmas Eve last night, Asbury district of San Francisco. All the good little hippies were gathered in the park awaiting the "happening" of Flower Claus! Their flowers were blooming and smoke filled the air. The grass was really burning that night. The hippies were busy preparing acid for all good flower children the world over. This was going to be the best trip Flower had ever taken. In eager anticipation, the Flower hippie elves sat around on their blankets, stringing last minute necklaces and sorting sugar cubes for the sandals hanging warmly by the fireplaces in all the parks.

But over in the corner of the park, there was one little hippie who was sitting in by himself. He just could not get turned on by this "happening." Here it was, the Christmas season, and all good hippies were at their psychedelic best. Bells were jingling, flowers were decorated, and grass was hanging over all doorways. Everyone could tell that Dandelion had either had a bad trip or a huge problem. Dandelion did have a problem. He wanted to go home for the "Big Love-In" and be with his most loved ones. Only he was a college drop-out and had come to California all the way from Virginia and he did not have enough flower power to make it. Everybody knows that there is no place like home for the love-ins, so Dandelion was in the corner feeling like the first reaction after a trip. In other words, he felt like dying. About that time, who should appear but Flower Claus and his eight-propellered helicopter. All the flower elves ran to greet young St. Flower to welcome the main "happening" to the "happening." Only Dandelion did not join the laughing garden. Flower, being the all-wise jolly hippie that he was, noticed Dandelion over in the corner, willing. He inquired as to Dandelion's problem, and learning the trouble, he ho-ho-hoed: "Dandelion, your problems are solved. You can bloom again! I'll take you with me on the great trip. I'll plant you in Virginia." Dandelion, restored to his usual blooming self, joined the Love-In in the park.

Later that night, as Flower Claus made his great trip all over the United States, many young flower children, smug in their flower beds, heard the voice of an extra Flower singing as the helicopter landed on each roof:

Up on the house top helicopter paused,
Out jumped good young Flower Claus.
Down through the chimney with lots of beads

All for the good little "flower seeds."

Up on the roof with good St. Flower
Down through the chimney with lots of power.

Every year at this time I find myself working like a dog.

"New York Times" Discusses Controversial "Marat/Sade"

The following are excerpts from the review of "The Persecution and Assassination of Jean-Paul Marat by the Innates of the Asylum of the Clarenton under the direction of the Marquis de Sade" by Bosley Crowther that appeared in the February 23, 1967 issue of the New York TIMES.

This is the first film of the newly formed Film Society of Longwood sponsored by Lambda Iota Tau. The film, popularly known as "Marat/Sade" will be shown at the Farmville State Theater January 9 and 10.

Those who have seen a stage performance of Mr. Weiss's hypothetical account of the acting of a play about the assassination of Jean-Paul Marat by the inmates of the Clarenton insane asylum outside Paris in 1808 know that the "garb" of this experience is in the illusion it gives of actually watching a piece of strange play-acting by a gaggle of lunatics.

Included in the experience is the strong stimulation it gives the mind through its macabre statement and enactment of polemical argument — the excitement that comes from confrontation of the revolutionary Marat as the apostle of social improvement and cynical individualist, the Marquis de Sade.

These arguments . . . are thrashed out in the midst of a chorus of responsive lunatics whom we see and feel reacting to them pretty much as we feel normal people should, except that lunatics impress us with their treachery and instability.

They may be crazy people, but they are also terrifyingly correct in their maniacal shrieks against injustice and in their mockery of cant. The only thing is, it's mighty eerie to be so close to them.

Mr. Brook takes us right into the midst of this congress of rebellious and dangerous lunatics. He takes us right into the steam bathhouse of ghastly Clarenton, where this play, put on by the Marquis de Sade, is erratically performed . . .

And it is the proximity to the sleepwalking girl who plays Corday as she follows De Sade's directions in brandishing the knife with which she finally fixes Marat's wagon that makes us squirm a little more in our chairs . . .

Some details are more emphatic on film than on stage, some are less emphatic. The persistent pursuit of Charlotte by the aristocratic sex maniac seems to be toned down a little, though the Priapean aspect is still there. The Stygian nightmare of Marat is much more vividly portrayed, with clouds of steam filling the chamber, in which ghostly bats appear; and Marat does rise completely naked from the bath of this dream.

Characters are: Jean-Paul played by Ian Richardson, Marquis de Sade played by Patrick Magee, Charlotte Corday played by Glenda Jackson. The student body is urged to submit the names of any films that they would like to have shown. Fill in the following box and put it in Mr. Rouillard's mail box.

Student Suggests Reform In Handling Social Violations

I must be under the mistaken impression that the primary purpose of college is to provide an ACADEMIC education. However, several members of our student body were recently suspended for violation of the social regulation governing alcoholic beverages on campus. This is not a violation of our honor code nor any academic matter. Therefore, it should be treated as a social offense.

If our social activities should not take precedence over our studies, why then should punishment for a social violation supersede the need for an academic education? I think the conscientious concern over this matter expressed by members of the student body and faculty is well founded. This action clearly indicates a stress on social behavior. Indeed the violation must be punished, but any discipline for a social offense should be a limitation on social activities, not on academics! A reform in our method of handling social offenses is definitely needed. I would then propose that these girls should have been put on social probation, and would also propose that any future case involving drinking on campus be treated in this same manner. Thus the ACADEMIC life, which has not been violated, would be allowed to continue, and the SOCIAL life, which has been violated, would be the one that is restricted. In this way Longwood could fulfill its primary duty of providing an academic education and secondarily be able to regulate social behavior.

Sincerely,
Carolyn Cummins
South Cunningham 219

Dear Miss Hummer:

This letter is in regard to the article printed in issue number 8, 6 December, of THE ROTUNDA, headed "Students Discuss Weekend Disadvantages: Weigh the Advantages, Disadvantages." Specifically I refer to the comment of Judy Hall Parker, quoted, "The vast majority of the girls at Longwood have no purpose; they don't know they're here." I take great affront to this comment, for it is an error of the first caliber.

The student body of Longwood College, married or not, (and I point out, the vast majority of the students here are unmarried) would not be here were they not pursuing their purpose. Their purpose in itself is Longwood College, higher education, advancement of the self, development of the individual. College is not like high school — required attendance until sixteen years or so — it is an embarkation one makes of one's own free will. It is a dream to most high school graduates, a dream they are making come true.

Certainly there are students here who do not take their college life as seriously as they should, but to say they are without purpose is a remark made in ignorance without thought. Perhaps Mrs. Parker had no purpose here before her marriage, and found with her wedding vows that she realized her full potential as a student, but every other student at this institution realizes her purpose here when she first enters. She realizes it when she applies for admission.

I feel it necessary to stand up for the students here — all of whom are responsible, through their purposes, for carrying Longwood College on into the world, and for marking the success of higher education while on the campus.

Most sincerely,
Susan Woltz

Varsity Swim Team Scores Fourth In Six-Way Meet

Saturday, December 9, LC's Varsity Swim Team attended a six-way swim meet at Westhampton College. The participating schools in the tournament and the results of the competitive meet were as follows: William & Mary — first, Westhampton — second, Old Dominion — third, Longwood — fourth, and Madison — fifth. Although Longwood did not place in the top three, the girls had a good showing, and placed in several of the individual events. The medley relay, composed of Carol Umbdenstock, Stephanie DuRoss, Carol Sanders, and JoAnn May, placed third in the tournament. This event was especially exciting as Longwood held first place until the swimming of the free style. With keen competition and all teams driving full strength, LC's team broke through with a first place in the breast stroke with Stephanie DuRoss, and fifth in the diving event, also claimed by Stephanie.

There's been lots of excitement around the pool lately. The H2O Club and Corkettes have been busy as bees working on their stunts for the upcoming Water Show, held annually in mid-March. Several new Corkettes were selected during try-outs this fall. They are as follows: Sandy Allen, Francis Bain, Ann Bishop, Kathy Meter, Page Nance, Ann Sprint, Delight Swann, Ann Sybert, Carol Umbdenstock, and Kay Webb. Numbers are presently being assigned and H2O members are assisting Corkettes in their stunts.

Sire Spectates

The Volleyball intramurals and round robin tournament went into full swing this week. If you're not actually participating in the games, come and watch anyway. The tournament games are always fun and team spirit is high. Check the A.A. board for a tournament schedule.

Best of Luck to the Varsity Basketball team who will play at Bridgewater College tomorrow. Sock it to 'em, team!

With the holiday season coming up, this last week will be filled with two well-known items: 1. parties and 2. tests (notice the item that rates second — well, in popularity anyway!) It will be a relief to go home and get a little rest.

I can't wait to dig into the ham and turkey and all the other goodies that go along with the holidays, and I'm sure you all feel the same way. Just remember not to eat so much that you can't bend over to tie the laces in your tennis shoes because Class and Color Volleyball will be coming up soon after our return.

Here's hoping that you all really rack up a good score with Old Saint Nick. See you in 1968!!

Wesleyan Univ. Press Invites

Undergrads To Enter Contest

Wesleyan University Press is now inviting submissions of poems from undergraduates in American colleges and universities for inclusion in a new, semi-annual publication — to be launched in the spring of 1968 — entitled "ALKAHEST: American College Poetry." Submissions are solicited subject to the following conditions:

1. Poems must be original and not previously published except in local, campus publications.
2. The poet must be an enrolled undergraduate student in an institution of higher education in the United States.
3. The poet's name, institution, and address must appear on each page of material submitted.
4. Letters of recommendation supporting submissions will be ignored and submissions exceeding five poems will be under a marked disadvantage.
5. The publisher will pay, on publication, $3.00 for each poem accepted.
6. The editors cannot, unfortunately, provide evaluative or critical comments on rejected poems.
7. Submissions will not be returned unless accompanied by a self-addressed, stamped envelope.
8. Although reasonable care will be taken, the Publisher will not be responsible for lost manuscripts. Submissions for the Spring, 1968, issue will be accepted until February 1, 1968; for the Fall 1968 issue, until September 10. Address all submissions and correspondence to Wesleyan University Press, Middletown, Connecticut 06457.

Selection will be made by a committee of undergraduates composed of Paul Flavelly, University of Connecticut; Sandra Gary, Mount Holyoke College; Andrew Gaus, Wesleyan University; Kathleen Norris, Bennington College; James L. Price, Dartmouth College; Lawrence Raab, Middlebury College; and Michael Wolfe, Wesleyan University, chairman.

Longwood Bows To Old Dominion Drops Season Opener, 67-53

As the buzzer sounded to end LC's first Varsity Basketball game, our girls found themselves behind 67 to 53, in what proved to be a high scoring contest for both Old Dominion and Longwood.

The first quarter was hectic as the girls matched basket for basket. Then

O.D. slowly began to pull ahead and remained in this position throughout the last three quarters of the game.

Three of our players put a combined total of 41 points through the hoop, but the O.D. forwards sank even more. The O.D. offense seemed to get their passes in close to the basket and then go up for the shot against our guards who were playing the diamond zone defense throughout most of the game. In the fourth quarter the defense switched to the man-to-man strategy for a short time. The L.C. forwards had some difficulty in rebounding the shots they missed, but Lynne Coleman and Carolyn Thompson intercepted quite a few O.D. passes at the center line to help the situation.

After the game O.D. treated the Longwood team to dinner at a nearby restaurant, and soon our girls were on their way back to Farmville. Despite the loss the girls' spirits were cheery during the long bus ride home. The approaching holiday season showed its effect as Christmas carols headed the list of the usual singing.

Longwood will have another chance to play Old Dominion when they play (Continued on Page 4)

Gallup Poll Surveys Students;

Drug Use "Wildly Exaggerated"

Reports of mass student involvement with the illicit drugs marijuana and LSD are widely exaggerated, according to the Gallup Poll.

Only about six per cent of the nation's college students have ever tried marijuana and not more than one per cent have experimented with LSD, according to a survey of students in 426 colleges by the noted pollster.

The poll was taken by Dr. George Gallup's American Institute of Public Opinion for The Reader's Digest; results are published in the magazine's November issue, out October 26.

For all the outcry about drugs on campus, a majority — fifty-one per cent — of the students questioned said that they did not even know a single student who had tried marijuana or LSD. And they estimated with reasonable accuracy that only about four per cent of those on their own campus had tried drugs.

However, when asked how many of their fellow collegians across the nation used drugs, the students interviewed jumped their estimates to a very high 13 per cent. This higher guess for "outside" campuses could be a reflection of exaggerated news accounts about drug use on campus, the Digest suggests.

Projected to the nation's six million college students, the Gallup figures indicate some 300,000 drug users — a sharp contrast to the reported "millions." Moreover, the percentage applies only to those who have tried drugs. It is likely that a far smaller group are regular users.

Accompanying the poll is an article exploding some of the myths about "mind-expanding" drugs such as LSD. Author Dr. Donald Louria, an associate professor at Cornell University Medical College and president of the New York State Council on Drug Addiction, says there is no evidence to support claims that LSD increases creativity. More likely the opposite is true, he states.

He notes for example that in one study a group of accomplished pianists played under LSD's influence. Although each thought he played superbly, all reacted with distaste when the recording was played back after the LSD had worn off.

As to the claim made by Dr. Timothy Leary and others that LSD is an aphrodisiac, Dr. Louria says that it is "totally spurious."

"While an LSD hallucination may have highly erotic content," he writes, "the drug is, if anything, an anti-aphrodisiac."

Against this background, it is encouraging that the students questioned in the Gallup Poll were not only reluctant to try drugs themselves, but felt that those who were "on" marijuana or LSD were "lost, mixed up, sick." Far from being the "in" group, those who take drugs are seen by their fellows as victims rather than heroes.

Professors Attend Chicago Conference

On December 27, the annual meeting of the Modern Language Association will be held in Chicago. Dr. Herbert R. Blackwell, Dr. Rosemary Sprague, and Miss Gail Okawa will attend the conference from Longwood College.

At the conference papers on periods in language and literature will be read. After hearing the papers, delegates will have an opportunity to discuss ideas presented.

The conference is nationwide and professors interested in languages and literature from colleges all over the United States will attend.

In other news from the English department, Mr. Foster Gresham, department head, spoke to the English teachers of the faculties of the private school foundation on December 9 at Prince Edward Academy. His topic was "New Trends in Teaching English."

Home Ec Teacher Works On Committee For Emergency Plans

For the past three years, Mrs. Nell Griffin of the Home Economics department, has worked on the Governor's Committee on Emergency Resource Management Plan.

The purpose of the committee was to review products that are available in Virginia, housing, salary demands and needs in order to determine how such needs could be met and the economy of the state returned to normal as quickly as possible following a national emergency such as a nuclear attack.

The first step in the planning was to see what was available in Virginia, those materials that would not have to be brought in from other states. This led to the recognition of what we had in surplus to let another state have and what other states had that we would need. Transportation facilities were also involved. It was necessary to study the problem of moving products within the state and outside of the state. Another problem was food rationing. The committee recognized that during the last war there was uneven rationing. Therefore, the Governor's Committee worked on stabilizing food distribution. It was based on the day's minimum nutritional requirements. The discovery was tested both in committee and in stores with customers and clerks as administrators. The results were satisfactory.

Other problems the committee discussed and worked on concerned fallout shelters, how people will return to the work world, stabilizing rent, and means of housing refugees within community areas.

The findings of the Committee have been printed, tested, corrected, and are now ready for presentation in final form to Governor Godwin.

Mrs. Nell H. Griffin has been invited to be present Wednesday, December 13, in the Senate Chambers of the State Capitol for the formal presentation of the Emergency Resource Management Plan to the Governor.

Mrs. Griffin said that "one of the hardest things in working with the committee has become the slogan, 'We hope this work will not have to be used.' But in the event that it has to be used, it is comforting to know that Governor Godwin has a plan pointing toward the reestablishment of communities within the state."
